Three Capacity Weeks on Broadway at the Rivoli, Rialto and Broadway

Scheduled for one week at the Rivoli, this vivid, thrilling melodrama was so enthusiastically received that, after packing the house there it moved down to the Rialto and there repeated its success. Then another record-breaking week at the Broadway. "A Nick Carter story in a Tiffany setting" one paper called it. It's the most vital, engrossing, mystifying, tense and fascinating photoplay ever filmed. It's to the screen what "The Bat" is to the stage.

> "We are not going to tell you a thing about the story. It's too good to tamper with," says Harriette Underhill, in the New York Tribune.

We'll tell you, however, that it is Jack Boyle's greatest "Boston Blackie" story faultlessly acted by a cast of stars, wonderfully produced, with the greatest fight ever staged and filled with action from the first reel to the final fadeout.

"We want to stand right up on our hind legs and tell the world that "The Face in the Fog" is one of the finest crook pictures ever produced. We fail to recall a more dramatic series of scenes. We have never looked at more artistic night photography than that presented in the almost two reels of action in a dense fog."

"Till We Meet Again"

A girl is loved by a rich young aristocrat, yet her heart is touched by the selfless devotion of a crook who had been her only friend in an hour of greatest need.

The stress of her indecision is experienced by the audience whose sympathies are equally divided.

Suspense reaches the breaking point when the two men meet and the drama ends with one of the most gripping climaxes ever screened.

Not one photoplay in a hundred carries the thought, power, beauty and sincerity of "Till We Meet Again," already declared by exhibitors a marvellous audience picture.

Ethel

AT the flood tide of glorious womanhood, with her abundant talents in full flower, Ethel Clayton delivers the most spectacular hit of her brilliant career—

Book this sumptuous romantic drama, and BOOK IT NOW. Romance is getting the money because the whole teeming universe craves romance and is willing to pay to see it on the screen.

Here, in a vehicle with gorgeous scenes, bewilderingly lavish costumes, exquisitely beautiful love interest and an incredibly fascinating star, F. B. O. offers a de luxe box office winner with which other romantic productions simply don't compare.

"If"

Clayton

THE story, adapted from the famous novel, "The Three Cornered Kingdom," by DuVernet Rabell, and directed by Wesley Ruggles, is a peach and a pippin combined, to wit:

A prince—a girl—a gem—a whirl—a throne—a kiss—a dance—Oh bliss—a train—a dash—a plunge—then CRASH—sit tight—some fright—good night!

And a final rousing climax with Ethel Clayton in the arms of a stalwart Prince Charming, impersonated with true regal charm by Warner Baxter.

Imagine what a story to advertise!—Imagine what a story to exploit with F.B.O.'s special brand of exploitation and super-showmanship! A score of original ideas in the big press sheet—Posters rich in dignity and power—Everything the showman needs to whip "If I Were Queen" across to a bountiful clean-up.

Moving Picture World

That's more than a slogan.

It is a publishing achievement that means much to you if you are spending your advertising dollars in the expectation of receiving the fullest return possible.

Every issue of Moving Picture World is crammed and crowded with exhibitor names, items of newsy gossip concerning theaters big and little in every section of the country.

Several hundred individual names appear each week.

It stands to reason—

Exhibitors are reading the paper that is talking about THEM and their NEIGHBORS.

No argument about that!

Nor about this—

The first paper out of the wrapper—and often the only one—is the paper that is likely to contain an item about the exhibitor HIMSELF. And CERTAIN to contain some news about a nearby NEIGHBOR.

That's a solid, sound, two plus two, publishing fundamental, isn't it? And a basic advertising guide, isn't it?

So it sums up—

The paper that is FIRST out of the wrapper is the one that must be considered FIRST on the advertising schedule.

The week that you are not talking to the exhibitor in his own intimate trade paper is the week that THE OTHER FELLOW has the whole stage.

Think that week over!

Robert E. Welsh

"Buster Captures the Program-"

New York Times

"Once more the comedy captures a program. And it's Buster Keaton again, too. His latest reel of nonsense, 'My Wife's Relations,' appropriates first place for itself at the Rivoli this week.

"It's nothing but foolishness, or rather it's free-flying, honest-to-goodness foolishness without any theatrical hokum, insincere moralizing and sham elegance loaded on to it. And it's bright and original. So it's something to enjoy, something to throw your head back and laugh at.

"Buster Keaton himself, who can be earnest, anxious, angry and joyful without a flicker in the fixed seriousness of his expression, must have learned how to laugh when he saw himself."

Critics from Coast to Coast

A PICTURE THAT ENRICHES THE SCREEN

The New York Herald:

"In 'The Bond Boy' Richard Barthelmess again enriches the screen. One indelible impression that stands out is the scene showing young Joe Newbolt wrongly condemned to death for murder, watching the shadow of the rope on the gallows swinging through the moonlight on his cell wall like the pendulum of destiny. It is a superb natural effect and one which alone could justify any picture for existing. Henry King, the director, could rest on his laurels after controlling this scene."

The New York American:

"All the advantages of the screen are undeniably attained in 'The Bond Boy.' The picture has everything in its favor—Richard Barthelmess, discriminate direction, emotional appeal and an entire lack of bromide banality."

SCINTILLATING WITH DRAMATIC QUALITIES

The Los Angeles Herald:

"Teeming with human interest and scintillating with dramatic qualities, 'The Bond Boy' will win untold popularity for Barthelmess. An interesting story, the star's splendid portrayal makes it doubly attractive. The best bit of dramatic acting in screen history. It made them weep."

The Los Angeles Express:

"Barthelmess makes it memorable by his acting. Few actors could stand the test. The photography is inspired."

HUMAN, GRIPPING, COMPELLING DRAMA

The Brooklyn Citizen:

"Human and gripping—a compelling drama with tragedy, comedy, elemental emotions and chivalry, chasing each other across the silver sheet in delightful succession. The story is magnificent, but more striking still is the star's portrayal."

HE SCORES AGAIN IN FINEST PICTURE

The Cincinnati Times-Star:

"Richard Barthelmess scores again. One of the finest pictures ever filmed, with much of the rugged vigor of 'Tol'able David,' and the same quality of genuineness."

The Cincinnati Post:

"Barthelmess adds a new triumph to his lengthening list of fine starring vehicles."

All night he watched the shadow of the gallows noose swinging on the cell door—living through the long hours the horrors of the morrow.

Business Opportunities

There's a column in the classified pages of the daily press that has a tempting, inviting pull—through the magic of its heading: "Business Opportunities."

We find no such column in the film trade paper. But the headline above is not misleading. For we have our opportunities.

A few of them come to mind.

For example:

"Good Prints Guaranteed"

What a wonderful opportunity awaits the film distributing organization that can declare in its advertising and its sales talk:

"Every —— Company print you get is a good print!"

And then, after saying it, carry out the promise.

This seems a minor matter to the film man whose horizon is bounded by New York's Times Square or Chicago's Loop.

But there are thousands of small exhibitors who would arise to cheer the man or the company that would make good on that slogan—every time, and in every territory.

There are thousands of exhibitors who give strong consideration in their booking to this fact: That experience has shown them that in their particular territory such-and-such an exchange is most efficient and takes most pride in the condition of its prints.

There's no "way out" for the small-town exhibitor who has had to force a butchered print on his patrons. He suffers, he knows it, and he must face the music personally.

A mutilated print of a million dollar picture is worth thirty cents less than nothing.

Dun and Bradstreet

There are other opportunities. Here's one. For the company that will say to an exhibitor:

"Mr. So and So, you've been dealing with us for many years. You have been fair, honest and reliable in your dealings with us. We are proud to have you on our books and want you to stay there.

"Hereafter you will have a credit rating with us. No more C. O. D.'s, deposits, and other irritating insults. We are going to treat you as a human being and a business man. That's the way we want to be treated.

"Your credit rating at this minute is 'A-1.' It will stay at that mark just as long as you keep it there. Your rating—your reputation—is in your own hands."

That's an opportunity.

But it also entails the utilization of another opportunity: The development of branch managers who are that in every sense of the word. Men whose judgment is relied upon—and can be relied upon—as affects their territory and their customers.

But that is another story. For another day.

Part of the Show

And here's another opportunity:

For the distributor who announces: "We consider the posters and advertising accessories of all sorts an integral part of the customer's service we deliver when you buy our film. We don't believe that we should count on making an annual profit out of our accessories.

"Certified accountants have figured that it costs us a certain percentage to handle the accessories. We should be allowed a return to compensate for the great amount of money that is tied up in this material on our shelves. Hereafter our prices for all accessories will be the actual cost plus the certified expense figures. No profit.

"Accessories are intended to pull patrons to the show. That's as much our worry as it is yours. For our bargain is not completed until you are satified."

Opportunities?

They are all around us. And most of us go "all around the bush" to get away from them.

Then a wise man comes along. And grasps the opportunity.

Delivery Promised

Censor Advocate Says He'll "Deliver" Votes to Censorship Cause

First-page display newspaper advertising in the Massachusetts papers is being used by both the proponents and the opponents in their fight for and against the censorship referendum bill which comes before the people next month. An example of the sort of advertising used is found in one of the ads this week by the Committee of Massachusetts Citizens Against Censorship.

The text is as follows: "A Thunderous 'No' on Referendum No. 3, November 7, will be the emphatic answer of one and a half-million voters in resentment of the claim of B. Preston Clark that he 'will deliver them' for Censorship and One Man Dictation of what they see and read. A Thunderous 'No' will be the emphatic answer of the other two and a half-million people who feel as they do. The advestisement of B. Preston Clark claims 'crated delivery' of Religious Societies, Civic Organizations, Educators, Business Organizations, etc.

"Preposterous! Freedom of thought and action are NOT YET in the hands of B. Preston Clark for delivery. Today, not even political bosses claim to 'deliver' votes. Ninety-two per cent of the daily and weekly press of Massachusetts are fighting censorship. They can't all be wrong. The leaders of the fight against One Man Political Control, Mr. Clark, are The People—undelivered."

Maberry Resigns

Goldwyn Appoints Hickey and Mendelssohn District Managers

Goldwyn announces the resignation of Cecil E. Maberry, effective October 28, and the appointment of George A. Hickey and Felix Mendelssohn as district managers.

Mr. Hickey, formerly manager of the branch exchange in Buffalo, has been appointed district manager with supervision over the Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneapolis exchanges.

Felix Mendelssohn, formerly manager of the Philadelphia exchange, had been made district manager supervising the territory embraced in the Philadelphia, Washington and Pittsburgh exchanges.

Lasky Coming

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left Hollywood Monday for New York where he will confer with Adolph Zukor and other executives of the company on the Paramount production schedule for the coming Winter.

Would Censor Public Enterprises

The Rev. John K. Gault, pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Cambridge, did not mince matters in a sermon preached Sunday to his congregation. He let the cat out of the bag, and pointed out very conclusively just what it is that the proponents of the censorship bill are after.

Said he: "Yes, let us have a Board of Censorship, so as to make the motion picture industry what it ought to be; to make our newspapers what they ought to be; and to make our libraries, art institutions and museums what they ought to be. When we begin a good work, to be consistent, we must carry it through. Let us censor every enterprise that is designed to serve the public."

Probably the Rev. Gault would insist upon having a long gown placed on the Venus de Milo.

Deal Not Closed Yet

Spyros Skouras Declares Stories Regarding Consolidation Are Premature

Aside from a statement sent out from the Famous Players-Lasky New York office that the deal for the consolidation of the Missouri and New Grand Central Theatres, owned respectively by the Famous Players Missouri Corporation and Skouras Brothers Enterprises had virtually been consummated, there has been nothing officially given out on the matter.

Spyros Skouras, head of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, has remained silent, declining to make a statement other than that the matter was still hanging fire and newspaper stories about the plans of the consolidation were premature.

But if the principals to the deal have been somewhat backward in talking, other tongues have not been so inclined, and there is plenty of gossip these days in film circles.

One report had it that Skouras would also take over the Fox Liberty. But there isn't a chance for that.

Gossip also has Skouras taking over the Kings. The theatre is the property of the Famous Players Missouri Corporation and has been under lease to the Loew Circuit. It is possible that if Skouras assumes the management of the Missouri Theatre he will also take over the Kings.

Changes Made

Bonns Succeeds Pritchard as Exploitation Manager

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces the establishment of a Sales Promotion Department with R. E. Pritchard, formerly exploitation manager, in charge.

Edward Bonns, who has been publicity director for Warner Brothers, succeeds Mr. Pritchard as exploitation manager. The change became effective on October 23.

This completes the Goldwyn promotion organization, with Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity; R. E. Pritchard, in his new position, and Edward Bonns, manager of exploitation.

M. P. T. O. of Missouri in Big Convention

Prominent Persons Discuss Topics of Interest to Industry

THE third annual convention of the M. P. T. O. of Missouri was held at the Elms Hotel at Excelsior Springs, Mo., Wednesday and Thursday, October 18 and 19. The convention was a success in every way, and those who attended had the opportunity of hearing more nationally known men than at any previous convention ever held in this mid-Western state.

Among those present were: Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the public service department of the national organization; A. J. Moeller, general manager of the national association; Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri; Mayor Frank H. Cromwell, of Kansas City; Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, Dr. James Fifield and Father William J. Dalton, members of the Kansas City clergy; Mrs. Henry N. Ess, chairman of the Womens Clubs of Kansas City; Mayor Hugh Wilhite, of Excelsior Springs, and several visiting exhibitors from various parts of the country.

Charles T. Sears, of the Sears and Jones circuit, amid much applause, was re-elected president of the Missouri organization, and Lawrence E. Goldman, of Kansas City, was also re-elected to the position of secretary. Other officers elected for the coming year are: Col. C. B. Philly, of St. Joseph, first vice-president; T. C. Goodnight, of Warrensburg, second vice-president; J. R. Pratt, of Fulton, third vice-president, and Art Josephson, of Kansas City, treasurer. Harry Till, of Braymer, was appointed sergeant-at-arms by President Sears.

The executive board, appointed by the president and approved by members at the convention, consists of J. I. Wright, Bevier; J. Earl Hayes, Moberly; J. E. Courtier, Moberly; Thomas Clark, Marysville; Dave Harding, Kansas City; C. W. Hunt, Higginsville; S. E. Wilhoit, Springfield; Jack Roth, Kansas City; Harry Pruitt, Centralia; Robert Stemple, St. Charles; Ben Levy, Joplin, and C. H. Fayant, Lebanon.

Upon recommendation of the members of the organization, President Cohen appointed Jack Truitt, of Sedalia, to the executive board of the national organization.

Joseph Mogler, of St. Louis, asked the opinion of the assembly as to the advisability of dividing the Missouri organization into an eastern and a western section. It is believed the national organization will grant a charter for an eastern division, as there were no objections voiced by the western exhibitors.

One of the most important resolutions adopted was that asking the newspapers of the state to refuse any motion picture advertising that is of a suggestive or salacious nature. The exhibitors also pledged their support to the Joint Board of Arbitration. They also petitioned the exchanges to refuse more than thirty days' protection on any picture, because of practices which have been observed quite frequently in other sections of the country.

Wednesday's Session

Wednesday's meeting was not called to order as early as planned, because of the late arrival of Senator James A. Reed, who talked to a crowd of about four hundred town people and exhibitors. He compared a newspaper with the screen, condemned censorship, and said that the screen was absolutely on the same level in the dissemination of knowledge as are the daily papers of the country.

At three-thirty o'clock the afternoon session was called to order by the president. Mayor Hugh Wilhite, of Excelsior Springs, cordially welcomed the exhibitors to his city and then introduced Dr. J. J. Gaines, president of the Excelsior Springs Commercial Club. Dr. Gaines spoke of the motion pictures from the layman's point of view. He said the motion picture industry is one of the most colossal institutions in the country. As educators, the movies are outclassing the whole curricula of American colleges, he believed. The doctor also spoke against censorship of pictures.

President Sears gave a report of the activities of the organization during the past year. Parts of his speech were:

"Will Hays is not the Landis of the movies, because Landis is employed by the men who control not only the baseball players themselves, but the baseball parks where the exhibitions are given. On the other hand, Mr. Hays is employed by only a part of the producers and distributors, representing less than 50 per cent. of the producing and distributing companies, while you, the exhibitors, represent that great medium which permits the showing of productions without which the producing and distributing division of the industry cannot exist.

"Through the organization, the efforts of some to create a drastic censorship over the screen of Missouri was defeated. But upon accomplishing the defeat of these movements, instead of further antagonizing the censorship advocates, we have secured their good will by a better understanding between ourselves and those who have advocated censorship.

"An arbitration board has been established. Today every exhibitor is assured of a fair hearing of his complaint against any exchange and is protected against any unfair demands against him.

"Six million, seven hundred thousand dollars have been saved for the theatre owners of the United States through the repeal of the five per cent film rental tax. And here, permit me to state, that our work, though of the greatest value, would have been without result had it not been for the wonderful leadership and wisdom of a man who is with us today, Sydney S. Cohen."

A. J. Moeller, manager of the national organization, gave a report on the music tax situation. An investigation carried on by the M. P. Y. O. A. disclosed the fact that eighty-five per cent of all music used in theatres, dance halls, cabarets and other public places is non-taxable.

Mr. Moeller advised exhibitors to use their programs and screens to let their patrons know about the music tax and why certain musical numbers are not played by the orchestra.

M. Van Praag, president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, offered the cooperation of his organization and reported that so far as he knew only two exhibitors had paid the music tax and that no others would pay.

Al Pramer, president of the M. P. T. O. of Nebraska, reported that no one in his state had paid the tax and urged that all the exhibitors use the non-taxable music so the industry would soon be free of the music tax.

Ray C. Smallwood leaves New York for Hollywood Saturday, Oct. 21, accompanied by George A. McGuire, his assistant, and Thomas Bracken who will act as business manager of Pyramid's west coast studios. Mr. Smallwood will undertake the making of two productions for Pyramid, namely "Tatiana," written by H. S. Sheldon, and "The Deerslayer," one of James Fenimore Cooper's works. Mr. Smallwood will personally direct "Tatiana" and will supervise the picturization of "The Deerslayer."

Missouri Meeting

fore its consolidation with the state association, explained his presence at the convention by stating that it was his way of showing his appreciation of the national officers. He extended a cordial invitation to the exhibitors present to attend the national convention to be held in Chicago next year.

A few other exhibitors were heard, all urging better co-operation and harmony in the organization, and then the President announced the following committees:

Resolutions: Jack Roth, Kansas City; H. J. Nash, St. Louis; T. C. Goodnight, Warrensburg; D. J. Michael, Kirksville, and H. T. Till, Bramer. Finance: I. W. Rodgers, Poplar Bluff; Joe Mogler, St. Louis; A. M. Eisner, Kansas City; C. W. Hunt, Higginsville, and J. C. Courtier, Gallatin.

Thursday the meeting was called shortly after ten o'clock in order to hear National President Sydney S. Cohen. He declared that one of the outstanding purposes of the organization was to preserve inviolate, for the use of the American people, this great medium of expression, the screen of the motion picture theatres, and prevent the trustification of the business by elements out of sympathy with the ideals and principles of the American government.

"The real trouble with our organization," Mr. Cohen declared, "is that we have grown too fast in too short a time. The only way to solve our problems effectively is through strong organization. I am gratified very much by the advances made by the Missouri organization. Your organization is one of the outstanding state divisions of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and I want to congratulate the Missouri theatre owners on the fine condition of their organization as well as the many elements of work performed under their direction in protection of the investments of the exhibitors against hostile forces inside and outside the industry."

Mr. Cohen said he believes that some of the large theatres in the country are in league with the producers in trying to close the smaller theatres by means of a long time protection.

"I have found," continued President Cohen, "that the small exhibitor is really the biggest factor in the organization. They stand for stronger organization and harmony than the big exhibitor in a large town."

He also told of the new arrangements that had been made with the distributors of Movie Chats whereby the national association would be allowed a percentage of the gross receipts obtained from this single reel and whereby the state organizations would receive the balance over the quota.

Mr. Cohen spoke of practices of distributing companies which were unfair to the exhibitors and told of plans by which the national organization, through the state organizations, hoped to bring them to an end.

In speaking of the practices which seemed to be the policy of some of the film companies, Mr. Cohen said that he thought the companies had a right to negotiate with every theatre manager in the city and accept the best price offered, but he thought that when an exchange once got an exhibitor's signature on a contract all negotiations with other competing exhibitors should come to an end until the expiration of the contract.

Explaining his failure to discuss the Will Hays situation, Mr. Cohen declared that he had made an agreement with Mr. Hays that nothing about their negotiations was to be made public until they were finished. There are still several points of difference in the uniform contract upon which Mr. Hays and Mr. Cohen cannot agree.

After a rising vote of thanks, appreciation and confidence to Mr. Cohen, President Sears announced that 100 per cent of the exhibitors present had signed a contract for Movie Chats and that great efforts would be put forth in having every theatre in the state to run Movie Chats every week.

The other speaker of the day was Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, of the Linwood Boulevard Christian Church of Kansas City. He spoke of the moving picture industry as being one of the most instructive, broadening and educational businesses in which man could engage.

"The American public," he declared, "is beginning to understand that recreation has a large part in the lives of the people and that motion pictures are one of the best sources of clean recreation.

"Churches are beginning to realize the importance of the motion picture. The churches and the theatre owners should work together for harmony." He went on to say that: "The dangers of censorship are greater than the exercise of censorship." In closing, Dr. Jenkins declared the value of co-operation between the church and exhibitor.

At the banquet given for the exhibtors, Wednesday night, Mr. O'Toole acted as toastmaster. The speakers of the evening were Mr. Cohen, who mentioned, among various other things, the fine spirit of harmony between the exchange managers of Kansas City and the exhibitors of the territory; Mayor Cromwell, of Kansas City; Mrs. Ess, who said the moving pictures were one of the greatest factors in the formation of character and uplift; Dr. Fifield; Father Dalton, for fifty years a priest in Kansas City, told that he was a regular patron of the movies and that they were a wonderful opportunity presented to the youth of today; I. W. Rodgers, who told of his experiences as an exhibitor, being one of the oldest men, in years of service, in the industry, having started in 1896; and Harry Graham, president of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade.

The roster of those attending the convention will be found in the Kansas City news of the Regional News and Gossip Department, this issue.

M. P. T. O. of Arkansas Holds Convention

A VERY successful convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas was held at the Hotel Marion, Little Rock, Ark. Sidney Nutt, of Hot Springs, presided as chairman. Matters of great interest to the theatre owners were discussed and acted upon. C. A. Lick, of Ft. Little Rock was selected as the place for holding the next convention in April, 1923.

The newly elected officers are: President, W. E. Collins, of Jonesboro; vice president, H. D. Whorton, of Warren; secretary, O. C. Hauber, of Pine Bluff.

Legislative Committee: Sidney Nutt, of Hot Springs; T. W. Sharp and O. C. Hauber.

Board of Directors: William A. May, Little Rock; W. L. Landers, Batesville; D. E. Fenton, Harrison; E. C. Robinson, Fayetteville; S. H. Butler, Russellville; J. A. Collins, Paragould; F. B. Smith, Stuggart, and G. E. Haven, Forrest City.

Majority of Neighborhood Houses in Favor of the Short Feature

ANSWERS from exhibitors to the editorial, "Write Us a Letter," which appeared in Moving Picture World October 14, concerning the length that a feature should be, are beginning to come in rapidly. Most of them, so far, have expressed the opinion that neighborhood houses, which form a large percentage of the total of the moving picture theatres throughout the country, haven't sufficient leeway in the matter of time to show "long features."

It seems to be the consensus of opinion that as far as the smaller houses are concerned, five or six reels is as long as a feature should run. These opinions have come from as far West as California, from Texas in the South, and from Pennsylvania. One exhibitor, while holding to the opinion of most of his compatriots, that a feature of more than five reels is too long for many houses, says that nevertheless he, himself, has never found it necessary to cut a good picture to fit a schedule. "In combination houses," he says, "I presume that a picture over five reels is a problem," but he goes on to say there are "many straight picture houses that would be glad to have a chance at them."

Following are some of the letters:

SMOOT AMUSEMENT COMPANY
Camden Lincoln
Hippodrome Auditorium
Smoot Theatre Building
Parkersburg, West Virginia
October 12, 1922.

Editor, Moving Picture World:

Your editorial on the proper length of features (your issue of October 14), is one that is certainly a live subject.

According to my viewpoint, an hour and one-half show is sufficient entertainment for 95 per cent. of our patrons. To give them more than this has the same effect as over-eating. You eat so much at times that you don't feel like it again for some time to come, and performances lasting for more than one hour and one-half has a tendency to have the same effect upon the patrons.

In my opinion, features sold to the regular exhibitor should not exceed more than one hour and ten minutes in length. A feature of this length permits a news reel, a comedy, etc., which are necessary on any well balanced program.

There are very few stories which really require more than six reels. There are, of course, some exceptions to this, but they are few and far between.

Wishing you continued success, and with kind regards, I am,

Very truly yours,
F. C. SMOOT.

THE HIPPODROME THEATRE
Home of Paramount Pictures
Fort Worth, Texas
October 11, 1922.

Editor, Moving Picture World:

In reference to the length of the photoplay of today.

Have been an exhibitor since 1906 and have yet to find it necessary to cut a good picture to fit a schedule.

In combination houses I presume that a picture over five reels long is a problem and it is too bad that they are forced to pay for and run pictures over that length; it is also equally as bad for the producers to force a long picture into a limited time schedule house, especially when there are so many straight picture houses that would be glad to have a chance at them.

An exhibitor that is running a straight picture house that will take a good picture and cut or speed it to fit a schedule uses about as much sense as a grocerman would show in trying to put a pound of sugar in a half pound sack; he might cut a hole in the sack and put one over on the customer, but you can't make him like it and that customer is going to feel that there is something wrong some how.

The director should not be limited, if we wish to progress.

Very truly yours,
H. J. GRUED,
Manager.

NEW PIEDMONT THEATRE
C. C. Griffin, Manager
Piedmont at Linda Avenue
Oakland, Cal.

Editor, Moving Picture World:

Answering your editorial in the issue of October 14 regarding length of features, I wish to speak a word for the neighborhood theatre that opens at seven o'clock each evening and closes at eleven; running two complete shows in four hours, or two hours to the show. This class of theatre represents, I should say probably, from forty to fifty per cent. of all the theatres in the country.

You can readily see that it is impossible to present a complete show properly, including, possibly, a singer and organ recital, a two-reel comedy, a news, a cartoon or novelty reel of some sort, such as is the custom in first-run theatres.

In my opinion no feature should be longer than six reels. I have seen many eight-reel features that could have been presented in six and been more effective and told the story completely, and yet these extra two reels crowded the two-reel comedy off the program. In neighborhood theatres comedy relief is absolutely essential. It is very often necessary to put over these long features by running the picture at the rate of nine or ten minutes to the reel, in which case the public complains that the sub-titles are being run so fast that they cannot read them. Undoubtedly, a large amount of patronage is lost through this operation if carried on to any extent.

I, for one, am not in favor of long features and I hope something can be done to curb the tendency to lengthen out the shows.

Very truly yours.
C. C. GRIFFIN,
Manager.

Nazareth, Pa.,

Editor, Moving Picture World:

I read the editorial by Robert E. Welsh entitled, "Write Us a Letter." I was an exhibitor and projectionist in a town of about forty-five hundred. The following is what I have noticed and heard about the feature picture:

Take some of the twelve-reel features that were shown in the last year or two. They were good features, but this is one thing I noticed about them all, when they were about three-quarters through the crowd became restless, or in other words seemed to lose interest in the picture. Maybe they were having their seventh inning stretch, as in baseball. What I heard was: "Too long a picture, too drawn out" and various other remarks in that strain. I personally think that a good, fast five-reel feature is the exhibitors best bet.

Take the producers argument that the exhibitor will not take a feature with a big price attached to it unless it has a big footage in film. It seems to me as if there is something the matter with the exhibitor who thinks that a feature must have a large footage to justify a high rental. It isn't how many feet of film there is in the feature, but what there is picturized. A mighty good feature could be made in four reels, while another may take eight reels. I do condemn the practice of the producer making a feature with a lot of footage to get a high rental. I know from experience that some features with extra footage and also extra rental did not go as good as a short feature at a lower rental.

Take the projectionist's viewpoint: Friend Boss comes up and tells you that you have twelve reels today. Two hours to run it. Yesterday you had nine reels. What does it mean? Today the projectionist will have to spoil the show by overspeeding the projection of the picture. This overspeeding of the projectors means that the eyes of the audience will suffer, the film will be damaged, the projectors will wear out quicker and other difficulties along with the overspeeding of projectors.

To sum up my view of the long feature vs. the short feature is, that a show lasting over two hours is too long. It is impossible to project perfectly eleven or twelve reels of film in two hours and making a longer show, lasting two hours and a half, is not desirable for many reasons. The audience is rarely ever satisfied with just a feature, but always wants a short subject of some kind.

Yours very truly.
CARLISLE A. ANGLEMIRE,
Projectionist.

Editor, Moving Picture World:

In speaking of the proper length for a feature, I speak from my own special viewpoint, as I see it here at my own theatre, the "Garfield," in a neighborhood district of Chicago.

Our theatre runs only in the evenings during the week and a matinee on Saturday and Sunday. Seating capacity is 693 and admission prices are 17 cents except on more expensive productions, on which the price is 22 cents.

Our policy is to give an eight-reel show, either a six-reel feature with a two-reel comedy or a five-reel feature with a two-reel comedy and a news weekly. We run three shows a night with an eight-reel program—6.45, 8.15 and 9.45 p. m. Now most exhibitors know that the peak hour of the business is from 7.45 p. m. to 8.45 p. m. and if you are doing a holdout business with a 700-seat house the best you can average is about 1,100 people on an evening, because

The joint convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska and Iowa has been postponed again from October 23 and 24 to November 1 and 2.

Will Build Theatre

Famous Players to Spend $3,000,000 on Big Structure

Moving Picture World has learned that Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will erect a 16-story building and theatre at 1485-1491 Broadway, the site now occupied by the Putnam Building, which came in the possession of the motion picture corporation several years ago. Plans for the new theatre, which will involve a construction cost of $3,000,000, have been completed and are now being inspected by the building authorities of the City of New York. Just when work will start on the new theatre and building, which will be 200 by 207, has not been decided upon.

Want Sunday Movies

Sunday picture shows in Alliance, Ohio, may be permitted if the council acts favorably on a petition which it is now considering. Recently Samuel Bullock, of Cleveland, organizer of the motion picture exhibitors of the State, appeared before the Alliance Council and spoke on the subject of Sunday movies.

Councilman Miller is chairman of the committee which the council has appointed to consider the matter.

Buys Home Site

The fine old residential property known as "The Outpost," the original Hollywood home, is now owned by Jesse L. Lasky. At an announced price of $160,000, the twelve acres of land on Franklin Avenue which two hundred years ago were selected by Chief Cahuenga as a permanent site for the tepees of his tribe passed into the hands of the Famous Players-Lasky first vice-president on October 11.

Bessie Arrives

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is now the proud father of Bessie Lasky, weight seven pounds and four ounces, born Wednesday night, October 11, at the Good Samaritan Hospital, Los Angeles.

Mr. and Mrs. Lasky have two other children, Jesse L. Lasky, Jr., aged 12, and William Raymond Lasky, aged 2. The daughter is named after her mother.

All May Close

Every moving picture house and theatre in Belgium will close for an indefinite period on April 1, 1923, unless the demands of the owners, musicians and others connected with the industry for lower taxes are not met by the government before March 31. Because of the high taxes, all the moving picture houses and theatres were closed on September 12, last, as a protest.

Swedes Like Comedy

They Are More Popular in Sweden Than Other Kinds

The majority of the American films imported into Sweden are comedies, according to Consul Krogh, Malmo, in a recent report to Washington, D. C., on film conditions in Sweden. Good comedy is highly appreciated, and American films of this nature seem to be preferred to those of any other country. Tragedies are second in popularity.

Practically all of the films come through agencies in Stockholm, and most of the imports are handled by the Aktiebolaget Svensk Filmindustri, Nos. 7 and 19, Kungsgatan, Stockholm.

Spanish as She Should Not Be Wrote

Moving picture men interested in the South American market could, it is said, benefit by the experiences of American manufacturers whose manhandling of the Spanish language is causing all sorts of trouble, according to reports received in Government circles in Washington, D. C. Much of the advertising intended for Latin America is couched in such poor Spanish that Secretary of Commerce Hoover has appointed a committee of advertising men to advise manufacturers regarding their advertising matter.

Copies of numerous advertisements have been received in Washington as exhibits of the way many manufacturers treat their foreign advertising; many are merely incorrect in grammar, but some are nothing short of ludicrous and cannot but have a bad effect upon American goods in general wherever they appear.

Neighborhood Houses Favor Short Features

at 6.45 you have about 100 people and at 9.45 the house is half empty.

Now when we have an eight-reel feature (and we have one every other week), we are forced to put on a one-reel comedy, give a nine-reel show, and our first show is not over till near 8.30 p. m. (and I may add, one-reel comedies, that is good ones, are scarce). Instead of letting in, the line waiting to get in, at 8.15 p. m., they have to stand 15 minutes longer and wait till 8.30 p. m. Some go by between 8.15 and 8.30. When they see the line that should have been off the sidewalk at 8.15, the consequences are that we are losing revenue because of the length of the feature.

With this nine-reel show, our last show, which should start at 9.45 p. m., starts at 10.10 p. m., 25 minutes later than our running schedule, and our last show is over at 11.45 p. m., which is too late for the workingman to be going home who has to get up at 5.30 a. m. the next morning to go to work. It discourages the working class from attending the last show.

In my own special case I prefer six-reel features. Those theatres having a large seating capacity can handle the "peak" crowd and I would imagine that the length of the feature does not make such a difference, as it does with the man in a small theatre.

Yours truly,
CHARLES H. RYAN,
Manager, Garfield Theatre.

"The Raven Girl" Speaks of Picture Making in India

DOROTHY K. VAN RAVEN, the only American girl who has been starred in pictures produced in India, is back in New York after four years in India. Back in that country she is known as "The Raven Girl," particularly for her appearance in "Shakuntala." It was to take part in this picture that she accepted the offer of one of the native directors four years ago.

"Shakuntala" will probably never be seen in America. It relates a favorite legend of the Indians, the legend of the girl who is mothered and brought up by a peacock, the sacred bird in India. Neither the story nor the performance is up to popular American standards, Miss Van Raven says.

"They have so much to learn about make-up, and acting before the camera that at present they have little to offer here," she explained. "When I first began to work with them, their idea of an artistic make-up was a bath in flour and water. They wanted to be covered with a thick white paste. Rouge was more or less of a sin. But exaggerated eyebrows—naturally they have beautiful eyes and eyebrows—were the vogue. They move quickly, too quickly so that the result on the screen is jerky.

"India is full of wonderful possibilities for pictures. An American producer, provided he could gain access to representative homes and personalities, could make one of the most attractive pictures we have ever seen. Indian architecture is graceful in the extreme. Their costumes are beautiful and their use of color is exquisite.

"The pictures which have been made in America, showing life in India have been so inaccurate that to anyone acquainted with the country, they are almost absurd. Recently one of the well-known American stars was seen in a picture in Bombay. There were some striking errors in the matter of costumes and customs. For instance, a Memsahib, or lady-of-the-house never, under any conditions answers her own door, unles she is of the very poorest classes. Such mistakes seem insignificant here but are widely noticed in India. That is why a physical acquaintance with the country and its people would enable an American producer to turn out something entirely new and interesting.

"The picture theatres in India are attractive and comfortable. Their greatest pride is their cooling systems and they are remarkably successful in these. Everything, including gardens or 'compounds' where refreshing drinks are served, is provided for keeping the patrons comfortable in hot weather."

Capt. Van Raven, the star's husband, well-known as a cameraman, is bringing back about forty reels of travel and scenic films. He is expected to land in America soon. His pictures include many sights of India never before photographed. His travels in the state of Hyderabad included a visit to the Ellora caves which he considers one of the most interesting of his accomplishments.

"The Raven Girl" is not planning to make more pictures in India. Her entire interest at present is this country and particularly in motion picture production. Her plans will be announced later.—Mary Kelly.

Calls Convention

Bruce Johnson Calls Meeting of First National Executives in England

American "pep" was fused with British tenacity when Bruce Johnson, manager of First National's foreign department, reached London on the first lap of his European tour, according to advices received at the New York offices of First National.

Calls Convention

The first thing Mr. Johnson did was to call a convention of exchange managers and salesmen connected with all of First National's British offices. Ralph J. Pugh, managing director of First National's English Exchanges, presided. Mr. Johnson made a talk in which he outlined First National's plans for the Fall and Winter, and then Mr. Pugh spoke on First National Attractions as the English see them.

At the conclusion of the convention, Mr. Pugh sent a cable message to the First National New York offices, extending the greetings of the British salesmen to the executives and salesmen in America and assuring them "of their determination to uphold the First National banner and to achieve a record for business which will be second to none."

Must Pay Straight Import Rate

The fact that moving pictures made abroad by an American producer are photographed entirely upon American film taken from this country for the purpose, will not enable the producer thereof to take advantage of that provision of Paragraph 1453 of the new tariff law providing for a duty of one cent per linear foot upon photographic films or negatives taken from the United States and exposed in a foreign country by an American producer of motion pictures operating temporarily abroad in the course of production of a picture of which 60 per cent. or more is made in the United States, according to reports from Government offices at Washington, D. C.

Unless 60 per cent. or more of the film is actually made in this country the film will bear the rate provided for straight imports. If brought into the country undeveloped the rate of duty will be two cents per linear foot, and if exposed and developed, three cents per linear foot.

Organizing Company

Plans Made to Operate Entirely in New England

Holman Day, author, journalist, lumberjack and moving picture director, is one of the prime movers in a plan for an active motion picture producing company which will operate entirely in New England and chiefly in the vicinity of Boston. Initial steps towards the organization of this company were taken during the past week at a dniner, at the Boston City Club, at which Mr. Day laid his plans before a group of New England business men.

If the projected plans materialize, the first steps toward organizing the new corporation will take place within the next few days. Mr. Day already is at the head of Shawmut Pictures, a corporation recently organized under the Massachusetts law, and it is anticipated that this corporation will dissolve in favor of the larger group, to be known as "Superior Pictures."

It is understood that there are available for the new corporation not only Mr. Day, who has a half-dozen scripts in preparation for immediate work, but, as distributing agent, George W. Smiley, formerly manager of the Pathe Company's New England branch, and Percy Carver, now general manager of Cosmopolitan Productions.

Tacoma Exhibitor Is Robbed of $1,600 at Point of Gun

While 1,000 film fans were watching the thrilling climax of a picture during the last show of the evening, just behind a thin partition two well dressed young men, held up, bound, gagged and robbed Ralph Winsor, manager of the Colonial Theatre, 918 Broadway, Tacoma, Wash., in his office Sunday night. He was first forced to open the safe, at the point of two revolvers, then bound and gagged. The speed and thoroughness with which the men worked, points to a plan carefully worked out to the minutest detail.

Robert Lander, doorman, does not remember seeing the pair enter, but police are of the opinion that they entered the auditorium, saw the show, then entered the manager's office through a door on the balcony. Lander saw them leave by the balcony exit, but thought nothing of it, until summoned by the buzzer from the manager's office. Winsor toppled himself from his chair, rolled on the floor and sounded the buzzer with his nose.

The bandits obtained $1,650, and scornfully left the fifty dollars on the table. "That's chicken feed, keep it!" one of them remarked. The loss was fully covered by insurance. At the hour of posting, the correspondent has learned that one arrest has been made, and another is expected to follow within twenty-four hours.

William Abbott, who operates the Dream Theatre, Sedro Woolley, Wash., was in Seattle attending to bookings and other business recently. In addition to his picture interests, Mr. Abbott has the Chevrolet agency for Snohomish county, and is interested in several garages as well.

Vic Gauntlett, after acting as house manager for the local Blue Mouse, during the summer months, has again taken up his duties as publicity man for the entire circuit. E. J. O'Keefe, manager of the newest Blue Mouse, in Astoria, will direct the Seattle house, and Arthur Hile, formerly manager of the Butte Ansonia, will occupy the glass top desk in Astoria.

William Cutts, one of the best-known exhibitors in the country, has been in Seattle for a few days. Mr. Cutts was recently appointed Eastern manager of all Universal theatres. A conference of managers was called shortly after his arrival, at which Edwin Armstrong, Western district manager, up from California, attended. John M. MacMeekan, Portland manager, was also present.

Fred Walton, of the Bellingham Theatres Company, spent some time on Film Row recently.

R. C. Czerney, owner of the Kent Theatre, Kent, Wash., is a firm believer in publicity as a drawing card. He is a friend of all the young folks in Kent, and fans have learned to look for his latest exploitation stunt, which keeps them coming. He is running five changes a week, and was on Film Row this week arranging bookings.

F. E. Wesp, of the Rialto Theatre, Wenatchee, Wash., told the correspondent that he is installing a new pressure heating and ventilating system in his house. He called at several exchanges along the Row.

"The Sign of the Rose" opened to remarkable business at the Spokane Auditorium, says Charles W. York, manager.

"Remembrance" was selected as the opening attraction at Mack J. Davis' new Mack Theatre in Port Angeles, October 15.

Women Exhibitors Among Those at Michigan Meeting

Miss Cleo Whitehead, of Eaton Rapids, and Miss Hemington, of Saginaw, were two women exhibitors at the recent M. P. T. O. convention at Flint. R. Kleever and Joe Coscoe were jokingly referred to at the convention as the Mutt and Jeff of the M. P. T. O. A. of Michigan.

Jake Schreiber, of the Blackstone Theatre, Detroit, came directly to the convention at Flint, from his hunting trip in Wyoming. Arrived in hunting togs and everythin', but finally changed and found the banquet room.

Claude E. Cady, retiring president of the M. P. T. O. A. of Michigan was presented with a very handsome gold watch, by the Board of Directors, for the very capable work he has done during his tenure of office. Blair McElroy did the honors. The gift was a personal one from board members and close friends.

Charles Garfield, of Flint, was presented with a dandy black leather traveling bag, by the members of the association.

Larry Hayes, manager of the Dawn Theatre at Hillsdale, put on a special song and dance for the boys at Flint, during the convention, which was accompanied by gestures and everything. It was a big hit.

Phil Gleichman, of the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, has raised his prices back to 60 cents at night for main floor seats and says he has had no complaints.

Eddie Kirchner, of the Family Theatre, Detroit, says that "A Ladies' Man," featuring Bull Montana, proved a riot when shown at his house recently.

Here Truly Is a Record!

Somerset, Kentucky.

Editor, Regional News and Gossip:

On January 25, 1923, I will be 74 years of age, and I have been manager of the Gem Theatre since October, 1900, a period of 22 years without intermission, and engaged in no other business. Four years prior to taking the management of the Gem, and before it was erected, I exhibited in the Court House the first motion picture ever shown in any town in all of Southeastern Kentucky—which was in October, 1896—a one-reel film of about a dozen short subjects, through a small Edison machine, the film falling into a market basket under the table on which the machine (scarcely larger than a telegraph instrument) was screwed, and years before a "takeup" or "rewind" was thought of.

Ever since the first motion picture exchange was established in Cincinnati, I have shown pictures in the Gem continuously every day of the year (Sundays excepted) for more than 15 years, and on this score I think I am eligible to enter the class of "Old Timers" or "Seniors," a simon-pure, dyed-in-the-wool exhibitor.

For verification of the above history, I would respectfully refer you to the 1st National Bank of Somerset, Ky.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS M. THATCHER.

Array of Good Pictures Aids Busy Pittsburgh Exhibitors

At the Pittsburgh picture theatres the week of October 16: "Under Two Flags," in second week at the Cameo, and "Broadway Rose," in second week at the State, held up well. "Broadway Rose" at the Alhambra went big. "Rags to Riches" at the Grand and Liberty stood 'em up. "Pink Gods" at the Regent and Blackstone did fair, as did also "The Siren Call" at the Olympic. "The Storm," second run of "the avenue" at the Lyric, did big. "The Prisoner of Zenda" at the Kenyon did big. "Yankee Doodle, Jr." did better than average business at the Minerva. "Slim Shoulders" did fair at the Cameraphone.

At the Pittsburgh picture theatres, week of October 9: Olympic and Liberty played to S. R. O. with "The Old Homestead"; Grand and Regent did the biggest business with "The Bond Boy." Crowds stood in the rain to see this one. State did big with "Broadway Rose." Held over for second week, as was also the case with "Under Two Flags" at the Cameo. Alhambra did fair with "Remembrance"; same the case at the Cameraphone with "Human Hearts." Tom Mix played to capacity at the Blackstone in "Do and Dare."

Formal opening of the new State Theatre, Uniontown's $800,000 vaudeville and picture house, was held on October 30. The theatre has been eighteen months in building and occupies a site fronting 75 feet on East Main street and extending back 150 feet to an equal frontage on Peter street. It seats 2,000 persons and is owned by the State Amusement Company, who also control the Imp and Penn Theatres.

Dr. H. A. Zimmerman, of the Auditorium Theatre, Holsopple, Pa., is enlarging the width of his house forty feet, which will later allow a seating capacity of 500. For the present Dr. Zimmerman is adding but 100 chairs, bringing his total up to 385. The Auditorium is open three nights a week.

Henry Heilwick, of the Duchess Theatre, Delmont, Pa., has just had the interior of the house repainted, and it now presents a mighty handsome appearance.

Bert Redfoot, manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Windber, Pa., is making preparations for a good fall and winter business. Windber is one of the many Western Pennsylvania towns that was hard hit by the coal strike, and the strike is not yet settled in that section. However, Bert says that miners are going back to work gradually, and he expects that business will be back to normal before long.

Frank Elden of the Elden Theatre, Boswell, Pa., says he is so sure that we are going to have a severe winter that he is installing additional steam radiators in his theatre, so that his patrons may be comfortable in the cold months that are sure to come.

After an all-summer shutdown the Palmer Amusement Company has re-opened its picture house at Fort Palmer, Pa.

The Brighton Amusement Company has disposed of the Park Theatre on Butler street near Forty-fifth, Pittsburgh. The building, which was a modern theatre in every respect, is being dismantled and will be used for a garage.

Earl Forsythe, president of the Second National Exchange in Pittsburgh, and owner of the Star Theatre, Cannonsburg, has returned home from a business trip in New York City.

Jack Rainey, of the Rialto Theatre, Erie; Joe Solomon, of the Bijou, Clarksburg, W. Va., and W. J. Bittner, of the Cambria and New Park Theatres, Johnstown, were recent Pittsburgh visitors.

Manager Ott, of the Liberty Theatre, Littleton, W. Va., is in the mountains for a two-week hunting trip.

The Misses Pomroy and Fafney, owners and managers of the Virginia Theatre, Paden City, W. Va., are taking over the new theatre building that is being built in their town. The old building will be turned over for a storeroom. The new theatre is much larger and is modern in every way.

George Schweitzer of the Titusville Amusement Company, Titusville, Pa., was in Pittsburgh recently on his regular monthly film shopping trip. George says business is good out east.

The Whalen Theatre at Osceola Mills, Pa., has been closed temporarily owing to an epidemic of scarlet fever in the town.

H. A. Schafer, well-known Pittsburgh news dealer, anticipating the early opening of the new Liberty tubes and important public improvements in Dormont Borough, has bought a plot of ground, 60x102 feet in size, on West Liberty avenue. Mr. Schafer will erect a modern picture theatre building, including a large auditorium, billiard hall, bowling alleys and two storerooms.

To Get Together

A monstrous get-together dinner and general good time between Chicago exchange managers, salesmen and exhibitors is scheduled for October 30. Notices have been sent out to all the exhibitors by the F. I. L. M. Board of Trade, asking that that evening be held open for whatever announcement will come along later. Senator McCormick will speak and other local celebrities will be present. It looks like a big night.

C. B. Pascoe, of Somerset, Pa., is erecting two new picture theatres in his town.

W. A. Gray, formerly assistant manager of the Regent Theatre, East Liberty, has been selected by H. B. Kester, of the Cameraphone, as manager for this house, succeeding R. J. La Voise, who left to do exploitation for Goldwyn. Mr. Gray has been with the Rowland and Clark theatres for the past four years, beginning at the Plaza Theatre, where he worked in various capacities under Bill Bernardi. Three years ago he was transferred to the Regent, where he has since been assistant to Manager Donovan. The World joins his large circle of friends in wishing him the best of success in his new position.

Oregon Theatre Owner Tries Lobby Radiophone Program

R. Kuhn, proprietor of the Lebanon Theatre, Lebanon, Oregon, has installed a large radiophone in the lobby of his theatre. During the World Series reports of the games by play broadcasted from Portland stations were heard through the new receiving set. Kuhn has arranged a new program each night with an intermission for hearing the music and news items sent out from broadcasting stations throughout the Northwest.

On several occasions communication was established with sending stations as far east as St. Louis. Music from California broadcasting stations is frequently heard through Kuhn's new radio set. The new receiving set in connection with the daily program in the theatre is proving popular with the public, and from present indications, it is apparent other exhibitors in Northwest towns likely will follow Kuhn's lead.

W. E. Tibbits, manager of the Highway Theatre, Portland, is reported to be planning the erection of a new theatre in the Sandy boulevard district. The development of the Rose City Park district and adjacent suburban additions has caused a rapid increase in the attendance of theatres in that neighborhood.

Leo Morrison, theatre manager from Tillamook, Oregon, has been in the Portland Medical Hospital for the last few weeks recovering from a severe illness. Morrison is reported recuperating rapidly. He will soon be able to return to his home and the keen salt air of the Pacific.

F. E. O'Neil, of McMinnville, Oregon, opened a new theatre in that city September 15, and has been maintaining record attendance for his district since the opening. O'Neil's new theatre is called "The Lark."

A new theatre in Kelso, Washington, is being promoted by Bert Boylan.

Zone Meetings in Illinois

A series of zone meetings will be held in Illinois during the coming winter, the state having been divided into "zones" and a meeting being scheduled for the central point in each one, under the auspices of the Ways and Means Committee of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners. It is believed this new idea will bring the exhibitors throughout the state in closer harmony by having meetings in the immediate territory of each exhibitor, rather than by obliging him to make the trip to Chicago for each meeting.

The first meeting is slated for Ottawa, on November 8; the next at Galesburg, November 22; the third at Rockford, December 6; the next at Peoria, December 20, and a big state meeting at Springfield on January 10, when the state legislature convenes.

The Ways and Means Committee of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners consists of the following: Glen Reynolds, DeKalb, chairman; Ben Berve, Rochelle; A. Dernbach, Wheaton; L. Siegal, Sam Abrahams, Joe Hopp, L. H. Frank and Sidney H. Selig, all of Chicago.

Kansas City Paper Gets Out Special as Electric Opens

The Kansas City Kansan, a daily newspaper of Kansas City, Kansas, issued a special eight-page section to their paper on the day of the grand opening of the Electric Theatre, the finest picture house in Kansas City, Kansas. The special section was devoted entirely to the new theatre and advertisements of companies having a part in the construction of the four-story theatre building. A. F. Baker is manager of the house. The opening attraction was "Grandma's Boy." An hour before the theatre opened for its first performance a crowd of people was lined up waiting to gain entrance. Prices at week-day matinees are 25 and 30 cents and the admission charged Sundays, holidays and nights is 30 and 35 cents.

Robert Leonard of the Strand Theatre, Kansas City, is gradually acquiring more and more theatres. Last week he opened the Alamo, Thirty-fourth and Main streets, and the Roanoke Theatre, Thirty-ninth and Summit streets. Both theatres have been closed during the summer months. The opening attraction, which played at each of the two newly-opened theatres for three days, was "The Four Horsemen," which drew good business to both houses.

Sydney S. Cohen, national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; General Manager A. J. Moeller of the national organization, and M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the National Public Service Committee, were entertained at a banquet given for them at the Hotel Baltimore, October 16, by the theatre owners of Kansas City, Missouri, and Kansas City, Kansas. Mayors Frank H. Cromwell and Harry B. Burton, also were guests.

The week of October 22 is the anniversary week of the Orpheum Theatre. Tuesday night of that week has been designated as "Film Night" and 200 seats were reserved for those connected with the picture business. Theodore Roberts is appearing at the theatre in person. Every seat in the house was sold out for the entire week a week before the anniversary celebration started.

Herb Welch, who has the Orpheum Theatre at Atchison, Kas., was visiting some of the film exchanges last week.

Herman Cook, who was in town the other day, has re-opened the Grand Theatre at St. Joseph, Mo., and is planning on doing a fine business this season.

An interesting bit of news that has come out within the last few weeks is that M. B. Shanberg, one of the prominent Kansas exhibitors together with Sam Harding of Kansas City, Mo., have brought the Wichita Theatre at Wichita, Kas. This deal does not affect any of Mr. Shanberg's or Mr. Harding's present theatre holdings. The Wichita Theatre is one of the best theatres in Wichita and plays first-runs. Mr. Shanberg is connected with the Midland Circuit operating theatres in Salina, Hutchinson and Junction City, Kansas. Mr. Harding operates the Liberty and Doric Theatres in Kansas City, three theatres in Council Bluffs, Iowa, and is president of the Capitol Enterprises, which control several other theatres in Kansas City.

John A. Silha, who operates the Stadium Theatre at Chicago, attended the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri held at Excelsior Springs October 18 and 19. Mr. Silha traveled across two states in order to meet the officers of the national organizaztion and to show his appreciation of their splendid work in the interest of the exhibitors of the country. Mr. Silha put cheer into everyone with his happy smile and general good-will.

I. W. Rodgers of the Criterion Theatre, Popuar Bluff, Mo., claimed the distinction of having traveled farther to attend the Missouri convention than any other member of the organization. Mr. Rogers lives in the extreme southeast corner of Missouri and the distance between Poplar Bluff and Excelsior Springs is around 500 miles. He is, by the way one of the oldest exhibitors in the country, having started his first theatre in 1896. A story will appear soon telling of his history as an exhibitor.

Exhibitors from Kansas who attended the Missouri convention are: Mr. and Mrs. M. Van Praag, Art Theatre, Kansas City, Kans.; C. E. Cook, business manager of the Kansas organization; R. G. Liggett, Gauntier, Kansas City, Kans.; Clair M. Patee, Lawrence, Kans.; C. A. Smith, Tenth street, Kansas City, Kans.; Fred Meyn and William Meyn, of Kansas City, Kans.

C. L. McVey, who has the Dreamland and Eagle Theatres at Herrington, Kans., was in Kansas City two days last week booking some of Paramount's pictures. Mr. McVey formerly sold that company's pictures.

Gilly Gable, of the Grand Theatre, Beloit, Kans., was seen in the film exchange colony recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Blair, of the Majestic Theatre at Belleville, Kans., were making the rounds of the exchanges the other day. Mr. Blair reports that his business is improving somewhat. He also says that his patrons demand big pictures and that he doesn't get the business unless he gives his patrons what they want.

Among the exhibitors who attended the Missouri convention, which is reported in this issue, were: John A. Silha, Stadium, Chicago, Ill.; Sydney S. Cohen, New York City; W. P. Cuff, Strand, Chillicothe; H. J. Nash, King Bee, St. Louis; A. M. Eisner, Broadmour, Kansas City; Charles Burkey, Summit, Kansas City; L. J. Lenhart, Gladstone, Kansas City; J. W. Watson, Benton, Kansas City; Harry Taylor, Capitol Enterprises, Kansas City; D. J. Michael, Liberty, Kirksville; C. W. Hunt, Rex, Higginsville; M. J. O'Toole, New York City; A. J. Moeller, New York City.

Great Week for Boston Fans; Local Picture Being Booked

This has been another great week for the picture fans, with "The Ghost Breaker" at the Orpheum, "Calvert's Valley" at the Boston, "The Cowboy and the Lady" at Loew's State, "Heroes and Husbands" at Gordon's Olympia, "Remembrance" at the Modern and the Beacon, "One Exciting Night" continuing at Tremont Temple, and "When Knighthood Was in Flower" opening for an indefinite run at the Park Theatre the latter part of the week. At the latter showing, Victor Herbert in person will lead the augmented orchestra for the first three nights.

Out of courtesy to some of the directors of the Whaling City Film Company, the New Bedford picture, "Down to the Sea in Ships," is to be shown at several of the Cape Cod towns, including Wellfleet, Chatham and Orleans. An effort also is being made to have it shown at the Martha's Vineyard Tabernacle. The picture was at the Bijou, Fall River, the first half of this week, and it will be seen at the Majestic, Providence, from November 6 to 25. On December 4 it will open at the Metropolitan Opera House at Philadelphia, for a run to the last of the year.

Two M. P. T. O. A. Franchises Are Scheduled for Missouri

Missouri will have two franchises in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in the very near future. One will be centered in St. Louis and the other in Kansas City. Plans for the separation of the eastern and western exhibitors of Missouri were discussed at a meeting of the St. Louis Theatre Owners held October 19.

Sydney S. Cohen, national president; A. J. Moeller, general manager, and M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the public service committee, en route home from the Missouri exhibitors' convention at Excelsior Springs, Mo., attended the St. Louis meeting. Cohen promised that he would take up the matter of issuing a separate franchise to the Eastern Missouri exhibitors on his return to the national headquarters.

There is no dissension among the Missouri theatre men. The matter of a division of the state was discussed at the state convention, and according to Joseph Mogler, president of the St. Louis league, and western members of the Missouri organization are not adverse to a separation.

Under the plan outlined at the St. Louis meeting, the St. Louis or Eastern Missouri district would include that part of the state eastward from Jefferson City, including the state capital, and also Illinouis south of Springfield. The Kansas City headquarters would function for Western Missouri and possibly for the eastern part of Kansas. The consent of the Kansas and Illinois league officials will be necessary to put the arrangement through. Local exhibitors are sure this can be done.

The advantages of the new arrangement as outlined by Mogler would be:

More efficient service for the exhibitors of Eastern Missouri.

A closer co-operation with the national organization and a resultant increase in the membership of the state and national association.

He pointed out that at present there are few association members in Southern Illinois, while Eastern Missouri is not organized as it should be. He said this is due to the fact that the Southern Illinois exhibitors purchase their film and theatre supplies in St. Louis while their state organization has its headquarters in Chicago, 300 miles distant.

Exhibitors in St. Louis and Eastern Missouri have complained that it takes too long to obtain satisfactory service through the state headquarters in Kansas City, not through lack of efficiency on the part of the state officers, but due to the distance.

Under the new plan the exhibitor associations would include the same territories as served by the St. Louis and Kansas City national film distributing branches.

There are about 700 picture theatres in Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois.

Joseph Mogler and Mike Nash were local exhibitors at the Missouri convention. The attendance from the eastern half of Missouri was very small. Excelsior Springs is rather inaccessible for this section.

George Beban & Company, in "The Sign of the Rose," have been booked for a return engagement at the Delmonte Theatre, the week commencing November 5. No other picture has ever before received a return date at the Delmonte.

The Opera House, Glasgow, Ill., opened its doors on Saturday, October 14. Harry Robinson is the owner and manager. It will play high-class pictures.

Damage amounting to $2,000 resulted from a fire at the Lafayette Theatre, Jefferson avenue, near Lafayette avenue, a few days ago. The St. Louis Amusement Company owns the house.

The Gravois Theatre, Jefferson aveune, near Gravois avenue, proved that a theatre can successfully buck street carnivals and similar attractions the past week. Promoters of a street carnival backed their duck dispensing raffle wheels and similar paraphernalia right up against the back of the Gravois in the wedge between Jefferson, Gravois and Ohio avenues, but this had little effect on the attendance at the theatre.

Joseph Erber, who formerly controlled the Erber and Avenue Theatres, East St. Louis, but who recently sold his stock in those houses to his partner, Phil Cohen, has departed for New York to make his home.

The Clara Theatre, Moline, Ill., owned by Fred L. Cornwell, St. Louis, was dedicated last week. Out-of-town visitors included Mayor Henry W. Kiel, of St. Louis, and United States Senator James A. Reed. Cornwell also owns the Delmonte Theatre in St. Louis.

Wounded soldiers at the United States Public Health Service Hospital here were given an opportunity of hearing the famed Yerkes S. S. Flotilla orchestra through the courtesy of Herschal Stuart, manager of the Missouri Theatre. The orchestra was playing at the theatre and Stuart decided it would be a nice treat for the wounded buddies to send the musicians out to the hospital. It made a big hit with the wounded lads.

Out-of-town exhibitors here during the week included Mrs. Frances Pert, of the Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Ill., and Ben Eskind, of the Dixie Theatre, Madisonville, Ky.

Harry Turner, Eagle Theatre, Pana, Ill., was in for some features and comedies.

Reeves Espy has a new boss. No, he hasn't quit as publicity chief for Skouras Brothers and the St. Louis Amusement Company. Merely married. The knot was tied Saturday, October 14, the splicing taking place at the home of the bride, who was Miss Ellen Parle, daughter of Mrs. Leslie J. Blackmore, 325 North Taylor avenue. A quiet affair. Just a few very intimate friends and relatives. They are on their honeymoon now. Skouras Brothers knew that being married Reeves would need a more important position, so they out and negotiated for the Missouri Theatre. Here's luck to you and the missus Reeves, old boy.

Cambria, Ill., is to have a new picture theatre. It will seat 350 and the doors will be thrown open early in November, according to C. C. Jones, owner, who was in St. Louis arranging for equipment and films. He formerly operated the American at Johnston City, Ill., but sold out to Bob Cluster several weeks ago. He bought a Power's projector and other equipment from the Fulco-Schaefer Sales Company.

It is rumored that the Washington Theatre, Granite City, Ill., may change hands. Jim Reilly, who owns the Princess and Grand Theatres in Alton, Ill., is said to have made an offer for the Washington. W. Landau, owner of the Washington Theatre, has been very successful with it and it would take a very high price to swing a deal.

George J. Endler, local real estate man, is now operating the New Liberty Theatre, Easton avenue at Sarah street. He took over the house a few weeks ago.

Louis Cohen is the new manager of the Majestic Theatre. He formerly managed the Bridge Theatre on Natural Bridge avenue for H. A. Hamburg, who is said to be one of the new owners of the Majestic. The McKinley Amusement Company, which formerly operated the Majestic, has dissolved.

The Little Broadway Theatre, Fifteenth and East Broadway, East St. Louis, has also changed hands. George Daniels is the new owner. The price paid William Goodman for the house has not been revealed. The deal was closed October 13. Nothing superstitious about Mr. Daniels.

E. B. Ray's new theatre at Valier, Ill., opened on October 14. It will operate as a strictly picture house. The theatre seats 256. Ray divided his order for equipment, buying his Power's projector and G. E. Mazda equipment from Exhibitors Supply, and his Daylite screen, chairs and other supplies from Fulco-Schaefer.

Arthur Robinson opened the Hickory Theatre, 2600 Hickory street, October 16. He purchased it early in the summer and spent several thousand dollars in remodeling and redecorating. He also replaced the old fashioned benches with comfortable opera chairs. He plans to show higher class pictures than formerly were used.

H. E. Nelson, of the Star Theatre, Quincy, Ill., boo ed "Human Hearts" for his house. He had a happy idea. A humane contest would be the very thing to attract attention. He sold the idea to the city editor of the Quincy Herald, and the next day the newspaper announced that a prize of $5 would be paid to the person who told the newspaper of the most humane act performed during the week.

Hart to Marry

The engagement is announced of J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace Theatre, El Paso, Texas, to Miss Elizabeth Mildred Brook, of Montreal, Canada. Their romance began during the early days of the World War when Mr. Hart was in Montreal. After America entered the war, while Mr. Hart was in the army and at Camp Pike, Arkansas, Miss Brook looked after his young son, Montgomery, who was in school in Canada. Their friendship was renewed after the armistice. The wedding will occur some time soon, in Canada, and they will live in El Paso.

Leo Keiler, Princeton, Ky., was a caller of the week. Said to have come in to see about "Grandma's Boy" and other big features.

Barber Brothers, owners of the Electric Theatre, Tilden, Ill., dropped in at Fox for some features and comedies.

Bob Cluster called at Vitagraph.

Carpenters, painters and other artisans are busily engaged in transforming John Marlowe's Theatre at Carterville, Ill. They are putting in a new front and redecorating the house throughout. When the work is finished John will have paid out some several thousand dollars and Carterville will have a picture house of which to be proud. The house formerly had 500 seats. When it is refinished there will be 900.

Things have been happening in Litchfield and Taylorville, Ill. There is an entire new line-up in that section. Spalding Brothers have disposed of the Gem Theatre in Taylorville, Ill., and bought the house of the same name in Litchfield, Ill., formerly owned by G. W. Kneedler. Frisini & Company now own the Gem, Taylorville. They have other houses in Taylorville, Kincaid and Auburn.

Reed, Yemm & Hayes have added another house to their string of Southern Illinois picture shows. It is the Family Theatre, Marion, Ill., which they secured from Vernon Hicks. The Family has accommodations for 400 patrons.

Another St. Louis theatre has changed hands. The Majestic Theatre, 1022 Franklin avenue, formerly owned by the McKinley Amusement Company, is now controlled by Sam Lewis and H. R. Hamburg. The price paid has not been revealed, but is said to have been in excess of $15,000. The McKinley Amusement Company has disbanded. Its officers were: A. D. Pappas, president; John Karzin, vice president; Leo Apostolos, secretary. They also held all of the $15,000 stock. The theatre building, owned by Pappas, has been leased to Hamburg and Lewis for five years. The Majestic, built in 1915, accommodates 1,100 patrons.

Recent St. Louis visitors were: Charles Newsum, Mount Vernon, Ill.; Tom Reed, Duquoin, Ill.; Jim Reilly, Grand and Princess Theatres, Alton, Ill.; W. E. Schwing, Gem, Vahlmyer, Ill.; E. O. Lewis, Pastime, Sessor, Ill.; J. E. Miller, Idle Hour, Festus, Mo.; A. C. Norwein, Norwein Amusement Company, Bonne Terre and Flat River, Mo.; J. Spalding, Litchfield, Ill.; C. Frisini, Taylorville, Ill., and W. E. Kneedler, Litchfield, Ill.

Departure of Vacationists Hits Rural N. Y. Exhibitors

With summer vacationists back in the cities, many of the picture theatres in Catskill Mountain towns and in other places throughout New York State, which cater to summer visitors, are now running but one day a week. The other day C. R. Halligan, manager of the Universal exchange in Albany, accompanied by a salesman, William Allen, took a swing which included Jefferson, Richmondville, Cobleskill, Schoharie, Middleburg and other places, and found that while many of the houses are down to one day a week, that without exception, they are doing a good business.

Farmers and others patronizing the houses have had a good year, but further than this, managers of these houses have come to realize that by showing first-class pictures and advertising far out into the country districts, that they are able this fall to more than double the audiences of past years. A careful check made in one of these theatres a few nights ago, showed that 60 per cent. of the audience came in automobiles and from anywhere from five to twenty miles around.

William Smalley, who runs theatres in Sidney, Worcester, Cooperstown and Hartwick, is now booking for the new house in Oneonta.

The Palace in Troy, run by the Battaglia Brothers, and which was opened about a year ago, will become a second run house after October 29. The Palace is a residential theatre and has been endeavoring to buck five first-run houses that are all located down town, and with another 3,500 seat house about to open.

Mrs. Myers, wife of the owner of the Star in Schenectady, died last week, and the house was closed for three or four days.

The new State Theatre in Schenectady is now purchasing film and will probably open about December 1.

E. J. Sullivan, owner of a new house in Middleburg, expects to be able to open about November 15. The chairs will be installed within the next few days.

Mrs. Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, who has been seriously ill following an operation, has so far recovered as to be up and around, and recently paid a visit to Albany's "film row."

The Cohoes Amusement Company is busy these days completing the new theatre at Hudson Falls. The opening date has not yet been set.

After years of managing a burlesque house, Oscar J. Perrin, who took over the Leland in Albany a few months ago, is demonstrating his ability in handling a large picture theatre. Mr. Perrin started off by giving the best possible programs, and as a result hardly a week passes without a long line in front of the ticket window each night.

Edward Winfield, of the Orpheum in Amsterdam, was shopping along Film Row last Thursday.

One of the finest drops in Albany's picture theatres has just been painted by D. C. Lithgow, the artist, for Harry Lazarus, owner of the Pine Hills Theatre.

Mr. Lazarus has the distinction of managing a house which caters entirely to a residential patronage, but he has succeeded in building up such an excellent clientele, that the house is one of the best paying propositions for its size in the entire city.

A. C. Wyer, who handles the Opera House at Delhi, was in Albany the past week, booking at the First National and other exchanges.

Harry Hellman, owner of the Royal in Albany, and one of the old timers in the business, stopping for a few moments' chat and incidentally picking up one or two pictures at the Universal exchange the other day, said that he based the success which has characterized his efforts year after year, by keeping in intimate touch with his audiences, finding out what they wanted, and then supplying that regardless of cost or trouble.

Louis Schine, of Gloversville, was in Albany a day or so ago.

Louis Fischer, owner of the Playhouse in Ticonderoga, was buying film at the Albany exchanges the past week.

William Hayward, of the Strand in Dolgeville, was in Albany the past week. He reports an excellent fall business.

For the first time in the film history of Albany, a feature picture has been booked by a first-run house for a straight week, following a week at an adjoining house. "Grandma's Boy" was shown at Proctor's Grand for a straight week, and according to all reports, established a record for a single week's business. Now the same picture has been booked for the Clinton Square Theatre, a first-run house, and only a block distant from the Grand, for the week of October 30. Fred Elliott, owner of the Clinton Square, figures that if the picture could enjoy runs of many weeks in Los Angeles and other places, that he could afford to book it in a city of 130,000.

J. M. Schine, of Gloversville, has just added the Colligan Theatre at Carthage, to his string of houses. Mr. Schine now has theatres in Oneonta, Gloversville, Norwich, Oswego and Carthage, and with the exception of Oneonta and Carthage, is in absolute control from a theatrical standpoint, in the places where he has located. Only a few years ago, Mr. Schine was a newcomer into the business, but so rapidly has he forged ahead, that he is now regarded as one of the biggest individual factors in film circles in Central and Northern New York, and one who is inclined to give "Nate" Robbins, of Utica, a close run for leadership.

The Capitol, Ballston Spa's new picture house, will open the latter part of this month. The theatre is owned by W. F. Benton. The village has but one other house, managed by Mr. Yelverton.

Educating the Film Salesman

E. J. Foote, who runs the theatre in Jefferson, N. Y., is a pretty good story teller. The other day, Mr. Foote was entertaining a couple of film salesmen with stories of the rigors of winter in that section.

"Do you see that staple at the top of that flagpole?" asked Mr. Foote, as he pointed to a pole at least 50 feet in height across the way from his theatre. The film salesman nodded.

"That staple is used during the winter for hitching horses, and then you ask me the prices you do for film and wonder why I can't get the crowds."

A Metro Picture

MAE MURRAY AND "BROADWAY ROSE"

Attracted this great crowd at the opening of the picture in Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles.

Vallejo, Cal., Conditions on the Mend, Says Hanlon

P. J. Hanlon, of the Virginia Theatre, Vallejo, who is a frequent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row, states that conditions in the navy yard town are becoming settled. The drastic reduction in the number of workers there and the wage slash made by the Federal Government, affected business seriously for a time.

Herbert L. Rothschild and Jack Partington, of the Herbert L. Rothschild Entertainment, left recently for Los Angeles to attend the showing of "When Knighthood Was in Flower" and "Robin Hood." Before returning to San Francisco some film deals will command their attention. Eugene H. Roth is expected home from New York about the time of their return.

A Simplex projection machine has been installed in the new Pine Tree Theatre, Klamath Falls, Ore.

The new Kitsilano Theatre has been opened in Vancouver, B. C., by R. E. Berry, who recently purchased the property. This picture house seats 1,000.

Fred Guest, one of the pioneer picture theatre proprietors of Hamilton, Ontario, has completed arrangements for the erection of a large picture theatre and apartment block in Hamilton to cost upwards of $500,000. The project involves the construction of a theatre having two entrances, one on King street and the other on Main street, with individual facilities for 14 stores and a number of apartment suites. As president and general manager of the Flushing Motion Pictures Corporation, 1540 Broadway, he also controls the Nassau Theatre, Port Washington, N. Y.

Gives His Life for His Dog

Two weeks ago we published the story of the tragic death of Teddy, the canine pet of John Karzin, of St. Louis. News comes this week of another tragedy involving a beloved dog, but in this case the owner, an exhibitor, not the dog, died. Love is a wonderful thing; there was true comradeship between this latter pair, the man and the dog, and the man gave his life for his devoted animal friend.

W. E. Calhoun, Scotts Bluff, Neb., picture theatre manager, was hunting near a government irrigation ditch on October 19 and shot a duck which fell into the swift current of the canal. In retrieving it his dog seemed about to drown and Calhoun, though unable to swim, plunged in after the dog. The man drowned, the dog finally managed to swim to safety.

A Pathe Release

HOW LOEW'S NEW YORK THEATRE DID IT

Large signs on each side of the box office told of the display of the Pathe News with the picture of the Burning of Smyrna, also utilizing the one-sheets supplied with the film.

Los Angeles

The outstanding news feature, the week of October 15, was the opening at Sid Grauman's new Hollywood Theatre, October 18, of "Douglas Fairbanks in 'Robin Hood.'" Prices were doubled. Two performances were given daily. Sid Grauman personally rehearsed the players for the prologue.

Manager Fred Miller, of the California and Miller's Theatre, is well pleased at the attendance at his former theatre for "The Glorious Adventure."

Sid Grauman did a record-breaking six weeks' business at his Rialto Theatre with "Manslaughter." He installed a special system of ventilating for the theatre during the opening week.

Sol Lesser, of the West Coast Theatre, in association with Michael and Abe Gore, has appointed Jack Collicotte manager of the Kinema Theatre.

As an added attraction at his Million-Dollar Theatre, Sid Grauman had on exhibition five miners of the rescue crew who were the first to go down into the mines at the Argonaut disaster, where 47 miners were killed. They gave a graphic description of rescue work, for which Grauman gives them 20 per cent. of the gross receipts for the fund the Amador Chamber of Commerce is raising for the wives and families of the ill-fated miners. The people of Los Angeles responded nobly, with the result that Grauman played to the biggest business in the history of the theatre. The miners appeared in conjunction with Paramount's picture, "Pink Gods."

Garden Theatre Property in Buffalo Changes Hands

The International Railway Company has sold the Garden Theatre property in Buffalo to Blanch E. Dunn, who plans to rebuild and remodel the building into a pretentious structure. It will probably be called the American Palace. The main building will contain a mammoth swimming tank, 50 feet by 200 feet. A balcony will be built all around the auditorium containing the pool, for the convenience of patrons, similar to Madison Square Garden. Work on the new building will begin late next Spring.

Just now the Garden is playing burlesque. The change will mark the passing of one of the city's historic theatres. For several years the old Garden housed Shea's vaudeville, then it became a burlesque theatre. Later its name was changed to the Empire and under the management of Sam Carver offered pictures. This season the film policy was discontinued, the name changed back to the Garden and the old burlesque policy re-adopted.

A. Edmund Lee, treasurer of the Lock City Theatres, Inc., announces that the directors have awarded to John Moon and Son of Lockport, N. Y., a contract for the erection of a new Lockport theatre on the site at the corner of East avenue and Elm street. Work on the house will begin immediately. Plans call for a two-story building with a frontage of 107 feet and a depth of 156 feet. There will be three stores on the ground floor and seven offices on the second, all facing East avenue. The theatre will cost $150,000.

Henry C. Pullman, doorman at the Strand, Buffalo, sure did feel proud last week when the Buffalo Evening News came out with a two column story about the veteran showman who was one of the big circus men of half a century ago. Henry was associated with Barnum, Bailey, Dan Rice and all of the early big ten men. Mr. Pullman is now 84 years old, but looks 50.

The Garden Theatre, Buffalo, has inaugurated a Sunday film bill which is being shown in connection with a vaudeville program. During the week the house shows burlesque.

Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, sure will have some show the week of October 22, when Manager Vincent McFaul will offer "Nice People," The "Three Must Get Theres," and a fashion show featuring live models. This is just the type of program modern audiences want and Mr. McFaul expects to see all attendance records go to smash.

Al Beckerich, manager of the Loew State, Buffalo, celebrated the first anniversary of the big house the week of October 16. On Saturday morning he gave a special showing of "The Five Dollar Baby," for the Jolly Junior Club in which he tied-up with the Buffalo Courier, receiving in return a million dollars' worth of free publicity. Al also put over several page ads on the First Anniversary in which local merchants told of their contribution to the furnishings of the theatre.

Manager Henry F. Thurston of the Temple Theatre in Lockport, N. Y., aided the local boy scout campaign for funds by putting on a special scout film showing the boys on a hiking trip through the White Mountains. The film was shown to give the public a clear idea of some of the activities of the work the men of Lockport have in mind in setting $7,000 to carry on the work of the scouts here in an organized manner.

E. O. Weinberg, former manager of the Buffalo Strand, and who during the summer has been in charge of the Syracuse Strand in the absence of Edgar Weill, is in the Homeopathic Hospital at this writing recovering from an operation. Mr. Weinberg's tonsils were removed. As soon as he has fully recovered, Mr. Weinberg will go to Atlantic City for a two-week vacation, then to Brooklyn and New York to study the systems of operation of the big Strand houses there and then to Troy, where he will manage the new link in the Mark-Strand chain, which will open in December.

Colonel "Zeb," the Strand janitor in Buffalo, is also going to the Troy house, it is reported. "Zeb" is a fixture at the Buffalo house, having served through the managerial regimes of the late Harold Edel, Earl L. Crabb, E. O. Weinberg and now E. A. Pfeil.

Better Films Movement Does Fine Work in the Southeast

The Better Films Movement in the South, while less than a year old at this time, has shown such results from its first inauguration in Atlanta last November as to encourage emulation in several localities of importance. The activities of representative citizens in various Southern cities in this movement have been the means of creating in the public mind a new and fairer opinion of the industry.

An interesting meeting took place in Spartanburg, S. C., recently when fourteen representative men and women of the town gathered to discuss plans for more far-reaching and effective work in the promotion of better films. For many months this group of fourteen have been sponsoring special performances for boys and girls with attendance averaging higher than any other city in the South of its size. They have now mapped out a program which involves many angles all converging in the general plan for better films and more patronage therefor.

In Charlotte recently a group of representative women were organized under the leadership of Mrs. Jas. E. Reilly for definite lines along the general program of the better films movements and the significance of this step can be better appreciated when it is known that Mrs. Reilly was the author of the first censorship bill in North Carolina.

Sig. Samuels announces the closing—permanently of his Criterion Theatre, effective October 7. For many years this was the leading motion picture theatre of Atlanta. Its closing will give Willard "Pat" Patterson opportunity to concentrate all his attention on their new Metropolitan.

Incorporation papers have been filed with the Maryland State Tax Commission by George W. Hoffherr, for the Belvidere Amusement Company, Inc., which has a capital stock of $20,000. It is the purpose of the company to exhibit pictures.

Mr. and Mrs. T. E. James, of the Grand Theatre, Atlanta, were host and hostess to the performers, attaches of the theatre and representatives of the press Friday, October 6, at a radio party.

The Rockingham Theatre Company, operating the Garden Theatre, Rockingham, N. C., has taken over the Playhouse Theatre Bennettsville, S. C., and extensive improvements are already underway. The name will be changed to the Garden. W. G. Atkinson general manager will also have supervision over the Bennettsville house.

Mr. and Mrs. Will B. Woods, of Gadsden, Alabama, are vacationing at Hot Springs, Arkansas.

J. Wright Brown, who has been managing the Rialto, Jacksonville, Fla., has been brought into Atlanta by Southern Enterprises to join the general office exploitation staff, succeeding W. R. Bedell, new manager of the Rialto, Atlanta.

Colonel Henry B. Varner, of Lexington, North Carolina, one of the best known exhibitors in the country and Executive Committeeman of the M. P. T. O. has purchased the Strand Theatre, Salisbury, N. C., from Southern Enterprises.

"Moonshine," an educational comedy, received intensive exploitation at the hands of R. H. Hightower, of the Crystal, Dublin, Ga. He loaded a three gallon jug, also the can containing the picture on a stripped down Chevrolet, both labelled "Moonshine." Driving up the street, cutting funny actions he soon had a crowd and some one summoned the police. They tried to arrest him and examine the contents of can and jug, and all this added to the crowd, which was more publicity for the picture.

WE BEG TO ANNOUNCE: That Arthur B. Price, manager of the Aurora and Blue Mouse theatres and connected with other houses in Baltimore, Md., is the proud daddy of a bouncing ten-pound boy, born on October 12. Both Mrs. Price and the baby are doing well. This is the second son, and Mr. and Mrs. Price also have a daughter.

Toronto "Hip" Reverts to Former Combination Policy

Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto, has reverted to its old policy of presenting a combination program of pictures and vaudeville, the change being made during the week of October 16. Last summer the Hippodrome, one of the largest downtown houses in Toronto, was overhauled and an organ, the largest in Canada, was installed. When the house reopened, special film productions were featured along with the organ music. Special pictures are to be continued, but the vaudeville has been added once more.

S. R. Scott has made a big jump in his employment as a picture theatre manager. Formerly manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Moosejaw, Sask., he has taken up residence in Toronto where he has become manager of Allen's Danforth Theatre. B. Whitman, previous manager of the Danforth Theatre, will have charge of the purchasing and advertising department of the Famous Players Film Service, the Allens' exchange, with headquarters at Toronto. On his retirement from the management of the Danforth Theatre, Mr. Whitman was presented with a silver handled umbrella by the theatre staff.

The interesting announcement is made that the Allen Theatre Enterprises, Toronto, personally represented at Winnipeg by Bernard Allen, has taken action in the courts at Winnipeg to secure repossession of the Province Theatre in that city from Col. J. Sullivan and Dr. Wilmott, who purchased the property from John A. Schuberg, of Vancouver, B. C., six months ago. The Allens claim legal ownership of the theatre through a purchase agreement with Schuberg several years ago.

Lady Byng, wife of Lord Byng, Governor-General of Canada, and a party of eight, attended the regular presentation of "Orphans of the Storm" at the Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg, on October 19, the presence of the vice regal party being unsolicited by the Lyceum management.

"Plantation Musical Week" was conducted by Manager Miller Stewart, of the Allen Theatre, Winnipeg, during the week of October 23. The Allen orchestra rendered a number of Southern melodies at all performances during the week as a special feature.

N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Famous-Players Canadian Corporation, has appointed W. Knight Wilson to the post of conductor of the orchestra for the Capitol Theatre, Regina, Sask. Mr. Wilson was previously concert master of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and was also identified with the orchestra of the Regent Theatre, Toronto.

Manager Miller, of the Pantages Theatre, Toronto, conducted a picture puzzle contest in connection with the presentation of "Rags to Riches" at the Pantages during the week of October 23, for which no less than 2,551 prizes were given for boys and girls 13 years of age and under. A scene from the feature was cut into 25 sections and these were run wild throughout the theatrical section of the Toronto Star Weekly on October 21. Boys and girls were invited to assemble these pieces and to bring the made-up picture to the theatre on Monday, October 23.

A new publication feature in the picture theatre activities of Toronto is the "Picture Theatre Program News," which has been brought out as a weekly paper of four pages to announce current attractions of the many local houses. Display advertisements of about 90 theatres are found on the four pages, along with special advertisements. The Program News, which is published each Friday by the Picture Theatre Publishing Company, 336 Confederation Life Building, Toronto, is distributed free at the theatres as a service to the public and it is also sold by newsboys and at newsstands. The publication carries general advertising.

The Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg, started out on October 23 with a ladies' orchestra of five pieces, the director of which is Miss Violet Johnston, first violin.

Business at Low Level in Wilmington Due to Strikes

While industrial maps show the Southeastern territory and especially the Carolinas as tending to look up in general business conditions, there are spots where dull slump still reigns. Wilmington, N. C., is one of these spots where business has just reached a new low level, Atlantic Coast Line shops there being large and still on strike, this railroad having refused to treat with the strikers for a settlement. Charlotte, Greensboro, Winston-Salem and Raleigh, N. C., report a slightly brighter outlook during the past week. South Carolina, with cotton a complete failure, is still in the throes of disaster.

Stephen A. Lynch has returned to Atlanta after four months spent abroad, accompanied by Mrs. Lynch and two children, with governess and maid. C. E. Tandy, for years associated with the Lynch enterprises, who accompanied the party abroad, remained in London.

The Ideal, Columbia, S. C., has been closed temporarily.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kent, and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Bamford, of Asheville; A. C. Cowles, of Spartanburg, S. C.; S. A. Lynch, Y. F. Freeman and Dan Michalove, of Atlanta, formed a party which went from Atlanta for the Navy-Tech game in Washington, October 21.

A. P. Roberts has been assigned to management of the Imperial, Columbia, relieving C. W. Irwin, who is ill. It is a Southern Enterprises house.

Tony Sudekin, the Nashville, Tenn., magnate, is interesting himself in various side lines recently. He has recently completed erection of one of the largest ice cream plants in the country, in Nashville. His magnificent country estate was recently given a big write-up in Country Life in America.

John and Bruce Snyder, exhibitors of Bessemer City, N. C., were in Atlanta the past week.

Ralph DeBruler, one of the best-known showmen in the South, has been made manager of the Broadway, Charlotte, and has already assumed charge.

Harry S. Allen, of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Wilmington, is touring Western North Carolina with Mrs. Allen.

The full roster of the newly organized Charlotte Better Films Committee is as follows: Mrs. W. O. Nisbett, chairman, films committee, D. A. R.; Rogers Davis, vice president, Charlotte Boy Scouts; Mrs. Isaac Hardeman, N. C. Federation; Dr. W. M. Frazier, president, Queen's College; Miss Ann Pearce, librarian; Mrs. A. A. Knee, vice president, Parent-Teachers' Association; J. A. Baldwin, president, Southern Industrial Institute; R. D. Craver, Broadway Theatre; Dr. A. A. McGeachy, pastor, Second Presbyterian Church; Ray Beall, Imperial Theatre; E. F. Dardine, Strand Theatre; Otto Haas, Ottoway Theatre; Mrs. B. Conway, a brilliant newspaper woman; Mrs. C. W. Tillett, Jr., president, League of Women Voters; Mrs. Laura Reilly, daughter of Mrs. James Eugene Reilly, the president; Mrs. C. E. Platt, Charlotte Women's Club. One of the first activities of the new organization will look towards the inauguration of morning matinees for boys and girls; another will be the introduction of pictures in the schools under a department of visual education.

Among the important personages on Film Row, Atlanta, the past week were the following: Saul H. Harriss, of the Arkansas Enterprises, with headquarters in Little Rock; C. J. P. Edwards, Victory Theatre, Waynesboro, N. C.

Conditions in Wilmington are unimproved. Four weeks ago the Victoria, largest of the Howard-Wells theatres, was closed. It is announced now that the Royal, another first-run house, will close October 21, leaving only two theatres open playing pictures, the Grand and Bijou, the latter a serial and Western house.

All First-Run Theatres

With the opening of the Alhambra, Charlotte has six picture theatres all using first-run service, without a single regular second-run house, a condition that is almost unique in America.

The Alhambra is a Southern Enterprise house and has formerly played stage attractions only, they already owning and operating the Imperial as the home of Paramount pictures. With the Strand, operated by the Universal Film Exchange, and the Broadway, operated as a First National house by R. D. Craver, the Alhambra, big first-run, and the Ottoway, features, and the Ideal, serial and Western house, this city has more theatre seats than any other town of its size in the country.

News from the Producers

Conducted by T. S. da Ponte

It Came True

The prediction that "The Old Homestead" would prove one of the biggest box-office successes of all times, especially in the smaller cities and towns, is already being fulfilled, according to Paramount. Rumors of unusually large business are coming in from exhibitors in all parts of the country, one of the latest being from the Paramount-Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City.

At the close of its week's run at that house it was found that it had played to well over 24,000 people. On Saturday night it was necessary to close the box office before the running of the feature, so Manager George Carpenter is going to bring it back for three days during November.

Gilbert to Star for Fox

Announcement was made yesterday at the offices of the Fox Film Corporation that a new contract had been signed by John Gilbert, who played the title role in the screen spectacle, "Monte Cristo," at the 44th Street Theatre. Owing to the splendid work of Mr. Gilbert in "Monte Cristo," his new contract calls for his elevation to the full dignity of a star in electric lights and all advertising matter, not only for "Monte Cristo" but for his future productions.

Under his new contract, Mr. Gilbert will immediately begin work on two additional Fox special productions, the first of which will be a picturization of "St. Elmo."

Unusual Publicity Is Planned

Several exhibitors have, it is reported, planned unusual exploitation for the S-L special, "Quincy Adams Sawyer," in connection with its premier presentation throughout the United States and Canada.

Part of this exploitation will consist of popularizing a special song called "Quincy Adams Sawyer," composed by William J. McKenna, author of the song "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?"

Not a Fox Trot

Shirley Mason, who demonstrates her ability as a sword dancer in her forthcoming William Fox production, "Shirley of the Circus," wants it distinctly understood that the dance is not a Fox trot.

Finds a Spirit of Business Optimism

Returning from a tour of important industrial centres, John E. Storey, Pathe general representative, reports general business conditions much improved, with a lively spirit of optimism prevalent everywhere. Picture exhibitors are declared to have the fullest confidence in box office prospects for the season which they are just now entering.

Mr. Storey's tour brought him into direct contact with leading business men in the territories covered by the Pathe branch exchanges located at Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Charlotte, N. C., and Washington, D. C.

"It is only in the Pittsburgh and Cincinnati regions," said Mr. Storey, "that there exists any serious impediment to rapid and full return to business normalcy. There is no lack of confidence, and optimism in these sections is as marked as elsewhere. The only interference is purely mechanical—lack of adequate railway equipment, especially for the transportation of coal to industrial points where the mills would otherwise be running full time.

"The Atlanta territory shows a big improvement. Except for the bollweevil damage done to the abundant cotton crop, the return to full business normalcy in this distinct would be a fact. Nevertheless, conditions are good. The Charlotte section now shows almost a complete return, with the textile and other industries in a condition of health that is reflected by all business lines. And in the Washington district renewed activity in the iron industry is bringing about a rapid recovery, in all directions."

Paramount Plans to Film Famous Novel

George Fitzmaurice's production of Mary Johnston's famous romantic novel, "To Have and to Hold," with Betty Compson and Bert Lytell, is announced by Paramount as its release for October 29.

Paramount is sparing no superlatives in praising this picture, classing it as the most fascinatingly thrilling love story it has ever released. Miss Johnston's novel, with its colorful backgrounds and its lively action, required the most skillful handling and in transferring it to the screen, Paramount says, George Fitzmaurice, working from the script of Ouida Bergere, has done the finest work of his career.

The story is of the early days of Virginia, at the time of King James I. The costumes, Paramount says, are historically correct in every detail, and the same may be said of the settings, the production abounding in big, spectacular scenes.

First All-Color Feature

J. Stuart Blackton's Prizma color photoplay, "The Glorious Adventure," first all-color feature length picture ever made, and starring the beautiful Lady Diana Manners, made a genuine hit when it was shown recently at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, under release by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, the releasing company states.

"A miracle in cinema," said the critic for the Evening Herald. "J. Stewart Blackton, in 'The Glorious Adventure,' has demonstrated that brilliant hues can be effectively used in the photodrama as well as in color travelogues," says the reviewer for the Record.

"'The Glorious Adventure' is infinitely much more of a glorious adventure because it is done in glorious color," said Grace Kingley, writing for the Times. Said the Los Angeles Examiner's critic: "The picture is splendidly directed. Its dramatic effects would stand the test without color. The fire scenes beggar description."

"Vastly different is 'The Glorious Adventure,' a radical departure from the conventional film standards," says the critic for the Evening Express. "Judging from the success of this picture a field momentous in its possibilities has been opened to managerial discretion."

Good News Received of Ingram Picture

The big business being done everywhere by Rex Ingram's production for Metro, "The Prisoner of Zenda," says the releasing company, is indicated by the two following telegrams, out of many which are being received from different sections of the country.

A. Howe, of the Howe & Merrill house in Riverside, Cal., wired, "For the first time in our long experience Monday's receipts exceeded Sunday's. 'The Prisoner of Zenda' started its run on Sunday."

E. A. Phillips, manager of the Garrick Theatre, Fargo, N. D., wired: "'Prisoner of Zenda' one of best pictures we ever played. Did good business against stiff opposition."

F. B. O. Changes Title of Big Picture

The Harry Revier society drama, which was announced recently as a Film Booking Offices of American release under the title of "The Black Domino," will be known as "The Broadway Madonna." The change was decided upon by F. B. O. in order to supply the production with a box-office title which would at the same time perfectly fit the story.

"The Broadway Madonna" is a story of New York and of a beautiful woman, good at heart, who is completely dominated by the superior will of an unscrupulous husband.

"The Broadway Madonna" is the current release of the Film Booking Offices of America. Prints are now in all exchanges, as are the many advertising accessories issued by the F. B. O. advertising and publicity department.

Dependable Film Is in Heavy Demand

"Till We Meet Again," the William Christy Cabanne production, presented by Dependable Pictures Corporation, of which Morris Kohn is president, and just released by Associated Exhibitors, is, the releasing company says, in heavy demand for early booking dates, despite the comparatively brief time which has elapsed since the first announcements were made.

Last week the attraction ran at the big Loew's State, drawing large crowds and winning reviews that were unanimously commendatory, it is stated. It also played during the week, at seven different theatres in New York, besides many leading houses elsewhere.

"The Sheik" Well Liked Abroad

"The Sheik" has added another triumphal premiere to its rapidly growing list of world-wide successes, according to cable advices received from Carl York and W. LeMat, Paramount distributors in Scandinavia, by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The Paramount success was introduced to the public of Stockholm on Monday, October 9, at the Rialto and Sibyllan Theatres, packed houses witnessing every performance despite the strong competition given by three other important premieres.

The same cable also reported that "The Sheik" was playing to record-breaking business in Christiania, where it was shown in the largest theatre.

Vignola Completes "Adam and Eva"

Robert G. Vignola, whose current production, "When Knighthook Was in Flower," is now opening up in the key cities throughout the country, has completed another Marion Davies special, "Adam and Eva." This will be Mr. Vignola's last production until his return to this country in May of next year from a combined business and pleasure trip around the world.

While no definite announcement can be made at this time, it is understood that Mr. Vignola plans to make a number of unusual pictures upon his return, data for which he will gather on his trip. This is one of the reasons why he is undertaking this tour at this time.

Shows Farrar Property

Selznick News, No. 1083, carries exclusive pictures of Geraldine Farrar's house furnishings and costumes, placed on sale at the Fifth Avenue Auction Rooms in New York. It was through the courtesy of Wallace H. Day, who managed the sale, that Selznick was able to obtain some unusual pictures of the belongings of the prima donna. The treasures are valued at $300,000, although because of their association and their sentimental interest they have a much higher value.

Cast Selected for "Drivin' Fool"

Robt. T. Thornby, who is directing the special production of "The Drivin' Fool" featuring Wally Van, has completed his cast for the picture, work on which has been started. Arrangements were recently made by E. D. Newman, head of the Regent Pictures Company, to produce "The Drivin' Fool" at the Christie studios.

Appearing with Wally Van are Patsy Ruth Miller, Alec Francis, Wilton Taylor, and Ramsey Wallace.

Vitagraph Announces Twelve Big Films

One of the highlights in the motion picture news of the week is the announcement of Vitagraph's twelve special productions.

Albert E. Smith, president of this company, obtained the rights to novels and plays from twelve of the world's most famous authors and playwrights—each one a masterpiece from the pen of a master.

It is the intention of Vitagraph to make the series the most ambitiously bold strike for better art in the history of motion pictures. Each one of the twelve big specials will receive the greatest care in casting and production that high-grade talent in every branch can give it.

Following is the list of the big twelve: "The Ninety and Nine," by Ramsay Morris. "Masters of Men," by Morgan Robertson. "A Ready Made Husband," by Rupert Hughes, "The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough. "Hidden House," by Amelie Rives. "The Kidnapped Millionaires," by Frederick Upham Adams. "My Man," by Edith Ellis. "The Man from Brodney's," by George Barr McCutcheon. "A Shop Girl," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. "Steele of the Royal Mounted," by James Oliver Curwood. "The Tenderfoot," by Alfred Henry Lewis. "Who's Who," by Richard Harding Davis.

"This announcement marks the end of several months of strenuous effort," said Mr. Smith. "It is my conviction, after twenty-five years' active production, that the screen deserves, and demands, the best that is humanly posible to create. We have searched a vast field for the material contained in the twelve stories and plays we have just announced. Experts have been employed—men who know what the public wants.

"Although no two of the series are similar, each will be found to contain the necessary elements of universal appeal, the story that has, with only the power of the printed word, achieved fame for its author, should be and can be made, a powerful, irresistible box office attraction.

"I am sure Vitagraph will have established the soundness of this reasoning with the production of these twelve specials."

From its conception, Vitagraph has consistently released high quality productions. Its stars have been guiding ones; its stories among the best. By this step, in undertaking the task of producing twelve masterpieces, with twelve all-star casts, one may expect some interesting developments.

Department Added to Coogan Forces

The Jackie Coogan Productions have established, in addition to their Eastern distributing offices, a field force. This new department consists of experienced salesmen whose duty it is to circulate throughout the entire territory, visiting all exchange managers, sales managers and exhibitors. They will carry a slogan of service to the exhibitor.

Newt Levy has just been added to this newly formed department. Mr. Levy will confine his efforts in the Western field.

The field representatives will be under the direction of Irving M. Lesser, head of the Eastern Jackie Coogan Productions offices. Lesser has added much space to these offices and now maintains a large staff whose duty it is to keep the Coogan contracts and all matters pertaining to the little star's film activities in order.

Joseph Deitch, formerly of Educational, has recently been added to the Coogan Eastern staff.

Harry Rathner and Max Roth are both in the Eastern field, stopping in all key centers, where they are presenting "Oliver Twist" in private exhibitor previews. This private pre-view scheme will be carried out in every key city.

It is understood that the "Oliver Twist" production is being released on open market basis, with the general release date early in November. It is the intention of the field department to have covered the major portion of the territory prior to the general release, acquainting all exhibitors with the feature and generally paving the path for an exceptional showing in every theatre played.

Buys Right

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased the screen rights to a short story by Gerald Beaumont which appeared in the December, 1921, issue of the Red Book Magazine, called "The Gambling Chaplain."

New Selznick Film Opens at Granada

The Selznick home office employees in New York City were considerably interested in the engagement of "Love Is an Awful Thing," starring Owen Moore at the Granada Theatre in San Francisco. The Granada is one of the finest theatres in the country and when the big Selznick picture was booked for an engagement there was quite naturally a great deal of interest concerning just how it would open. General Manager J. S. Woody, of Select Pictures Corporation, received a wire from the Coast city early Monday morning, after the picture had opened Saturday, October14. The wire read: "Love opened Granada Saturday to enormous business. Biggest in town. Crowds waiting until 9:30 to get in and Sunday was even bigger. Newspaper notices great."

Hepworth Comes to United States

Cecil M. Hepworth, pioneer British film producer, arrived in this country on the Majestic on Tuesday, bringing with him a print of "Through Three Reigns," a picture which, it is stated, is probably the only one of its kind in existence. It is a chronicle of the principal events of the past twenty-three years, during the reigns of Queen Victoria, King Edward and King George, and is probably the first time that a motion picture camera has been used as a historian.

Before leaving England Mr. Hepworth finished one of his new pictures, "The Pipes of Pan," from the story by George Dewhurst.

Sounds of Acclaim Go Over Radio

When D. W. Griffith presented his newest photoplay feature, "One Exciting Night," for the first time at the Apollo Theatre, New York, Monday evening, October 23, several hundred thousand radio fans "listened in" to the music of the orchestra, the laughter and applause of the audience. Arrangements for the broadcasting were made with the Bell Telephone Company.

Carey on Fourth F. B. O. Release

Having completed his third picture for release through the Film Booking Offices of America, tentatively titled "The One Man," Harry Carey started immediately on "Canyon of the Fools," the Saturday Evening Post story which was purchased for him by F. B. O.

Carey has already made for F. B. O., under his recent contract, "The Kick-Back," "Good Men and True," by Eugene Manlove Rhodes and "The One Man," the first of which is being already released. "Good Men and True," which is described as one of the most delightful combinations of Western action and spontaneous humor, will be issued in November.

Carey is again directed by Val Paul, who is responsible for his past F. B. O. successes. For his leading woman the F. B. O. star has selected Marguerite Clayton. Others in the cast will be Fred Stanton, Joseph Harris, Jack Curtis, Charles LeMoyne, Vester Pegg, Murdock MacQuarrie Mignonne Golden and Carmen Arselle. "Canyon of the Fools" was adapted for the screen by John W. Grey. William Thornley and Robert DeGrasse are the cinematographers.

Lee Kids to Star in Two Reelers

The Lee Kids, Jane and Katherine, will always be known as the first and most famous of the juvenile screen stars, says Fox. Since leaving the screen Jane and Katherine have been making a triumphant tour in vaudeville and have proved a great success on the spoken stage. And now, says Fox, their screen public is calling for them again.

The answer to this demand is the announcement that a series of Lee Kids' pictures have been made ready by William Fox. One was released the 8th of October and there will be releases in November and December. The titles of the three pictures are "Double Trouble," "Town Terrors" and "The Wise Birds."

These screen comedies are two-reel versions of former feature pictures.

Selecting Cast for "Famous Mrs. Fair"

Preliminary casting of the Fred Niblo production on the screen of "The Famous Mrs. Fair," James Forbes's stage success, has been accomplished. The production will be released by Metro Pictures Corporation.

First work upon "The Famous Mrs. Fair" will begin next week. This is the first of a series of four Fred Niblo productions for Metro. Louis B. Mayer will present them. Mr. Niblo was the director of "Blood and Sand," "The Mark of Zorro" and "The Three Musketeers."

High Praise Given Fairbanks Picture

Douglas Fairbanks, star-producer, has received a mass of commendatory telegrams in the last few days from producers, directors, actors and others in the motion picture industry after they had seen his newest photoplay sensation, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," at the Grauman Theatre, Hollywood. A few of the telegrams received at the Fairbanks apartment at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York City, run as follows:

"Stupendous," said Thomas H. Ince. "I am still gasping and inarticulate."——"A new era has dawned. 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' and 'The Birth of a Nation' is the order now," said Arthur S. Kane, Eastern representative of the Charles Ray organization.

"About 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood'—'Veni, Vidi, Vici,' only we went, we saw, you conquered," telegraphed Charles Ray, star and producer. —— "Sir Douglas of the Lion Heart," said William C. De Mille, "my hat is off to you for the magnificent thing you have done for this new art."

Sid Grauman, who signed the first releasing contract for this picture, telegraphed: "It is an absolute sensation. The audience of two thousand stood up and cheered for fully three minutes at the conclusion of the picture."

"Words would fail me even though my vocabulary be larger to express my admiration and appreciation of your latest glorious achievement," said Erich von Stroheim, director.

"It is the greatest picture ever made and it has made motion pictures a great art," said Elliott Dexter.——"To my mind, the greatest production ever turned over to the screen," said Harry Garson.

Said Clara Kimball Young: "To me it is the last word in motion picture art and will live in the minds of the public for many years to come."——"Congratulations for your wonderful production, and then some," said Gus Inglis, general manager of the Florence Vidor Productions.

"'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' was a sensation, with tremendous applause all through the picture," telegraphed Enid Bennett, leading woman in the feature, and Fred Niblo. "The people stood up and cheered at the finish. Pronounced by everyone the greatest picture ever made."

"New York will have to step some to keep up with 'Robin Hood' in Hollywood," said Wallace Kerrigan.

Wide Exploitation Given Metro Film

Balanced publicity and advertising for Robert Z. Leonard's presentation of Mae Murray in "Broadway Rose" at the New Theatre, Baltimore, brought into service varied exploitation agencies to unusually profitable results, Metro says. Painted signs were placed in prominent parts of the city; many 24-sheets were employed on billboards; an attractive float, mounted on a truck, went through the important streets of the city; and a splendid prologue, inside the theatre itself completed a carefully devised campaign.

The painted signs and the 24-sheets were seen by hundreds of thousands of persons, as they appeared in the most prominent spots in Baltimore. The effect of these was obtained at night as well as by day, since strong electric lights were played upon them in the evening. The prologue devised to introduce the picture gave the audience a suggestion to the atmosphere of the film.

Engage Alice Lake for Moore Special

In the Selznick Pictures Corporation's announcement of plans and policy for the season 1922-23 made some time ago stress was laid on the determination of the company to make each of its big special productions with not only one—but more than one—star in the cast. Particular mention of a forthcoming Selznick picture starring Owen Moore in which Mr. Moore would be supported by a celebrated woman star.

Now comes the definite announcement by President Myron Selznick, of Selznick Pictures Corporation, that in his next picture now in production under the working title of "One Dollar Down," Mr. Moore will have the particularly able assistance of Alice Lake, who has been a star in her own right for the past three or four years.

The Owen Moore picture now being made under the title of "One Dollar Down" is one that has long been in contemplation for the star. The script is by Victor Heerman who is also directing.

First N. Y. Showing of Coogan Film

Jackie Coogan's production of Charles Dickens' "Oliver Twist" will be shown the New York press Friday, October 27. Arrangements have been made whereby the screening will take place at Wurlitzer Hall. A luncheon at the Knickerbocker grill will precede the showing.

"Oliver Twist" will open at the Mark Strand Theatre Sunday, October 29. The general release date is scheduled for November 20, according to Associated First National Pictures.

One of the features of the press showing at Wurlitzer Hall will be the screening prior to the Coogan "Oliver Twist" of an ancient film of the Dickens story made many years ago by Nat Goodwin. Several reels of this picture will be shown and those present will be able to realize the tremendous strides made by the silent drama in the past ten years.

Mark Strand Is Barometer

A condition, in which exhibitors use a theatre as a scale on which to balance the merits of a box office attraction is found in the Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn.

Edward L. Hyman, managing director of this theatre, has been informed that exhibitors throughout Kings and Queens keep in close touch with the pictures, shown at the Strand, and if they are received well there they book them eagerly for their own theatres.

In the case of Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame," Richard Barthelmess in "The Bond Boy," both First Nationals, and many others that did well at the Strand, this held true and they were booked solidly throughout Brooklyn immediately after their Strand engagement, it is said.

Cline to Direct Jackie Coogan

"Toby Tyler," that story of circus life and a wee small lad, will be the next Jackie Coogan production. Arrangements have been concluded between Irving M. Lesser, representing the Jackie Coogan Productions in New York City, and Harper and Brothers, representing the estate of the author of the well known volume.

Work will commence on the production immediately. Eddie Cline will direct.

Farnum Starts New Play

Dustin Farnum, William Fox star, has started the production of "Three Who Paid," from George Owen Baxter's story. It is being directed by Colin Campbell, assisted by Wiliam Wellman. Bessie Love as the leading woman plays a dual role.

Is Making Ready for Filming

Paramount is now completing its preparations for the production of "The Glimpses of the Moon," the successful novel by Edith Wharton, which is rated among the three best sellers of current fiction. Alan Dwan will direct and Bebe Daniels will play the leading feminine role.

Edfrid Bingham wrote the scenario. Nita Naldi has been chosen for one of the leading roles.

Miss Daniels' recently completed "Singed Wings" under the direction of Penrhyn Stanlaws at the Lasky studio. Alan Dwan is the director who recently completed "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood."

Has Two Pictures in Prospect

Marshall Neilan has two pictures in view to produce in association with Goldwyn—Thomas Hardy's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and "The Rear Car," the mystery melodrama by Edward E. Rose which is now in its twelfth week in Los Angeles, where it continues to break box office records, it is stated.

The director has nearly completed the editing and titling of his first production to be made in association with Goldwyn, "The Strangers' Banquet," and will soon be ready to start work on another picture.

Says Film Is Off to Good Start

"The Bootlegger's Daughter," a current release, is off to a good start, according to information given out at Playgoers' main offices in New York. With Enid Bennett starring and Fred Niblo in the leading male role, this attraction presents the most prominent players ever offered in a Playgoers' feature.

This, also, is the first time these two have ever appeared on the screen together, though Mr. Niblo has directed his charming wife in sixteen pictures.

To Direct Next Arliss

Harmon Weight, who directed the last George Arliss picture, "The Man Who Played God," has been engaged to direct the fourth Arliss picture to be produced by Distinctive Pictures Corporation, which is to be put into production about the middle of November. The title of the new picture is "Tatterley," from the novel of that name by Tom Gallon, the English novelist.

To Write Scenario

Forrest Halsey, who wrote the continuity for the last George Arliss picture, "The Man Who Played God," has been engaged by Distinctive Pictures Corporation to write the scenario for "Tatterley," the next picture in which Mr. Arliss will be starred by this company.

"Grandma's Boy" Is Given High Praise

W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated's sales representatives, received the following telegram this week from R. H. Winn, Associated's sales representative in Memphis territory: "Palace Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., reopened tonight with 'Grandma's Boy' to biggest business in history of house. Theatre turned them away fifteen minutes after opening. Indications are will break all records for Little Rock in one week run. Plenty of opposition but others could not draw them away from Lloyd."

Such dispatches telling of exhibitors' record-breaking experiences with the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors' super attraction, produced by Hal Roach, have become the rule rather than the exception, Mr. Frank declared.

Following a successful week's engagement in his Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, Sam Harding held "Grandma's Boy" over for a second week, causing the Kansas City Star to remark: "'Grandma's Boy' is going so well with audiences at the Liberty it is being held for another week. It is one of the best comedies ever shown and can be well recommended for an evening's entertainment for anyone of any age."

Hoyt's Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., was another where "Grandma's Boy" was held over for a second week, and last week was the first of the run in no fewer than sixty-nine other cities and towns of the country, with the exact duration of many of these engagements yet to be determined. During the week the picture appeared also in twenty-two different theatres in New York City, the "Grandma's Boy" showing days in these houses totalling fifty-three between Sunday and the following Saturday.

Special Plans Made for Holiday Season

Special arrangements are being made by the Short Subjects Department of the Universal Sales force for an unusual array of high class comedies for showing during the holiday season, from December 24 to January 2. The period has been designated as Universal Joy Week by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal. Not only will the best Universal comedies of current release be made available for every exhibitor, but many comedies will be offered for showing that week which ordinarily would not be shown for many weeks.

Universal's angle on the Universal Joy Week idea is best explained by Art Schmidt, sales manager of the corporation.

"Past experience has proved that holiday programs should be light, with a general trend towards comedy," said Mr. Schmidt. "In order to help our exhibitor patrons take advantage of this condition, Universal is marshaling all possible comedy material for usage Christmas week.

"As an added service to our exhibitor patrons, we are going to offer them the opportunity for pre-release booking on Universal and Century comedies. This will mean that the exhibitor will be assured of plenty of new, high class comedies for the week.

"Special attention will be paid by Universal salesmen and booker in arranging for programs with child appeal."

Historic Background for Paramount Film

Paramount says that "Java Head," George Melford's picturization of Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, will have more authentic historical background than any other picture ever made by the company. Salem, Mass., which is one of the richest towns, historically, in this country, is the locale of most of the story and more than seventy-five screen players are now there making scenes for the picture.

The old Derby wharf, just as it stood in 1850 as the port for the American clipper ships that sailed to the Far East, has been reconstructed by Paramount technicians. It will be the port of arrival of a three-masted clipper ship on which Captain Gerrit Ammidon brings his Chinese wife. The old customs house, which was built in 1819, will also be shown in the picture, as well as many other places famous in history and noted in romance.

Booking Facilities Are Tripled

The Big U Exchange, Universal's New York distribution center, has tripled its booking facilities, it has been learned. Additional bookers and booking windows have been installed so that the quickest possible service can be given to exhibitors, says W. C. Herrmann, manager of the exchange.

"Pawned" Next Select Production

"Pawned," the big J. Parker Read, Jr., production recently secured for distribution by Select Pictures Corporation, will, in all likelihood, be the next feature to arrive in Select branches throughout the country.

"One Week of Love," co-starring Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle, made by Selznick Pictures Corporation, is also ready but in all probabilities will not be released until a week or two after the "Pawned" production is being exhibited.

Prints on "Pawned" are now in work and will be shipped within the next week or ten days.

Pathe Productions Draw Crowds

Patrons and reviewers were drawn to the Cameo Theatre last week by a program containing two features of unusual and varied attractions, says Pathe. The first was Harold Lloyd's "Grandma's Boy" and the other presenting Will Rogers in his two-reeler, "The Ropin' Fool," the latter announced by Pathe for general release on Oct. 29.

The Cameo Theatre program presented also the other Pathe short subjects—the current Pathe News issue, an Aesop Film Fable and Topics of the Day.

Trade Showings of "Oliver Twist"

Trade showings of Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist," a Sol Lesser production, are being held throughout the county under the auspices of First National, which is releasing it.

The showings, which are for exhibitors and their friends, are taking place on an elaborate scale. The first one was held in Boston Oct. 18. Reports were that the exhibitors were enthusiastic over the picture. Similar reports have come from other sections also.

Keen Interest in Hodkinson Film

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that according to reports received from the various Hodkinson exchanges throughout the territory, keen interest is being shown by exhibitors regarding the Hodkinson special, "The Headless Horseman," or "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," scheduled for early release.

As an exploitation stunt Hodkinson is sending out a special edition of "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" to exhibitors.

Roy Crawford Goes on Trip

Roy Crawford, vice-president and treasurer of Associated Exhibitors, is now in Topeka, Kan., where he went in connection with business interests. He plans to be back in New York about November 1.

Increasing Demand for Baird Pictures

Exhibitors' reports received by Associated Exhibitors indicate a constant and notable spread of the Leah Baird vogue throughout the country, according to a statement made at Associated's home offices. The fourth of the productions featuring this popular player, in representations by Arthur F. Beck and for Associated Exhibitors release, is now under way.

Typical, it is stated, of many recent newspaper comments is this from the Denver Post, which appeared when the showing of "When Husbands Deceive" opened at the Rivoli Theartre in that city: "Miss Baird has written a story that has good interest and is really dramatic in 'When Husbands Deceive,' and plays a most attractive character very well."

The predecessors of this feature were "Don't Doubt Your Wife" and "When the Devil Drives," for each of which the exhibitors' demand continues heavy, Associated's reports.

Universal Plans a Novelty Play

What is said to be a novelty in screen entertainment is being projected by Universal in its adaptation of "Bavu," Earl Carroll's melodrama of the Russian crown jewels now the subject of much controversy. In translating this play to the screen, Universal is planning to take full advantage of its peculiar plot and action. Leon d'Usseau, Universal's Eastern scenario chief, arranged the purchase of the play from Carroll.

No attempt has been made by Universal as yet, to chose a cast for "Bavu." Neither has a director been selected, but Universal will engage, it is said, the best director of melodramas in the business. It is very probable that the name "Bavu" will be changed, as it has no value as a screen title.

Adopts Method to Determine Value

Constance Talmadge in "East is West," a First National Attraction, is scoring a big success in "test runs" throughout the country, according to reports being sent in by exhibitors. The test runs system is a method adopted by First National for determining the exhibition value of a Big Time picture. Showings are held in key centers, and on the basis of the business done in these centers the amount that the picture is expected to gross in the United States is determined.

One of the first of these runs was held at the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Iowa. The following report on it was received at the offices of First National:

"'East is West' opened Des Moines Theatre with holdout at seven o'clock. Lock out as early as this has not occurred in this theatre during any previous engagement this year."

"Thelma" to Be An Early F. B. O. Release

Heralded as the greatest production in which Jane Novak has ever appeared, "Thelma," Chester Bennett's production of Marie Corelli's novel of the same name, has been completed at the R-C Studios in Los Angeles for release through the Film Booking Offices of America.

"Thelma" was first published fifteen years ago and immediately brought its author into world-wide prominence. It remained for many years among the best sellers and today enjoys thousands of readers, being considered one of the masterpieces of literature of the twentieth century.

Realizing the popularity of the story and the value of the drama, Mr. Bennett immediately made plans to produce "Thelma" on the most lavish scale. The story opens in a small Norwegian village, and to obtain the proper results an entire village extending for several blocks was specially built by Mr. Bennett. It was constructed near the Pacific Ocean, several miles north of Santa Monica, where the scenes strongly resemble that of Norway. Boats of special Norwegian design were also built for the ocean scenes of the production.

"Thelma" will also give Miss Novak an opportunity to wear many beautiful gowns before the camera, a distinct change from the outdoor clothes in which she has heretofore appeared in many dramas of the Northwest. The action shifts from Norway to London and many lavish society scenes enhance the production in this sequence. Miss Novak's costumes in these scenes will constitute a veritable fashion show.

Miss Novak is supported by Vernon Steel, June Elvidge, Bert Sprotte, Barbara Tennant, Wedgewood Noel, Peter Burke, Harvey Clark, Jack Rollens, Gordon Mullen and Harry Londsdale. "Thelma" has been scheduled for early release through the Film Booking Offices of America and will be issued by that company with exploitation and advertising aids worthy of the production.

Meighan to Star in B. Tarkington Story

Having successfully brought George Ade into the fold of writers for the screen, Thomas Meighan this week added another to the list of famous authors who are writing for his pictures by persuading Booth Tarkington to write an original Paramount picture in which Mr. Meighan will be starred.

Mr. Tarkington signed a contract with Jesse L. Lasky this week to write an original story which Mr. Meighan will put into production in the near future. Not only will Mr. Tarkington write the story, but he also will collaborate closely with scenario writers and the director in its production, which probably will be at the Long Island studio.

Author of "Clarence," "Alice Adams," "The Magnificent Ambersons," "A Gentleman From Indiana," "Monsieur Beaucaire" and the long series of Penrod stories, Booth Tarkington easily ranks among the first of American novelists. He twice has been awarded the Pulitzer prize for the best American novel, and he is said to have more readers than any other of the serious American writers.

Five Fox Films for Week of October 29

Fox Film Corporation announces five pictures for the week of Oct. 29. Heading the list is the special production, "Who Are My Parents?" the story by the anonymous "Mr. X," which after its extended Fall engagement at the Lyric Theatre, New York, will be released to exhibitors throughout the country. J. Searle Dawley directed the film.

"Tom Mix in Arabia" is also released on Oct. 29. This is heralded by Fox as the best combination of thrills and laughs that Mix has yet appeared in.

Clyde Cook will be seen in his latest special two-reel comedy, "High and Dry." The locale is the desert.

The Sunshine Comedy for the week is "The Haunted House," in which exhibitors will be sure, Fox says, to find the ghost walking. "Cold Turkey" is the title of the new "Mutt and Jeff" release which will be published October 29. It contains many new comedy situations, it is said. Fox News continues its bi-weekly issues.

Mix a Playwright

Tom Mix has become a playwright. In his next William Fox production he not only plays the star role, but he also is co-author of the story. The picture deals with a two-fisted man of the West Coast amidst the fascinating houri of an Egyptian harem. It is being directed by Lynn Reynolds.

DAVID M. HARTFORD

Hartford Wants Outdoor Stories

David M. Hartford has entered the arena as purchaser of successful books and stories for screen production and his negotiations to date will furnish his producing organization with enough material to cover nearly two years of continuous effort.

"Bulldog Carney" by W. A. Fraser, is the first title announced and it is Mr. Hartford's intention to make a series of "Bulldog Carney" features. The excellence of the plots and splendid types of characters involved, plus the actual rugged Canadian locations already decided upon, will give this series a zest that will have the right kind of box office appeal.

With productions of "Back to God's Country," "Nomads of the North," "The Golden Snare," "The Rapids," and "Blue Water," all Canadian stories, to his credit, the successful marketing of this series is a foregone conclusion.

"Dave" is a member of the Theatre Owners' Association and president of the M. P. D. A. of Los Angeles.

Sensational Scenes

The most sensational flood scenes ever shown upon the screen are promised in the forthcoming William Fox special production, "The Town That Forgot God," another screen play by the mysterious "Mr. X." The picture was directed by Harry Millarde, creator of "Over the Hill."

Screen Version Is Completed

Rupert Hughes has completed the screen version for his next picture for Goldwyn, "Souls for Sale," based upon his recently published novel of life among the motion picture players' colony at Hollywood.

Mr. Hughes will direct, edit and title the film himself.

Neilan Buys Rights to Novel by Hardy

Marshall Neilan has purchased the screen rights to "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," the famous novel of Thomas Hardy. The picture will be made in association with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and will be filmed in England and at Goldwyn's studio in Culver City.

Frank Urson, staff director for Mr. Neilan; David Kesson and other members of the company sailed for England last week on the Berengaria to take some of the scenes for "Tess" in the natural locale. In this they will have the cooperation of Thomas Hardy. The scenario for Hardy's novel was made by Dorothy Farnum.

Mr. Neilan has just completed "The Strangers' Banquet," a screen version of a novel by Donn Byrne.

Because of the large amount of preparatory work necessary, Mr. Neilan may produce one other picture before he begins studio work on the Hardy story.

Information Sought About "Suzanna"

The number of queries regarding the progress being made with the editing and titling of "Suzanna," shows a keen interest exists as to whether or not this new Mack Sennett offeirng will surpass in entertainment value the two previous productions in which Mabel Normand was starred under the Sennett banner, says First National which will release the production. Walter McGrail, is seen in the leading male role. Others in the cast are Leon Bary, Winifred Bryson, George Nichols, Eric Mayne, Carl Stockdale, George Cooper, Lon Poff, Evelyn Sherman, Chief Black Hawk and Indian Minnie, of the Cheyenne Tribe.

The director of "Mickey" and "Molly O," F. Richard Jones, is to direct "Suzanna." The entire production was made under the supervision of Mack Sennett.

Trixie Friganza to Be in Title Role

Stills for the last of the Autumn releases for distribution by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation have been received, according to an announcement made by the New York office. The working title for this production is "Mind Over Motor," and it is an adaptation of the famous "Tish" stories by Mary Roberts Rinehart. These stories ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post and were also published in book form.

Trixie Friganza, one of the most talented female comedians on the American stage, will appear in the role of "Tish."

"Mind Over Motor" is being produced by the Ward Lascelle Productions at the West Coast studios and is scheduled for release in November through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Betty Compson Star in Coming Picture

Fifteen tons of equipment valued at $50,000 were shipped from the Lasky studio to Honolulu for the filming of Betty Compson's latest Paramount picture, "The White Flower," a story of modern Hawaii, which is being produced in Honolulu and vicinity by Mrs. Julia Crawford Ivers.

Much of the equipment carried is electrical and will be used to film night scenes against the tropical island settings.

Beside Betty Compson and Mrs. Ivers the party now in Honolulu includes such notable players as Edmund Lowe, Leon Barry, Sylvia Ashton, Arline Pretty, Edward Martindel, Arthur Hoyt and Lilie Phillips.

Not only is Mrs. Ivers directing this Paramount Picture but she also wrote the original screen play of "The White Flower."

"Robin Hood" Opens to Heavy Business

Douglas Fairbanks' latest photoplay, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," opened at Cohan's Grand Opera House, Chicago, recently to great crowds that it was necessary to call the police reserves to quell, so anxious were they to get into the theatre.

Mr. Fairbanks was there, and so was Mary Pickford, and both made little speeches to the audience that packed every inch of space in the house.

For an hour after the Grand was filled to the last space for standees the streets outside were packed with a jostling, elbowing, milling, but entirely good-natured crowd, who hung around in the hope of getting a glimpse of Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks when they left the theatre.

That the public liked "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" was amply demonstrated by the frequent and prolonged outbursts of applause as the scenes were flashed across the silver-sheet. And the reviewers for the Chicago newspapers, were in hearty and unanimous accord with the public viewpoint, it is stated.

"In my opinion it is the greatest picture ever made," said Genevieve Harris in the Chicago Evening Post. Wrote Rob Reel in the Chicago Evening American: "Never has there been such a Robin Hood as Douglas Fairbanks. I daresay there will not soon be such another."

Said Observer in the Chicago Herald and Examiner: "This picture you will want to see, and seeing it you will feel that there has been accomplished in one production a magnificent spectacle, splendid acting and a good tale told in an intensely interesting manner."

"Not in years has there been a photo-spectacle as good as 'Robin Hood,'" said Virginia Dale in the Chicago Daily Journal.

"'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' is Douglas Fairbanks' masterpiece," said Carl Sandburg in the Daily News. "The production is gigantic."

To Give Showing Before Club

A private screening of "The Headless Horseman" or "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" will be given at the Sleepy Hollow Country Club on Saturday, October 28, under the auspices of the club in conjunction with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Completes New Fox Film

Shirley Mason's next starring vehicle, "Shirley of the Circus," has been completed at the William Fox Western studios, according to word from the coast. "Shirley of the Circus," is heralded as Miss Mason's most spectacular production under the Fox banner in the reports of the Western production activities.

Literary "Big Four" Now "U" Scenarists

The recently completed reorganization of the Universal City scenario department sets a new mark for that company in gathering together a larger and better known group of literary lights than has ever before been corraled under the "U" banner, it is stated. Among the well knowns now stepping on the accelerators of their twin-six Remingtons and Underwoods are Raymond L. Schrock, George Randolph Chester, George Bronson Howard, Perley Poore Sheehan and Charles Kenyon.

The latter's latest scenarios are "Bitter Sweet," based on William Dudley Pelley's story and starring Lon Chaney, and "The Power of a Lie," now being directed by George Archainbaud at Universal City.

George Randolph Chester tested the public's desires at the high register point with the "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories. At the height of his success in the magazine field he was led to cast his lot with the screen, and contributed to the new art several original stories and continuities of his own plots.

George Bronson Howard wrote so many thrillers for both screen and magazines a few years ago that he came to be regarded as a master of dramatic punch. He has not been back at the "U" lot long enough in his present connection to have any of his stories completely filmed.

Perley Poore Sheehan's success as a novelist, like that of Chester, preceded his recognition in pictureland by several years. Associated with several of the chief motion picture producers, he gained a wide experience before his recent entry into motion picture plots and continuities he is now writing at Universal City.

Raymond L. Schrock is the newly-appointed scenario editor at Universal City and needs no introduction. His literary skill and executive talent has done much to add to the prestige and eminence of Universal.

"The Long Chance" Plays to Capacity

"The Long Chance," a picturization of Peter B. Kyne's story, featuring Henry B. Walthall, Marjorie Daw and Ralph Graves, is making history for Universal. Since its release a month ago it has been played in leading houses all over the country with unusual success and has received unusual praise from exhibitors, critics and theatre-goers, Universal reports.

Outstanding in the bookings reported for "The Long Chance," was its run over the entire U. B. O. circuit, with headquarters in New York. It played in all the U. B. O. vaudeville houses, in runs varying from three days to a week. The U. B. O. got behind it with a good exploitation campaign, and reported excellent box-office result, says W. C. Herrmann of the Big "U" Exchange.

During its run at the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, it attracted great attention by the excellence of the stars in the cast and the appeal of its story and action.

In the Independent Field

By ROGER FERRI

Newsy Bits

Charles Goetz, manager of the New York exchange of Warner Brothers, spent the week in Buffalo preparatory to the opening of the Warner Exchange in that city.

There is a strong probability that Harry Segal, of the Pioneer Exchange in Boston, and Dave Segal, of Royal Pictures, Inc., of Philadelphia, will open an exchange in New York.

Irving Mack, of Irving Mack & Co., Chicago, is spending the week in New York. Mack is doing a land office business making trailers.

Larry Weingarten, sales manager of Sacred Films, Inc., is en route to New York from the Coast. He will be in New York several months, during which time the firm will establish headquarters here, with Ernest O. Van Pelt in charge.

Leon Rice is now president of the Mission Film Corporation of Los Angeles, according to a despatch from the Coast this week. He has been signed as general manager.

A news despatch from Little Rock, Ark., this week conveyed news to the effect that S. F. Rothstein and J. E. Kiellow, owner of the Arkansas rights to the Dempsey-Carpentier fight, were fined $250 each by the Federal District Court for showing the picture in that State.

J. H. Marks, formerly manager of Metro's Washington exchange, has been installed as manager of Progress Pictures, Inc., of Washington, D. C.

Standard Film Exchange of Pittsburgh, headed by W. J. Weiland, has bought the western Pennsylvania and West Virginia rights to "The Lone Horseman" and "Western Justice," two Westerns released by Arrow Film Corporation.

William Blumenthal left on Oct. 21 on the SS. Oceanic for London, where he will look after the interests of Ben Blumenthal and Export and Import Film Company.

A. Johnny Mack, who for some time has been associated in publicity capacities with Equity Pictures Corporation and Fox Film Corporation, has been appointed publicity and advertising director for the newly formed Smart Films, Inc. of New York.

William B. Laud has completed the editing and cutting of two Fall releases for Second National, featuring Marjorie and James Knight, "One Moment's Temptation" and "Men Who Forget."

Boston exchangemen are weekly commuters to New York. Among those who have been in New York during the past ten days were Sam Grand of Federated, Herman Pifkin of Eastern Film Features, Harry Ascher of the Al Lichtman Exchange and George Focke of Motion Picture Distributing Corporation.

Jesse A. Lovinson, distributor of "Plaything of An Emperor," dealing with a Napoleonic episode, is contemplating several important showings of that picture, one in Atlantic City, N. J., now being arranged for.

While en route to New York from the Coast Joe Sameth sold Eclipse comedies, National poem classics and "For His Sake," a feature.

J. A. Donaldson has opened two exchanges, the Imperial Productions Inc., at Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

The Week in Review

THE independent market is concentrating on big pictures. Without exception every enterprising distributing concern is seeking productions that are big in story, presentation and superlative in quality. Never before were there so many truly big pictures as are found in the open market today. Firms like Al Lichtman, Warner Brothers, Affiliated Distributors, Equity, Arrow Film Corporation and others are demanding the very best. Scores of pictures have been brought to New York from the Coast for showings to distributors and only a very few have passed the severe tests to which productions are being put.

SPEAKING of quality productions recalls the showing of certain pictures at representative first run houses. Weiss Brothers' Artclass special, "After Six Days," for instance, opened at the English Theatre, Indianapolis, on Sunday, to a record-breaking business, a gross that topped the "Way Down East" engagement there by $304. Last week in Philadelphia the Ben Schulberg production, "Rich Men's Wives," set a new mark and repeated at the Rialto Theatre in Providence, R. I. These are only three of the outstanding features of a new and young season that promises to firmly establish the open market with enterprising exhibitors.

ONE particularly encouraging move noticeably being made by independent exchanges concerns the appointment of exploitation men to co-operate with exhibitors in properly publicizing pictures. And this is as it should be. Exhibitors are more and more every day depending on exchanges for co-operation in properly selling the picture to the public. Past records indicate that the most successful exchanges are those that gave this service intelligently and systematically.

Will Re-Issue "Mickey"

Announcement was made this week by H. A. Sheppard, of Tower Film Corporation, 71 West 43rd street, New York City, that "Mickey," the screen sensation of three years ago, will be revived and released on the independent market. The picture is being re-edited and will be shown to the trade late this week.

IF gross receipts records of representative theatres are any criterion of the trend of business, then the motion picture business, true to prospects of several months ago, is in for its greatest year. Never before in the history of the industry have independent pictures grossed the receipts some of our biggest features have piled up during the past few months. Another unquestionably reliable piece of evidence that exhibitors want box office pictures without concern over who makes or releases them.

A CERTAIN well-known film man who contemplates opening an exchange with the financial aid of responsible gentlemen writes for information concerning systems utilized by successful exchanges. Our tip would be to visit such well-conducted exchanges as those operated by Harry Charnas in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit or Pittsburgh, Lou Berman in Philadelphia, Sam Zierler right here in New York, E. K. Brin up in Seattle, Arthur Bromberg down in Atlanta, Sol Lesser in Los Angeles and San Francisco, and Sam Grand in Boston. There are others who can give valuable information. These are successful exchangemen and the newcomer will do well to follow their example.

WITHIN the next two weeks Moving Picture World will have an important announcement to make exclusively substantiating our contention that the open market is this year in for its greatest boost. The announcement will concern one of the best box office stars and producers in the business. Moral: For all the news and information of the open market read Moving Picture World.

SAM MOSCOW of Moscow Films Corporation of Boston is one of those chaps of whom very little is heard. But the fact remains that he is one of the livest hustlers in the business. Sam has an exchange that is, if memory serves us correctly, less than a year old. And yet he has won a place in the exchange list that is the envy of many. Charley Burr of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., contributed no small share to the work accomplished by the New Englander, for pictures like "Sure Fire Flint," "I Am the Law," and "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" are the type of features that have brought exhibitors in droves to the Moscow exchange.

Trade Notes

Warner Brothers' new Buffalo exchange will be located in the new Film Building in North Pearl street. P. H. Smith will be in charge.

Clark Cornelius Corporation filed a certificate of dissolution last week at the offices of the Secretary of State in Albany, N. Y.

Jesse J. Goldburg is now associated in an executive capacity with the newly formed Independent Pictures Corporation.

M. H. Hoffman of Tiffany Productions awarded the $1,000 prize to the Metro district manager doing the greatest amount of business on Mae Murray specials to W. C. Bachemeye of Cincinnati.

According to announcement made this week the first Amalgamated Exchange picture will be released the middle of next month.

Johnny Hines, Mrs. Rodolph Valentino, J. Barney Sherry, Zena Keefe and several other stars appearing in independent pictures accompanied the Loew party to Philadelphia Monday to attend the opening of "The Prisoner of Zenda."

As a result of the organization of metropolitan exhibitors to combat the syndicate bookers, New York independent exchanges are guaranteed 360 days in that section alone.

A certain vaudeville magnate this week sought to effect a tieup with a producer whose figures pictures were to be shown at the vaudeville first. The deal fell through.

L. Lawrence Weber, one of the leading producers in this country, who is associated with Bobby North, will adapt Will Nigh's latest story and production, "Notoriety," to the stage.

Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation of New York reports that the current month promises to be a record-breaker for him. His gross bookings up to Monday exceeded the total for the entire month of October a year ago.

The Masterpiece Special Section of The Exhibitor, David Barrist's live Philadelphia regional, was indeed a masterpiece and a tribute to Mr. Barrist and his able partner, Charley Goodwin.

Business in the Southern States continues improving, according to Arthur Bromberg of the Bromberg exchanges there.

Arrow Film Corporation's special production "Streets of New York," which Burton King produced, with an all-star cast, opens at the State Theatre, Jersey City, N. J. Monday, Nov. 6, instead of Oct. 29, as was originally planned.

In response to letters sent by exchange men relative to the proposed Rialto Exchanges, this department learns that insofar as acquisition of pictures are concerned, it has acquired none and that for the time being at least, the project is at a standstill.

Joe Sameth of Forward Film Distributors, Inc., returned this week from the Coast where he had spent four days, contemplating entering the production field.

Ben Amsterdam and Lon Korson of Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia are observing the tenth anniversary of that popular exchange.

"Rich Men's Wives" Breaks Double Bill Policy and Sets New Records

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The double bill policy for four years has been the one menace in the exhibiting field in New England. For the past two years exhibitors have been seeking means to break this policy, but seemingly without success, for whenever an exhibitor topped his bill with one feature at regular prices his patrons patronized the opposition, with the result that the losses incurred discouraged further experiment. However, the policy cut in on the gross earnings of pictures to such an extent that exhibitors in desperation renewed these experiments. Some signed for super specials, but to offset the absence of a second feature usually filled that spot with a specialty or a personal appearance.

Here in Providence, however, William Mahoney, manager of the Rialto Theatre, determined to break the policy. He convinced himself that the public had to be re-educated, that it could not be expected to be abruptly deprived of a second feature, that the process of reorganization should be gradual. Consequently, last summer he came to New York and signed for the entire Universal Jewels, Metro and Fox super specials. With these productions acquired he returned and later went to Boston where he signed for the Al Lichtman Preferred Productions. With this lineup, he then proceeded to ballyhoo his future offerings. He directed the attention of the public to the fact that such pictures as "Human Hearts," "The Storm," "Monte Cristo," "Nero," "Silver Wings," "The Fast Mail" and "The Prisoner of Zenda" were playing in New York houses at $1.50 top.

This ballyhoo he confined to a trailer about 600 feet in length. He embodied in this trailer an intimate talk explaining the house's policy. Then he opened the season with a crash. He raised the prices on pictures like "The Storm," "The Prisoner of Zenda" and the like. And the public came in droves. Two weeks ago he played "The Prisoner of Zenda" at fifty cents top, a policy that other showmen characterized as suicide. But Mahoney had blazed the trail and the engagement was anything but disastrous.

"The Prisoner of Zenda" was followed last week with "Rich Men's Wives," the Ben Schulberg production released by Al Lichtman Corporation. The picture was cleverly and elaborately exploited. The prices were lowered back to 35 cents top. The Monday afternoon opening brought a full house. The second show was equally as big. Emphasis in advertising on "A Story of the Greatest Kiss the World Has Ever Known" did the trick, for the attendance even at the supper show was the greatest the house had recorded in many years. When the day's receipts were counted it was discovered that the day's record had been equalled.

On Tuesday, the Providence Journal, Evening Bulletin, Providence News and Evening News helped along the draw with splendid reviews, characterizing the production as one of the best ever shown in Providence. One writer went to the extent that it was "the best mother picture shown here." Word of the splendor and ability of the picture to entertain circulated rapidly with the result that the Tuesday business exceeded that of Monday by several hundred dollars. This continued through Wednesday and the remainder of the week. When the week's business was compiled it was shown that "Rich Men's Wives" had not only broken permanently the double bill policy, but also had brought Manager Mahoney's houses the biggest net receipts earned by that theatre at 35 cents top.

And this record was established despite the presence of the stiffest kind of opposition, the other houses in town continuing their double feature policy, the Modern featuring "The Masquerader," the Victory showed two features with Margery Wilson making a personal appearance. Two features jammed the bill at the Strand, while the Emery Theatre programmed seven acts, a feature and news weekly, all for 35 cents top, and the Fays the same number of vaudeville turns, a feature, news weekly and comedy—also for 35 cents.

Smart Films, Inc., Has "Lena Rivers"

General Manager E. Marks Behrman, of Smart Films, Inc., the new independent distributing company, in addition to the Billy West comedies of two reels each which Will Morrissey will direct, will release "Lena Rivers," the love story by Mary J. Holmes, in the independent market. M. Welsh has purchased the rights to the production for New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and District of Columbia. He will road show the picture, ballyhooing it with steam calliope wagons. The Stanley circuit already has booked this feature. A. Johnny Mack, sales manager, is now busy selling territories on the picture.

First Belasco Film Ready

George H. Davis, eastern representative of Belasco Productions, Inc., announced this week that the first of the series of Belasco pictures, "Her Price," had been completed.

Dorothy Phillips in an interesting scene from Elinor Glyn's "The World's a Stage' which Principal Pictures Corporation will soon release.

Arrow Special Sets New Booking Mark

Playing day and date at three Frank Hall houses, the new million-dollar State Theatre in Jersey City, the Ritz, also in Jersey City, and the Strand in Hoboken, "The Streets of New York," directed by Burton King, one of Arrow's special attractions, will be given its premiere presentation beginning October 30.

It is confidently expected that the picture will prove an enormous success and no stone is being left unturned by either the Arrow organization or Mr. Hall's efficient publicity force to insure a representative showing for the production.

"The Streets of New York" is a Burton King production, based on the famous old melodrama of the same name and includes in its cast such players as Edward Earle and Barbara Castleton.

Warner-F. B. O. in Foreign Deal

Gus S. Schlesinger, general manager of Warner Brothers' foreign department, successfully negotiated with the F. B. O. of London, headed by Edward Hulton, prominent British newspaper owner, for the distribution of the entire series of Warner pictures, including "Rags to Riches," "The Beautiful and Damned," "Brass," "Main Street," "Little Heroes of the Street" and "Little Church Around the Corner." Mr. Schlesinger is now in London, and shortly will visit Paris, Vienna, Berlin, The Hague and Holland.

Will Make New Screen Magazine

Announcement was made this week by the Bray Studios, Inc., that it has undertaken the production of a new screen magazine which will be released on the State rights market. J. R. Bray, in announcing this important feature, states that he has appointed correspondents in all parts of the world who are sending to his office new, thrilling and entertaining scenes for this new reel. The Bray Magazine will be issued at the rate of one every other week. The sales of the pictures will be handled by A. Canter.

"World's a Stage" Nov. Release

Definite announcement was made this week by Irving Lesser, eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, that the first feature release of the newly formed producing and distributing company, will be none other than Elinor Glyn's latest story, "The World's a Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips, in a role which, according to Michael Rosenberg, production manager, who arrived on the coast late last week, will be the greatest in which she has appeared.

"After Six Days" Sets New Record

INDIANAPOLIS—(Special)—Following an advertising and exploitation campaign such as this city never before witnessed, "After Six Days," the Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation's Bible spectacle, opened at English's Opera House on Sunday night, October 22, for an engagement of 15 days, ending November 5. Manager Addison Miller, of the English, is authority for the statement that the opening of "After Six Days" broke all box-office records for picture attractions at that house, including D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation." The exploitation campaign, which won considerable newspaper space, was in charge of Bert Ennis, Weiss Brothers' publicity manager, who personally took charge.

The opening performance brought many leading men and women of this city to the theatre. These included Governor McCray, Mayor Shank, of Indianapolis; John Runkelhouse, Judge Collins, Judge Leary, Rabbi Bienenfeld, Capt. English and many others. Members of the clergy also were in attendance. These represented all denominations. The picture is being presented in conjunction with an augmented orchestra of 20 men under the directorship of Herman Arndt.

Ten complete days were given over to display advertisements in advance of "After Six Days." A herald, four pages in three colors, was distributed to 50,000 people in leading Indianapolis hotels as well as sent direct to homes. A special delivery letter was personally mailed to every clergyman and a special electric sign installed on the marguee of the theatre by Weiss brothers. A huge banner announcing the coming of the film stretched across the principal street in the downtown section.

Thousands of one sheets and window cards were used, in additiou to fifty twenty-four sheet stands placed in fifteen of the largest towns surrounding the city of Indianapolis. Department store tie-ups, window displays, etc., were also features of the campaign. Many of the leading independent distributors of the Middle West were present at the premiere at English's. Immediatcly following the run of fifteen days in Indianapolis the picture will be offered by Weiss Brothers to the state right buyers as a special road show attraction. Openings under the management of Artclass Pictures Corporation will follow the present run in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Detroit. The engagement in Indianapolis is under the direction of Max Weiss, with Bert Ennis handling the advertising and exploitation.

PITTSBURGH — (Special)—"Rags to Riches," Gold Seal Exchange's first release, began its career last week, playing weck stands at the Strand, Rowland & Clark's Liberty, Pittsburgh, Stahl at Homestead and the Victory at McKeesport. Business was good at every stand.

YONKERS, N. Y.—(Special)—Warner Brothers' "Rags to Riches" opened at the Strand here Sunday, playing to the best gross recorded by that house, with the indications that the picture would also break the four-day stand mark here. The gross the first day exceeded $1,900, despite the low prices. Several hundred were turned away.

PHILADELPHIA — (Special) — Charles C. Burr Affiliated feature, "Sure Fire Flint," opened at the Victoria Theatre here Monday with Johnny Hines, the star, personally appearing. The picture went over with a bang and indications on Wednesday were that the house mark would be at least tied if not broken. The press critics commented commendahly on the feature.

BOSTON—(Special)—Reports from exhibitors booking the first Al Lichtman special, "Rich Men's Wives," a Ben Schulberg production, are so encouraging that Manager Harry Ascher of the local exchange is looking to this picture to establish a new booking record. Many of those that used "Rich Men's Wives" have already booked "Shadows," the second Ben Schulberg picture.

NEW YORK—"Deserted at the Altar," the Phil Goldstone production, is making a good showing over the Loew circuit, in many cases the grosses doing as much as some of the high-priced winners.

OMAHA, NEB.—(Special)—Because of the fact that Phil Goldstone, producer of the Richard Talmadge pictures and "Deserted at the Altar," is an Omaha man, his pictures are receiving splendid support locally. Local fans are boosters for home talent and are supporting the Talmadge features better than any other city or town in the country.

ROCK ISLAND, ILL.—(Special)—"Adventures of Tarzan," starring Elmo Lincoln, is topping all pictures at the American Theatre and the best drawing card John Koletis has had in the way of serials, according to his own statement.

OSCEOLA, IA. — (Special) — The whole town seemingly turned out to see "Ten Nights in a Barroom," the Arrow special, when it played Frank Criely's Lyric Theatre, with the result that every house record was shattered. Despite very little advertising and no exploitation the production went so big that people had to he turned away, and the picture may be brought back.

OLD LYME, CONN.—(Special)—"Oh, Mabel, Behave," did a flop at the Town Hall. Manager Tom Haynes thinking seriously of asking all who atended the showings of this picture to attend some other performance gratis. Complaints, according to Haynes, are still pouring in.

NEW YORK—Several "Uncle Tom Cabin" pictures are being booked in this sections as road attractions. None, however, has set any record on the blink, in spite of the aggressive ballyhoos.

Garsson Cast in Accident

Rapid progress in the filming of "Way Down South," which one of the Murray W. Garsson companies is making in and around Albany, Georgia, is reported by Harry Diggs, author of the story.

But one untoward incident has marked the company's progress. U. S. Commissioner George F. White of Albany, while driving Director Roy Sheldon, Harry Diggs, and Norma Lee and Ruth Paige, two of the players, back from location, became blinded by the lights of an approaching car and drove his car almost over a high embankment. The machine stopped with the front part suspended in space. The occupants fortunately escaped with a slight shaking up.

All Hail, Ben Amsterdam

It was almost ten years ago that Ben Amsterdam and Lou Korson formed Masterpiece Film Attractions in Philadelphia. Honesty in every transaction with exhibitors and national distributors on whom they were dependent for product, soon established the firm as one of the most formidable in the business. Masterpiece Film Attractions today constitute a monument to the splendid efforts of these two great showmen. Ben's word is his bond. He is more than an exchangeman; he is the friend of every exhibitor. The meteoric progress of his exchange is a tribute to his efforts. Messrs. Amsterdam and Korson need bow to no one in this business. They are a credit to the industry. They have grown with the business—and they will continue growing. Distributors associated with Masterpiece are to be congratulated on their affiliation. They could find no better partners than Amsterdam and Korson. Our congratulations. May the next ten years bring even greater success to two of the most upright, energetic and competent exchangemen in the industry.

"Trade Papers Are Blessing"—Lesser

"Trade paper advertising is a blessing to this industry. Without it I don't know what either producers or distributors would do."

So stated Irving Lesser, eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation this week, in the course of an interview with representatives of the trade press.

Sol Lesser and his brother, Irving, together with Michael Rosenberg, are firm believers in advertising. That advertising, however, says Mr. Irving, must be done in the proper mediums and in this particular instance he points out the value of trade paper advertising. In substance, the statement follows:

"Mr. Sol Lesser and all of us realize the importance of the trade paper, and this firm for one will tell the world in large letters what it has to offer. While there have been some who have attacked the papers, the fact remains that the press of our business is far in advance of either the production or distribution branches of the industry.

"Our trade papers are something of which we can justly feel proud. Principal Pictures Corporation, through its agents in all parts of the world, receives trade publications of other countries. We have carefully studied them and compared them with those published here. And I am satisfied that American motion picture trade publications are so far superior to the foreign ones that it is unfair even to make a comparison.

"Our trade papers, I really believe, constitute a tribute to the American motion picture industry. I said that the trade press is more systematically organized than any other department in our business. I mean just that. We find our trade papers up to date and in some cases far superior to trade papers of other industries. This I know to be a fact.

"When Principal Pictures Corporation was first organized the most important item before us was that concerning advertising. We studied the situation carefully from every angle. We circularized the country and found that exhibitors, while each had his favorite magazine, all depended entirely upon the trade press for information. We tried to ascertain the extent to which this dependency existed and discovered that it was so vital that we could not overlook the trade papers.

"Consequently we determined to arrange our advertising schedule so that we would have advertising space in the trade publications every week. That this was a wise move is proven by the fact that since announcement was first made of our acquisitions, namely, the Irving Cummings production, 'Chicago Sal,' with Alice Lake and Milton Sills, and 'The World's A Stage,' we have received hundreds of inquiries from exhibitors and exchange men.

"The response to our advertising has been so gratifying that we intend to continue our elaborate advertising campaign. We have heard from 22 first run exhibitors who are anxious to book both 'Chicago Sal' and 'The World's A Stage,' and we attribute this response, which by far exceeded our fondest expectations, to our trade paper advertising."

Pittsburgh S. R. Business Booms

PITTSBURGH. — (Special). — Business at the local independent exchanges is on the boom. Exchanges with proven box office attractions are having no trouble getting into the best houses in the territory. Three of the best houses in Pittsburgh last week featured the Warner Brothers' special, "Rags to Riches."

Joe Lefko, manager of the local Federated Exchange, returned to Pittsburgh from Cleveland, where he conferred with Harry Charnas on Al Lichtman pictures. The local exchange is leading the Charnas lineup of Al Lichtman exchanges in the way of gross bookings and if Lefko has his way the race will continue that way.

Harry C. Simeral is busy enlarging his office space and exchange personnel in order to take care of the coming rush of business for the long list of Arrow features and comedies which he has just acquired for distribution in this section.

Columbia Film Exchange, of this city, is in receipt of letters from exhibitors who are loud in their praise of the firm's campaign on the C. C. Burr special, "Sure Fire Flint." The exchange is sending out clever novelties. Salesmen are now out on the road selling dates on this special.

Joe Lefko, of Federated Film Exchange, sent exhibitors in this section new 1922-23 date books, which should come in handy, for they are easily carried about and contain all the space exhibitors want to make memorandums.

Equity, North-Weber, Arrow, Lichtman, C. B. C. and Aywon Close Territorial Deals

From a territorial sales week the past week was an exceedingly busy one. While several of the buyers in town still clamored for "percentage deals" few succeeded in getting such tie-ups, the distributors preferring cash. Louis Baum, of Equity Pictures Corporation, was a particularly busy executive this week, judging from reports that come from his office. The same atmosphere of prosperity dominated the offices of L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North, which is releasing Will Nigh's latest special, "Notoriety." Equity is concentrating on "What's Wrong With the Women?" Equally encouraging "money" reports came from Arrow Film Corporation, Al Lichtman Corporation and Warner Brothers, which firms figured in extensive foreign deals. Nathan Hirsch, of Aywon Film Corporation, Smart Films, Inc., and others also announced sales.

Six territories were disposed of this week by L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North on "Notoriety," which won much high praise from critics. C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation announced the sale of "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" to Si Griever, of Griever Productions, Inc., Chicago, for Indiana and northern Illinois. Equity disposed of the rights on "What's Wrong With the Women?" to Supreme Photoplays, Inc., of Pittsburgh, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Apollo Film Exchange of New York for Greater New York; Sam Grand of Federated Film Exchange, Boston, for New England; Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., Philadelphia, for eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware; Supreme Film Company of Los Angeles for southern California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands; Columbia Film Service, Pittsburgh, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and the Grand-North Exchange, Buffalo, for northern New York.

Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon Film Corporation, reported the following sales: David Mundstuk, of Exclusive Films Exchange, Detroit, for Michigan, the "Big Boy," Willinm's Westerns, three Snowy Bakers, "The Man of Courage," "Master of Beasts," "White Hell," "Blind Love," "Rum Runners" and "The Dawn of Revenge:" Apex Film Service of Pittsburgh for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, "The Rum Runners," "White Hell" and "Oh, Mabel Behave:" Capital Film Exchange of Philadelphia for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, "Lure of the Orient," "Master of Beasts" and six two-reel Jimmy Aubrey comedies; Tri-State Film Exchange of Baltimore, "Lure of the Orient" and six Jimmy Aubrey comedies; Seaboard Film Exchange, of Washington, D. C., "Winning of the West."

Simeral Closes Arrow Deal

H. C. Simeral, who just closed a contract with Arrow Film Corporation, under the terms of which H. C. Simeral Co., Inc., will distribute a large majority of Arrow's productions in western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, reports his first big booking on "Night Life in Hollywood," the great, new Arrow special.

"Night Life" will play the Rialto Theatre, Erie, Pennsylvania, the week beginning November 5.

A Press Book That Serves!

Useless press books—and they are still common—have done more to divert the attention of newspaper editors from motion pictures than any other shortcoming of this business. Exhibitors have submitted supposedly "newsy stories" from these worthless press books to editors, whose intelligence has been many times insulted by the absurdity of the articles in question. They have been impossible with absolutely no news or feature angle. Editors are particular about what they publish in their news or feature columns. And they have resented the batch of worthless bunk submitted to them by exhibitors who, for the want of better material, have clipped the stuff from press books quickly jammed together by incompetents. News editors welcome clever stories, even when acquainted with the fact that they are press agents' yarns. Circus stories are admittedly press agent matter, but editors welcome them because of their feature and news value. Eighty per cent. of the press books are wortnless because of their uselessness.

This week, however, this department came in possession of what, in the opinion of the writer, is the best and most helpful press book ever issued in this business. This press and exploitation campaign book was compiled in its entirety by Lyn Bonner and "Red" Kann, of the Al Lichtman Corporation, and concerns the latest Ben Schulberg special, "Shadows," which has an all-star cast headed by Lon Chaney. This press book is something with which no exhibitor booking "Shadows" can do without. It is a masterpicce and chockful of material that is worth its length in pure gold. There are practical and original exploitation stunts plus magazine feature, news, advance notices, interesting reviews, current run items and shorts in this book together with artistically attractive and well laid-out newspaper advertisements. The color scheme throughout is magnetic and contributes materially toward making this book serve as a sure-fire advance and sales agent for exhibitor and exchange, respectively. Let's have more press books like this one.

New Preferred Picture Called "Mothers-in-Law"

(Exclusive Dispatch)

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—B. P. Schulberg has purchased "Mothers-in-Law," an original story by Agnes Christine Johnston and Frank Dazey, who, incidentally wrote "Rich Men's Wives," the first of the Schulberg pictures to be released through the Al Lichtman Corporation.

"Mothers-in-Law" in all likelihood will follow "Are You a Failure?" and "The Hero" in production. Just who will direct is doubtful at the moment. Schulberg has Tom Forman and Louis Gasnier under contract. Forman has made on picture, "Shadows," and is at work on the second, "Are You a Failure?" Gasnier has completed two "Rich Men's Wives" and "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and is at work on "The Hero."

DALLAS, TEX.—(Special).—Following the showing of "Rich Men's Wives" at the Houston, Fort Worth, Dallas and San Antonio first-runs of the Hoblitzelle circuit, "Rich Men's Wives" will actively start in the Southern territory. The Metropolitan, Sig Samuels' big house in Atlanta, shows the picture the week of October 30 and the Strand in New Orleans the week of October 26.

From the Coast comes word from someone who had an opportunity to see "Shadows" privately that the story and development are unusual. The Lichtman office here is advertising the picture as having "the greatest story ever told in motion pictures." If this new arrival from the Coast is to be believed, all the claims made about the picture which Tom Forman directed are correct. The picture will be shown to an invited audience on Friday evening, October 27, at the Biltmore. Many independents from out of town will be here.

Tom Forman at present is in Eureka, California, shooting scenes for "Are You A Failure?" which B. P. Schulberg is making for ultimate release through the Al Lichtman Corporation. The cast includes Madge Bellamy, Lloyd Hughes, Tom Santschi, Hal Cooley and Hardee Kirkland. This will be Tom's second picture for Preferred, the first being "Shadows." It is reported Forman will direct "Mothers-in-Law" for Preferred.

Aside from the colorful atmosphere which is said to pervade "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," the third Schulberg release through the Al Lichtman Corporation, the photography is understood to be remarkably beautiful. The story opens in Spain and then the locale switches to Louisiana. The nature of the story permits of a number of unusual shots and camera work from different angles.

William A. Seiter, who recently completed the Warner Brothers screen version of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," featuring Marie Prevost, has been engaged by Sam and Jack Warner to direct "The Little Church Around the Corner." E. Mason Hopper will direct. Production of the feature was started last week. Prominent members of the cast include Kenneth Harlan, Hobart Bosworth, Bessie Love, Cyril Chadwick, Marguerite Seddon, Walter Long, Alec Francis and Winter Hall.

According to advices received from the Warner studios, Rapf is engaging an exceptionally large cast of prominent players to interpret the varied number of characters described in the novel. The story deals with the problem of marriage and divorce. The publishers of the novel state that hundreds of thousands of copies have been sold throughout the world and that there is an unending demand from booksellers.

Harry M. Warner, head of the distributing department of the Warner Brothers' enterprises, arrived in Los Angeles early this week. There are several important matters pending here that demand Mr. Warner's personal attention. With Harry M. Warner here, all of the Warner brothers are on the Coast. Jack, Sam, Dave and Abe Warner are here. They went into conference with Harry Rapf, the producer, on Tuesday night. Some important announcement is expected to be made here late this week.

One report here has it that while Frank E. Wood has resigned from Famous Players as production head, he will not start his production activities until late in the year. He plans a trip to New York, and on his return, it is believed, will start independent production. Just how he will distribute his features is not known at this time and is something that will not be made known until after his resignation becomes effective on Nov. 11.

There is some talk in local studios to the effect that J. Parker Read, who is now in New York, will make several pictures for the independent market. According to information unearthed here by the independent correspondent of Moving Picture World, Mr. Parker is in conference with Nathan Hirsch, head of Aywon Film Corporation, who, it is understood, will handle several features that Mr. Parker is reported he will make.

With "Only A Shop Girl," the second of the so-called "Big Six" series that is being made for independent distribution through C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation completed, plans are now being made for the third feature, which Edward Le Saint also will direct. Tully Marshall will appear in the third picture. He plays a leading role in "Only A Shop Girl."

With the completion of his latest production, "Back Fire," Anthony J. Zydias is back at Hollywood. "Back Fire" stars Jack Hoxie. Production will be started shortly on the third Hoxie feature, "Just Travellin'," which Robert North Bradbury will direct. Mr. Zydias has just completed a trip to Texas, where, in Dallas, he sold the Hoxie series to Specialty Film Company.

"Robin Hood, Jr.," is the title of the first of the Clarence Bricker two-reel comedies starring Frankie Lee. This screen adaptation is made from the American Magazine story "Last Night When I Kissed Blanche Thompson," by Bess Aldrich. Franklyn Backer, of East Coast Productions, Inc., of New York, will release this picture together with the rest of the series.

"Web of the Law" Completed

"The Web of the Law," the first of a series of six pictures of the Texas Rangers, has been completed by Director Tom Gibson at the Long Branch, Cal., studios. Patricia Palmer and W. J. Miller play the leading roles with George Sherwood, Harry Belmour, Alfred Hewston, Hal Stephens and Fran Hutter in support.

C. B. C. Second of "Big Six," "Only a Shop Girl," Ready

Actual production was completed this week on "Only a Shopgirl," the picture to follow "More to Be Pitied" on the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation series of Six Box Office Winners.

According to a wire received by Jack Cohn at the New York Distributing office, from Director Edward LeSaint, the final scenes of the feature were shot early this week and the attention of the production forces is now being focussed on getting the picture edited and titled so that it may be sent East for showing and distribution.

Director LeSaint said over the long distance telephone this week that he and producer Harry Cohn were highly enthusiastic over this second feature and that the editing staff has expressed the opinion that it was even better in every way than the first picture, "More to Be Pitied." The story by Charles E. Blaney had loaned itself even better to screening than they had at first thought likely, and the action throughout traced a character development that was not overshadowed by the excellence of the cast.

He said that the players, Estelle Taylor, Mae Busch, Wallace Beery, Tully Marshall, Claire DuBrey, James Morrison, William Scott, Willard Louis and Josephine Adair had worked together like a happy family, their only thought being the success of the finished picture.

Portland, Ore., Exchange Sold

PORTLAND, ORE.—(Special).—L. A. Todd, manager of the Interstate Film Exchange in Portland, Ore., announces that his office has taken over the releases for the Equity and Reliance companies in the Portland district. The Reliance office in Seattle will handle releases for the Interstate exchange in the Seattle district, Todd stated. G. A. Metzger, manager of the Rivoli Theatre in Portland, was formerly manager of the Reliance Distributing Corporation's Portland branch.

After several weeks in the Portland office of the Interstate Film Exchange L. A. Todd is now planning to return to his home in Spokane, Washington.

Producers Security Lineup Is Complete

That Producers' Security Corporation intends operating on an extensive basis this year is made apparent from an announcement emanating from that company this week, wherein features for 1922-23 release are made known. These include a Richard Barthelmess production, "Just a Song at Twilight," with Evelyn Greeley and Pedro De Cardoba. Another special release will be "Madame San Gene," which will be ready for distribution within very short time.

Dorothy Gish's "The Country Flapper," Maclyn Arbuckle in "Mr. Bingle" and "Mr. Potter of Texas," and "In the Night," a mystery picture, are now being offered by independent distributors.

Ricord Gradwell, president of Producers' Security Corporation, is angling for other productions which will be announced within the next few weeks.

U. S. Moving Picture Co. Again Sued

Charges and countercharges figure in the suit brought in the New York Supreme Court by James H. Polk against the United States Moving Picture Corporation and James W. Martin. According to Polk's complaint, who is a Washington, D. C., attorney he alleges breach of contract in that two promissory notes claimed to have been given by the company to himself and Martin, one for $15,500 and the other for $30,000, and $7,500 for legal service Polk alleges he rendered, are unpaid. Polk further claims Martin released to the picture concern all of his interest in the notes and for this reason refused to join him (Polk) in bringing suit.

On the other hand, U. S. Moving Picture Corporation not only denies the Polk claims but sets up a counterclaim. While admitting making of the notes, they say no consideration was given for same and they were obtained by fraud and that property which figured in the giving of the notes alleged by plaintiff to belong to him, in reality belonged to the corporation and purchased with its funds. In its counterclaim the answer avers that plaintiff, through his agent, bought from the company State rights to "Determination" and "Spirit and Flesh" for $13 000, which sum, it is claimed, Polk has not paid.

Controversy over the quality of certain motion picture films has resulted in a suit being brought in the New York Supreme Court by Al Ira Smith against Clark Cornelius Corporation in which damages for breach of contract is asked. In an answer the corporation admits that twelve two-reel outdoor pictures were delivered to them by plaintiff. It is alleged, however, that in the agreement for the pictures plaintiff agreed they would be of a marketable product of a standard commensurate with selling price, and the agreement, it is alleged, was entered into on this understanding without first making a screen examination of the pictures. The answer further alleges that the pictures were not marketable and of a standard greatly inferior to their selling price.

New Hallroom

The title of the latest release of the Hallroom comedies is "All at Sea." Jack Cohn produced this one.

Philly 'Change Has Birthday

PHILADELPHIA.—(Special).—Ben Amsterdam and Louis Korson, owners of the successful Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., are celebrating their tenth anniversary as exchange men in this city. This firm is handling some of the biggest features in the independent market. In addition to operating Masterpiece, Messrs. Amsterdam and Korson also own the Al Lichtman franchise, the Federated Exchange and Equity franchise.

Friction has developed here between David Segal, of Royal Pictures, Inc., and Bob Lynch, of Metro Pictures, Inc., over the franchise announced by Amalgamated Film Exchange of New York as having been given the latter. Segal claims that he should have been given the franchise under a contract he claims was signed in New York in July.

Lou Berman, owner of Independent Film Corporation, releasing the Warner Brothers' productions, has started his campaign on "Rags to Riches." Lou is looking forward to a year that will show twice the business his local exchange made in 1922.

Tony Luchese, of De Luxe Film Exchange, is ballyhooing "Night Life in Hollywood" in great style. Luchese scored again this week when the local exhibitors endorsed his Bible series of one-reelers, on the exhibition of which they will co-operate in this section.

Jesse Platt With Weshner

Increased activity in their publicity and exploitation departments was noted this week in the Weshner-Davidson Agency when this agency announced that Jesse L. Platt, formerly a newspaperman on the Boston American had been added to their staff. Mr. Platt will confine his efforts to trade and newspaper publicity for Weshner Davidson.

Young Warner Publicity Head

Lon Young, who succeeded Eddie Bonns this week as director, advertising and publicity for Warner Brothers, is one of the best-known showmen in the business. He is a pioneer showman who has been in every branch of the business. He has handled special publicity on "Why Girls Leave Home," "School Days" and "Your Best Friend." His wide knowledge of conditions throughout the country prompted Harry M. Warner to create the contract department and placed Young in charge. Mr. Young was born in Providence, R. I. His first show assignment was with the Barnum & Bailey circus on their first invasion of Europe. He toured Europe in vaudeville for seven years, then came to this country and extended his vaudeville tour, doing a magic turn, to the Orient under the name of "Leonzo." He returned and invaded the picture business as exhibitor, operating at various times theatres in Providence, Pawtucket, R. I., Hartford and Norwich, Conn. He was exploitation man for Fox and Select in Philadelphia and went ahead of a number of road attractions. For the past two years he has been with Warner Brothers. A better or more competent successor to Eddie Bonns, who is in charge of Goldwyn's exploitation department, could not have been made and both Mr. Young and Warner Brothers are to be congratulated. Lou Marangella, who has been doing splendid work, will continue as assistant to Mr. Young.

Three scenes from "Streets of New York," directed by Burton King, which Arrow Film Corporation will release. Edward Earle and all star cast appear in this special which opens next week in three Jersey City, N. J., theatres next week.

Warner Pictures Will Not Be Sold in Group to Exhibitors, Says Head

A significant feature in connection with the forthcoming series of the Warner Brothers seven productions, following the unsolicited praise from exhibitors and an unusual number of first-run bookings on "Rags to Riches," a Harry Rapf production, featuring Wesley Barry, was revealed by Harry M. Warner just prior to his departure for the West Coast studios.

Mr. Warner declared that the seven productions will not be sold in group to exhibitors, that each and every picture will be sold on its merit. In following this policy, Mr. Warner said that it is the reverse of the plan pursued by the other organizations in the industry.

"We have received many reports from the exchanges handling our productions," said Mr. Warner, "to the effect that exhibitors are desirous of contracting for the entire seven pictures we will release this season. After considering the many aspects of the situation, we finally concluded that each picture will be sold on its merit.

"We do not believe in throwing all our productions on the exhibitors just because they happen to be eager for one. In other words, strange as this may seem, we want to safeguard an exhibitor's interests. And here's the reason:

"For a long time it has been the policy of other organizations to sell their productions in groups of fifteen, twenty-five or forty pictures, according to a formularized schedule. This means that exhibitors in being forced to buy the entire series aequire pictures that are far below the standard of a few big productions. And they are compelled to pay first-run prices for a mediocre picture fit only for a third-run house.

"We are against this plan. We believe that exhibitors should first realize the box-office value of each one of our pictures before booking it. If they don't want any particular production we will not hold a club over their heads and say: 'This is decidedly wrong,' and we will not knowingly allow any exchange to foist the group series plan in part or in whole upon theatre owners. We are eager to help exhibitors, because their success means our success, and in order to do it properly each picture will be sold on its own merits."

Lionel H. Keene, western representative for Loew's, Inc., after showing "Rags to Riches" at the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, wired the Warner offices as follows: "Wesley Barry at his best in 'Rags to Riches.' This picture has everything the audience wants, heart interest, mystery, thrills, laughs, now and then a tear. Played to capacity business the opening Sunday in face of keen competition. A great picture for the whole family. A splendid picture for the best of theatres."

A large number of first-run theatres have booked the feature, and among them are included the Grand Opera House and Liberty, Pittsburgh; the new million dollar Eastman Theatre, Rochester; Chicago Theatre, Chicago; throughout the A. H. Blank circuit in Iowa and Nebraska; Liberty, Kansas City; Alamo, Louisville, Ky.; Circle, Indianapolis; Loew's State, Boston; American, Troy; Empire, Syracuse; the Pantages circuit, Toronto; Loew's Capitol, Montreal; Loew's Hamilton, Ottawa.

Clergy and Exhibitors Endorse Bible Films

The possibilities of effective tie-ups on the Sacred Films, Inc., Bible series of one-reelers were emphasized this week when those pictures met with the endorsement of the General Convention of the Episcopal Church at Portland, Ore., and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware. That other M. P. T. O. units are contemplating similar action was embodied in a statement made this week by Ernest O. Van Pelt, eastern manager of Sacred Films, Inc.

The Portland, Ore., affair was a notable one with prominent clergymen from all parts of the country in attendance. The President and Mr. Van Pelt, of Sacred Films, Inc., were on hand. Fifteen episodes of the Old Testament was shown to the delegates, who later enthusiastically endorsed it and pledged to do everything in their power to successfully have the pictures shown.

The Pennsylvania exhibitor tie-up and endorsement came in the form of the following resolution, adopted at a meeting of the Board of Managers in Philadelphia, October 20, following a showing of the pictures:

"Resolved that this organization give its fullest endorsement to the films of the Sacred Films, Inc., depicting incidents of the Old Testament, beginning with the Creation, as films that are of the highest type and possessing educational value, not only to the Biblical students but to the general public, and that they will serve as a medium tending to the elevation of the screen and motion picture industry; and further, that this organization take such steps as will be necessary in order to call the attention of its members to these wonderful films."

Zambreno Starts a Busy Season

CHICAGO.—(Special).—Frank Zambreno, president of Progress Pictures Company, stated this week that this Fall he will offer exhibitors in this territory the greatest series of Western he has ever owned. He has already acquired rights to the Franklyn Farnum series, including "When East Comes West," "Smiling Jim," "Wolves of the Border" and "The Fire-Brand." He also will release Richard Talmadge features including "Taking Chances," "The Unknown," "Putting It Over," "The Cub Reporter," "Watch Him Step," "Wildcat Jordan" and "Lucky Dan Western." The others are "The Better Man," "Shadows of Lightning Ridge" and "The Fighting Breed," Col. W. N. Selig pictures.

Progress Pictures Company of Chicago also will release this season the entire output of Arrow Film Corporation of New York, including "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "Night Life in Hollywood," "Streets of New York," the William Fairbanks Westerns, including "Jack Rider," "Cowboy King," "Rounding Up the Law," "Across the Border," "Western Firebrands," "Peaceful Peters," "Sheriff of Sun Dog." He will also have "The Stranger from Canyon Valley" and "Headin' North," with Pete Morrison.

Reports indicate that the Jack Hoxie Westerns in this territory are going particularly strong. Some time ago a report was published in this column to the effect that Reelcraft Exchange was not receiving proper exhibitor patronage. This report was erroneous, for this exchange is setting new records with this series of Jack Hoxie Westerns being produced by Xdias Pictures Corporation.

Si Griever, of Griever Productions, Inc., has purchased the entire six melodramatic productions of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. The first of this series is "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned," which played the Randolph Theatre. The second release will be "Only a Shop Girl." Griever's Exchange will handle these picture. in Illinois and Indiana.

Equity Feature Opens in Detroit

DETROIT.—(Special).—The Equity special, "What's Wrong With the Women?", opened at the Capitol Theatre here on Monday, receiving good local notices from the critics. Business held up exceedingly well all week despite the bitter opposition furnished by other neighboring houses. This picture is making an excellent showing in this territory.

David Mundstuk, who has returned to the picture business under the name Exclusive Exchange, will handle the entire output of Aywon Film Corporation in Michigan. While in New York recently he bought rights to many features which he will release here.

Jess Fishman, manager of the Standard Film Service Exchange here, reports exhibitors usually pleased with the Al Lichtman special, "Rich Men's Wives." Harry Charnas owns the Lichtman franchise in this territory.

James M. Minter is personally supervising the Michigan showings of the Equity special, "What's Wrong With the Women?".

Amalgamated in Franchise Fight

Trouble is brewing over the awarding of two Amalgamated Film Exchange franchises, according to exclusive information brought to the indepedent department of Moving Picture World. The trouble develops through the awarding of franchises to Herman Rifkin, of Eastern Feature Film Distributors, Inc., of Boston, and Bob Lynch, of Metro Exchange in Philadelphia; David Segal, of Royal Pictures, Inc., of Philadelphia, and Harry Segal, of Pioneer Exchange, Boston, in a letter to this department, contend that they are entitled to the Amalgamated franchises. The appended exclusive letter to Moving Picture World from David Segal is self-explanatory:

"In Moving Picture World, dated Oct. 28, received this morning, I noted in the Newsy Bits column you mention that Herman Rifkin of Boston and Bob Lynch of Philadelphia have taken over the franchises that my brother and myself were to get. I am desirous of correcting this article to read to the effect that we have not given up this franchise and that both my brother and myself hold contracts for this franchise, which was signed July 20 and July 21.

"Both my brother and I are going to use every means within our power to make Grossman, Davidson and Kranz live up to their agreement they have with us. I have also served notice on the Metro office. My brother has done the same to Herman Rifkin. We have engaged counsel and intend to fight to the limit for the franchises."

Lichtman Output Abroad Is Sold; Foreign News

Distribution for the entire first year's output of the Al Lichtman Corporation throughout Austria, Hungary, Czecho Slavia, Jugo Slavia, Poland, Roumania, Greece and Turkey has been arranged with Rudolph Vacek. Al Lichtman personally closed the deal, which has been the first of its kind for many months. Chaotic conditions in Eastern Europe have prevented the consummation of film export business and the Lichtman deal opens what has been a closed market.

Vacek's purchase includes "Rich Men's Wives," "Shadows," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," "Are You A Failure?" "The Hero," "Mothers-in-Law" and other releases not yet announced.

Arrow Film Corporation this week sold 26 Arrow comedies, including Speed, X.LNT, Cuelywed and Muriel Ostriche series, to the Canadian Releasing Corporation, which maintains exchanges in Toronto, Montreal and St. Johns.

The Film Renter of London has announced that Pathe Freres have closed a deal whereby they will release the entire output of E Rmelka Corporation of Munich. This is one of the largest German producing firms.

Cecil M. Hepworth arrived in New York on Wednesday with a print of "Through Three Reigns," dealing with the reigns of Queen Victoria, King Edward and King George during the past twenty-three years.

The week of April 23 will be known as Motion Picture Week in England, according to a cablegram from London received this week. Renters abroad will concentrate on all-British productions that week.

Jeff McCarthy, formerly in charge of the D. W. Griffith exploitation forces, who recently returned from a trip to Europe, will return there. He has several important foreign deals under way, it is said.

The life of King Charles XII will be filmed by a Swedish producing company this Fall, according to information from the other side.

Gus S. Schlesinger, export manager of Warner Brothers, writing from London, states that he will make trips to Paris, Vienna, Berlin and other European film centers. He is selling foreign rights to the Warner product.

Bernon Woodle, of the Will Hayes organization, is in Mexico City, Mexico, conferring with officials there relative to obtaining official permission to bring American pictures into that country.

Northwest

Mrs. Nina R. Snyder, manager of the Seattle Film Exchauge, while motoring to Shelton, Wash., to deliver service, sustained a very painful sprain to her left knee, in alighting from the car in the darkness. She stepped into a rut, twisting the leg badly. This accident kept her away from the office on Monday, breaking her record of four years' perfect attendance. The accident happened on the returu trip to Seattle.

F. W. Bowen, of the Seattle Film Exchange, combined business with pleasure on this same trip. He stopped off at Kent on the return and shot a black bear in the woods uear there.

L. K. Brin, manager of Kwality Exchange, is in Denver, Spokane and Butte for a few weeks' trip. He has with him prints of "Rags to Riches" and "A Dangerous Adventure" for screenings.

"Secrets of Paris" Is Selling Rapidly

The impetus to the sales on "Secrets of Paris," the C. C. Burr-Whitman Bennett version of Eugene Sue's "Mysteries of Paris" after its premiere showing last Wednesday evening at the Biltmore Hotel, was in the eyes of its producers a tribute to this feature production with its splendid cast and virile story.

Previous to its showing C. C. Burr had sold about eighty per cent. of all American and foreign rights to this big feature, due primarily to the confidence leading exchangemen throughout the country place in Burr's products; while the line-up of one of the strongest casts of the year which included Lew Cody, Gladys Hulette, Montague Love, Dolores Casinelli, Rose Coghlan, William Collier, Jr., J. Barney Sherry, Effie Shannon, Bradley Barker, Jane Thomas, Walter James and Harry Sothern also aided materially in the sale of the "Secrets of Paris" before the production was half completed.

K. C. Exchange in New Home

KANSAS CITY.—(Special).—W. K. Jenkins, division manager of Enterprise Distributing Corporation, has closed negotiations whereby the local office will be moved to the spacious Bauer Building, on Eighteenth street, between Baltimore avenue and Wyandotte street.

"Flesh and Blood," the Western Exploitation Pictures special, with Lon Chaney starred, is one of the best independent bets in this section, according to exhibitor reports.

While in Kansas City W. K. Jenkins, of Enterprise Distributing Corporation, reported business in the Southeast so great that that concern will have to open a new exchange in Charlotte, N. C.

Business in this section of the country remains unchanged, although in spots a decided improvement is reported by the exhibitors. Locally, business is booming rapidly and encouragingly.

Equity Picture Opens Long Run on Coast

"What's Wrong With the Women," Daniel Carson Goodman's production for Equity Pictures, began its run at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, this week. "What's Wrong With the Women" will occupy the Mission screen for at least four weeks, and according to Progress Features, which is distributing the picture in the California territory, will probably be held over for a longer run. This booking is probably the biggest as yet received by the Goodman production and is one of the longest runs ever accorded an independent production in that territory.

In the opinion of Equity Pictures, "What's Wrong With the Women" is meeting the demands of exhibitors for strong society dramas with a modern theme. This production has the advantage of presenting in a thoroughly human manner, a true picturization of the foibles and follies of American womanhood. It is a picture which critics have welcomed as remarkably truthful in its characterizations, and it has been stated that "What's Wrong With the Women" will be to the screen, what F. Scott Fitzgerald's novels of present-day youth, have been to literature.

Will Nigh Starts on Second; "Notoriety" Going Over Big

The director of "Notoriety," the the smashing eight-reel society drama rapidly being disposed of by L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, has already begun on his second feature for that independent organization. The script as usual was written by Will Nigh, who has written every picture that he has produced, and is in finished form. It is expected that work at the studio will begin next week.

The director read the script to Weber, North and a number of other authorities in film production, and it was unanimously passed upon as a worthy successor to "Notoriety."

The characters that Nigh has built the story about, are again every-day, average human beings representing 99 per cent. of humanity. A strong fight is featured among the many high spots in Nigh's next production. A good sprinkling of comedy also enters into the script. The central theme is as big and universal as "Notoriety." It consists of a brilliant and forceful indictment of city life. Weber & North, the producers and distributors of Nigh's series of pictures for this season, announce that the feature players will be a surprise to the industry when their names will be made public.

The title is "Easy Goin'," but this will be dropped very shortly and the final title substituted.

Harry Charnas, owner of the Standard Film Service Exchanges of Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit and Federated Film Exchange of Pittsburgh, was a visitor at the New York offices of Principle Pictures Company this week. He reported to Irving Lesser, Eastern manager of Principle Pictures Company, that booking records on "Flesh and Blood," starring Lon Chaney, indicate that he will establish a new gross receipts mark with this feature.

The First Graphic Exchange, 257 Franklin Street, Buffalo, has received its product, including the Richard Talmadge and Franklyn Farnum features, "His Nibs" and "Saved by Radio," and Manager Jack Berkowitz is now busy screening the productions for local exhibitors.

Fred M. Zimmerman is boosting "The Man From Beyond" at Nu-Art Exchange in Buffalo and is arranging a series of personal appearances of Harry Houdini in connection with the showing of the film thriller. Houdini is carrying a company of four.

Branford Theatre, Newark, Runs Stunt Into Big State-Wide Athletic Meeting

EXPLOITATION is more or less what you can make it. You can get a piking little window showing, or you can break into the papers and run rings around the town. It all depends.

Recently the Branford Theatre, Newark, got a two weeks' run in one of the daily papers for "The Eternal Flame," more or less on the strength of a few strings of imitation pearls named after the star. Fourteen days of big publicity on the strength of a few small prizes—and imagination.

That was what counted. The prizes were side issues. The big idea was that someone worked up a stunt that was worth real money to all concerned and it put over the play, the pearls and circulation for the Star-Eagle.

Built it Big

D. J. Shepherd, managing director of the house, sold the idea of a girls' athletic meet to the paper. He knew that girl athletes have been much in the public eye of late. He knew that one of the New York minor dailies cleaned up with a diving contest this summer and that readers fell hard for the bare-kneed beauties.

The editor and the circulation manager knew it, too, and they planned a big meet, at which any girl over sixteen was eligible to compete in not more than three events, without entry fee or other charges.

By stressing the fact that Norma Pearls would be the prizes in the different events instead of the usual medals, they worked in the pearl angle without seeming to do so, and made the prizes secure.

Every Day—Fourteen Days

Every day the paper ran an entry blank, and when one of the Olympic record holders came in with her entry, the paper let out a whoop and worked harder than ever. The entries filled rapidly and the more than received, the more noise they made. Daily reference was made to the splendid co-operation of "the theatre people" with the Branford the only house to be mentioned by name, and stress was laid upon the fact that the prizes were to be awarded at the Branford at a theatre party given to the winners, at which Anita Stewart would be the guest of honor.

Plenty of Entries

More than 200 entries were received and the parade around the track before the games was headed by a band and a banner for "The Eternal Flame," which made a direct appeal to the thousands of spectators. Even the other papers had to take pictures of the event.

There was plenty of other publicity for the play, and, of course, the theatre party and the personal appearance of Miss Stewart had to come in for big mention.

The paper got the credit, but the Branford got the money—more money than if Mr. Shepherd had tried to put it over alone.

And it cost little or nothing.

It's getting a trifle cold for a track meet, but there is nothing to prevent an indoor meet if you have an armory or large rink.

But the big point is that if you think hard enough, you can work little into much. That's the moral.

Traded for Cans

It would appear that the refuse cans placed about the streets of Omaha are provided by a civic committee and not by the city. Knowing this, Harry Goldberg, of the Sun, got space on the cans for "The Silent Call" in return for screen publicity for Clean Up Week. It was one of those mutual stunts which leave both sides well pleased and profiting.

Numerous Hook-ups with "Lorna Doone"

With the idea of putting over the forthcoming Tourneur production of Lorna Doone, with Madge Bellamy, the First National exploiteers are planning extensive hook-up campaign. It is old stunting, but a tried device, and they have gone into it elaborately.

There is already a brand of cracker on the market produced by the National Baking Company and known as the Lorna Doone Shortbread. All N. B. C. dealers throughout the country will be hooked to this edible, and independent dealers will be urged to make special displays when the film comes to town.

Of course a plugger song has been arranged for. This is the Lorna Doone Ballad, to be put out by Witmark & Co., and reproduced for the phonograph and mechanical pianos. The Milton Bradley Co. will issue a special edition of the old story, with pictures from the stills and a four-color portrait front and the blurb given to Miss Bellamy. The "blurb," if you do not know, is the descriptive text on the jacket.

The present Norma pearls will become Lorna Doone pearls, and various concerns will attach the name to their wares, including a hat, umbrellas, a fur wrap, several models of gowns, a weave of silks, a type of shoe and a character doll.

Most of these concerns have a national distribution, many of them maintaining numerous branches and agencies, the managers of which will be instructed to co-operate with local exhibitors and the First National exchanges in their territory, and the window grabbing possibilities will be wide and varied, with plenty of advertising matter from the co-operating concerns.

A Football Yell Is Exploitation Idea

For the benefit of managers in college towns, we reproduce a "college yell" written by Willard Frazier, of the Empress Theatre, Paola, Kans. He drilled a squad in this:

You'd better go home,
You'd better go home,
We're going to do it to you;
We'll hit that line—
HIT THAT LINE—
And all go "Smilin' Through."

It was novel and apt, and it made its way to the sporting pages of the local papers without in the least hurting the run of the Talmadge play at the Empress.

The Empress also used the printed bags for two stores and gave the idea a sugar coating by giving these two shops the "exclusive privilege," which put the favor in reverse and made the store grateful. The stores supplied the bags, but the house paid the printing bill.

RUNNING AN IDEA INTO AN EVENT OVER IN NEWARK

Gave Entire Lobby to Serial Chapters

Generally the exhibitor puts all his attention on the first episode of a serial, but O. L. Meister, of the White House Theatre, Milwaukee, felt that "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" deserved more individual treatment, and he picked up the chief feature of each episode to supply a basis for a full lobby display, which would seem to be the first use of a full lobby for other than the first installment of a serial.

Exploits by Chapter

The cut shows the advance work which was also used for the showing of the opening chapter, employing two real Indians. The other is the display for Chapter Six, which depicts, among other things, the death of Abraham Lincoln. For this the tableau in the corner showed Booth jumping from the box to the stage after the fatal shot.

Each of the episodes was similarly treated, the whole forming the most pretentious campaign ever worked on a serial release. It served to make the short chapters real features of the bill and brought important business on the strength of the section of the bill generally considered to be "kid stuff."

Your attractions are what you make them. Mr. Meister made his serial important.

Had Real Waterfall for "The Siren Call"

Miniature displays always get more attention than the larger appeals and Phil Gersdorf, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, knows this, so he made a hummer for "The Siren Call."

A SNAPPY MINIATURE

Back of the opening was a frame of clouds and rocks, each looking pretty much like the other. This was more subdued than the photograph suggests. Back of this was a waterfall with real water, and a tiny canoe, with two dolls perched perilously on the brink of the falls. A pump kept the water in circulation and the cost of the current used was less than would have been the cost of installing a waste pipe.

If you have not already started, hike straight over to the printer and arrange for a supply of Christmas Gift Ticket Books. Then start right in to advertise them on the screen, in the lobby and in your newspaper ads. Sell blocks of them to employers and merchants.

New Style Car Card Better for Autoists

In spite of the tremendous pull of the automobile violation summons, it has been open to the objection that many drivers resent the shock, and their indignation keeps them from responding to the advertisement.

Greenman, of the Fox Liberty Theatre, St. Louis, has overcome this objection with something just as startling and with more of a laugh.

Drivers have been coming back to their cars to find a "This car for sale" sign plastered on the steering wheel or door handle. There was a tiny "is not" at the proper place, with the added explanation that it was not for sale because the driver wanted to use the car to see "A Fool There Was."

Ten thousand cards were put out, and fifty boys were hired with passes to attend to the distribution, so the cost was very small compared with the result. The card is in black on orange red, which precludes reproduction, but the big idea is to make the statement the one big type display and let the rest run fairly small. The tags are printed on both sides, that they may be effective no matter how they lie, and are attached with cords.

THIS BEATS TRAILING A CIRCUS PARADE ON THE SAME LINE

Revival Gave Help to Picture Theatre

Columbus, Ga., had a big revival meeting and the town was all stirred up. Major J. C. Holloway realized that it was going to be tough sledding for a time, with the churches taking half pages on the motion picture pages of the daily papers and advertising on the screens, and he decided that the best way to "fight" would be to work in with the revivalists.

He offered his theatre for a noonday service, and he and Stuart Bird gave out the hymn books as the crowds entered. It was a more available location for a noonday meeting than any of the churches and the offer was appreciated. Perhaps it led the exhorters to be a little less denunciatory of the pictures, and certainly it did not hurt any to have the church people getting used to sitting in the comfortable opera chairs in the Grand.

Sold to an Increase

The net result was that instead of reporting a loss, the house made a 20 percent gain on Constance Talmadge in "The Primitive Lover" at an investment of 75 cents for paint, with which they effected a cave lobby to fit the title. Of course, they could have counted the time of the house painter and part of the cost of the old material, but the real cash outlay was the sum named and the painter was under regular salary and might have been loafing had he not been employed as a cave digger. The title was lettered on a huge club, supposed to be typical of the cave man lover suggested by the name.

Painted Legs Draw Record Utah Crowds

Ninety-nine per cent. of the male population of Salt Lake City parked in front of a window in which a girl was having her legs painted to advertise "Her Gilded Cage" at the Paramount-Empress.

Every day from ten to ten a girl had her legs painted every fifteen minutes, the girl artist being made up as a Japanese, to match the film. While the human canvas was washing up for the next coat of paint, the artist made sketches of Miss Swanson and displayed them to the crowds waiting for the reappearance of the model.

The stunt had to be laid off during the noon hour because the window crowds were ruining the restaurant business. No one went to lunch the first day, so the girls were sent to their own luncheon between twelve and one.

Lashed a Woman to His Lobby Display

Using up old material, so well disguised that it looked like new, J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace Theatre, El Paso, achieved a nice display for Betty Compson in "The Bonded Woman" at a cost of $20, most of which went to pay the girl who stood chained to two posts to carry out the idea of the title. One of the posts was carded "A Bonded Woman until a derelict is redeemed."

He found a girl who looked not unlike the star and hired a wig to complete the resemblance. Though not a professional, she stood so immovable for a considerable time that people would gather to discuss the question as to whether or not she was alive. That helped the ballyhoo not a little.

By and large, Hart ran up the business 40 per cent., and $20 is a long way from being that percentage. It left him a nice profit.

Hart is plugging away at lobbies until he has become the Oscar White of the Southwest—or is Oscar White the J. M. Edgar of the East?

A Perfumed Hell

Fearing that sulphur fumes might repel patronage, Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., used incense in the cauldron set into the lobby to advertise "While Satan Sleeps." He used three burners to get plenty of smoke, and the preachers had to work twice as hard the next Sunday to offset the weakening influence of his version of the inferno.

Large cutout devils squatting in the flames were used for side pieces and the title was carried in individual cutout letters; a device grown very popular in the southwest.

Just As Good

A good stunt can always be revived, as has recently been proven in Rock Island, where the Spencer Square Theatre sent out a man with a placard on his chest reading: "I cannot talk to you. Please do not ask me why." No one did, but the curious who looked back as he passed saw another sign on his back which read, "I am from the Valley of Silent Men."

There was just a change of one word from the old stunt, which had the ballyhoo hailing from "The City of Silent Men." There is not one stunt in a thousand which cannot be as successfully applied to other than the original title.

A Legion of Critics

M. A. Malaney, of the Loew Theatres, Cleveland, made the American Legion his guests at a special showing of "Skin Deep" at the Ohio Theatre, and then played up their statements that it was the best war picture they had ever seen—though just why anyone should wish to call attention to war pictures at this late day is somewhat hazy.

Anyhow the Legion talked a lot of people into the house, according to the veracious P. A.

T. H. Boland, of the Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, made his a midnight matinee and got up a lobby largely composed of war souvenirs.

Accessory Frame in Clever Design

Of course T. B. Noble, Jr., of the Liberty Theatre, Beaumont, Texas, used the gilded cage for Gloria Swanson in that title, but he put a fancy wall barrier in front of it and got a better effect. But we like even better his side frames, one of which is shown here.

THE SIDE DESIGNS

These are flowered lattices with large urns. The lattice is white, the urn a rich blue and the lettering in white. They give a fine effect in the lobby and can be used at frequent intervals with only slight repainting. Mr. Noble does most of his own brush work and presumably invented the design.

Balling It Up

Exploitation for Monte Cristo was all balled up in Topeka. The Isis Theatre sold the newspapers on a costume ball to be held in a popular hall, the dancers to be costumed in the period of the play.

The papers carried daily stills to show prospective contestants the proper dressing and did not charge it against the house publicity. The ball brought out some 900 dancers and numerous spectators and was a high success, which reacted in favor of the Fox production.

Rothapfel Design for East Is West

The cut shows the design used by First National at the private showing of Constance Talmadge in "East is West" at the Ritz-Carlton, New York. The display was made in the alcove of a stairway leading to the ballroom. It can be made over into a lobby or window display with no change other than the use of cutouts where living persons were used in the original.

THE DISPLAY SKETCH

The display is in three planes, the ground row of flowers, to represent the bank, the boat and the backing. There is also a border in front of the backing to conceal red floods which light the drop. The children and the mandarin are lighted by yellow and orange spots hidden by the outline of the boat. It's very simple, yet effective, if well done.

Ballyhoo Book was Pasadena Exploit

Pasadena, which recently developed the automobile "locomotive" for "The Crossroads of New York," comes forward again with a traveling book, used for "The Masquerader." It is not a new stunt, but this photograph shows so clearly the construction that it will prove helpful to others.

The book is mounted on large castors, known to the trade as "truck castors," and is not lifted but pushed along by the man inside, who observes his course through the eyeholes in the mask just below the title. Where there is no chance to use some similar device, scrim can be put over the opening and painted to harmonize with the rest of the cover.

THE PASADENA BOOK

In the band of the back there is a slot, presumably for the distribution of throwaways or heralds.

The back cover should be hinged to permit the chauffeur to get inside without lifting the structure. This was made of compo board, but muslin or canvas on a frame will be lighter and more convenient.

This is a handy prop not only for the title shown but for any book title, and the perambulator can also be hooked to the sale of the book in co-operating stores.

TWO NEW LOBBIES FROM FRANK A. LACEY, OF THE MAJESTIC THEATRE, PORTLAND

It has been some time since we showed any of Mr. Lacey's work, but it is evident that his hand has not yet lost its cunning, for these displays are well up to his standard. That on the left is for "The Belle of Alaska" and offers a novel steamer dock corner piece. On the right is the more conventional display for "The Great Alone," with the foliage hung from the ceiling, where it is out of the way.

GEORGE SCHADE'S LATEST IS THE JUICELESS WIRELESS

A phonograph shoots the message into a box resonator whence it is conveyed through a rubber hose to the funnel set into the sidewalk still frame, the hose being run out of the window to a lamp post and down that to the frame. It's effective.

Juiceless Wireless George Schade's Gag

Always looking for something new, George Schade, of Sandusky, got one of the best weeks in the past year with a very simple outfit consisting chiefly of a phonograph, a rubber hose, a tin horn and a still frame.

For convenience in the photography the outfit is shown complete but the inset shows how the frame was located on the street with a Klansman to see that "One Clear Call" kept working.

The selling talk on the picture was talked into a phonograph record, the tone arm terminating in a box made of bits of old cigar boxes. This served as a resonating chamber to increase the volume of sound.

At the top of the box a conection was made with a hose, which was run out of the second story window, from which the device was worked, to a lamp post and down that to the funnel set into the sign between the word "wireless" and the title of the play. A light wire was run in to give current to a set of bulbs in the top of the frame, to make it look more mysterious.

It was all comparatively simple—much more simple than it sounds, but it made a remarkable business for "One Clear Call" without the use of the more expensive night riders.

Frosted a Window to Frame Snow Set

When Hugo Plath, of the Queen Theatre, Abilene, Tex., made a snow landscape in a window for "Over the Border," he frosted the edges of the pane with whiting to form a frame for the display. It helped the effect and increased the attention value because people came across the street to see why the window was whitened where they might not have noticed the display from that distance.

He used a log hut lobby obtained from a sister house, staining the lights blue, and with the thermometer around a hundred, he brought them in through suggestion.

When there is no danger of excess humidity, you can frost with a saturated solution of alum or epsom salts and get a better effect.

Advance Editorial for Blood and Sand

Because he stood in good repute with the editor, J. G. Evins, of the Odeon Theatre, Savanah, Ga., got an advanced editorial on "Blood and Sand" in the leading paper, the angle being the filming of the classic.

His lobby was draped in solid red to throw into relief two six sheet cutouts, but red and yellow were used for top draping. Windows were obtained in two book stores and a sporting goods house and 1,000 rotos, 2,000 heralds and 100 fan fotos were distributed.

The net result was a five-day run; a record for the Odeon, at an average of $100 a day above the average.

Humorous Stunts Aid "The Curse of Drink"

Although the title does not suggest much humor, Weber and North report that the comedy sheets for "The Curse of Drink" greatly helped the opening in Newark. These sheets show a baby asleep with a nursing bottle in its lap. It seems to sell better than would the most violent posters.

In the same vein one of the Newark newspapers offered tickets for the best titles for a set of cartoons. One showed a man at a bubble fountain getting the water in his eye, another was a mother forcing a child to gulp down castor oil, and a third was a noisy soup eater. The picture title was fitted to all three.

A built-up locomotive, on the lines of the Pasadena perambulator, sold the runaway train idea.

In Newark all of the milk route wagons carried the baby one sheets and did it without charge.

Used All the Angles on "Name of the Law"

Figuring that perhaps the F. B. O. press men knew something about the business, H. B. Clarke, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, followed their lines in putting over "In the Name of the Law." The campaign cost him around $100, but the receipts were bettered by five times that sum.

The fake cameraman was one of the best bets, and a real photograph was made of the chief of police and his staff and shown as a prologue to the film. Numerous three-sheet cutouts of the semaphore policeman were used, and a bus line bannered the rear elevation of all its boats to oblige the police and fake summonses were handed out by a man in police uniform.

Cutouts on trucks, 200 doorknobs and 5,000 miniature newspapers were also used, while the lobby was made noisy with six-pointed stars reading "Police Roundup," "Son's Terrible Dilemma," "Mother's Devotion" and "Father's Grief." It's hard to see how daughter kept out of trouble, but she was not listed on the stars.

Manslaughter Card Made Even Better

THE MANSLAUGHTER CARD

He used a gummed sticker 5 by 8 inches reading with the usual "if you drive recklessly and endanger the lives of others, you may be charged with Manslaughter," but he added, "I pledge myself to drive carefully." Then there was a space for the signature and below "Safety week, auspices Salem Chamber of Commerce."

These stickers were sent out by the Chamber to its members and distributed to others. It became a matter of local pride to have one on your car windshield and the bright red play title was the most conspicuous line on the card.

Mr. Barhydt also encloses an old timer in a four page folder with the front lettered "The reason John Doe doesn't go to the Empire Theatre." Inside is "He is dead" in heavy black type with a twelve point mourning border.

Managers Combined in Drive on Editor

One of the most constructive ideas to come up from the Texas section of Southern Enterprises, is Bill Johnson's report on a stunt of J. B. Robertson, of the Palace Theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark.

When Robertson came into the town he noted that most of the picture news in the local paper was in the paid advertising. When he chatted with the editor about newsy paragraphs, he was turned down cold. The editor didn't want it.

Robertson figured out that it meant as much to the other houses as it did to the Palace, so he interested all of the local men in a concerted drive on the editor. They used the same argument that was set forth in the Des Moines letter originally printed in this department a couple of years ago.

They pointed out to the editor that he gave columns of free space to baseball and none to the pictures. Then they led him over to the news stands and pointed out a multiplicity of fan magazines for the pictures and the one lonesome little squirt of a baseball magazine.

They got the newsdealer to tell how many fan magazines he sold and how few baseball magazines he disposed of.

The local paper now has a daily department of moving picture notes and the readers highly appreciate the service.

THE LABOR DAY FLOAT OF TREMONT TEMPLE, BOSTON

This was the only float allowed in the Labor Day parade in the bean headquarters, and it put over a tableau from "A Little Child Shall Lead Them." But the kiddie did not lead them. The float came at the end of the parade instead of the head.

No Rail Strike

The same engine on a motor truck which advertised "The Crossroads of New York" at the Phillips Theatre, Orlando, Fla., was brought out of the roundhouse for "The Fast Mail," which cuts the cost of the prop to $7 to each picture, and leaves it ready for the next railroad play.

In the lobby H. B. Vincent used the profiles of two engines, one either side of the arch, and above the box office was a cutout of a race horse that was first used on "Thunderclap," with a motor animation. An airplane, electrically propelled, hung from the centre of the lobby and buzzed around in a circle.

The entire exploitation expense was only $24 and the receipts passed the average by more than $100.

Tied to Twins

Add to the already long list the Twins Matinee. Tom Clemmons of the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, gave free admission to all twins of immature age to advertise The Bachelor Daddy. He got more talk than twins out of the stunt, but he cared more for the talk than for the twins, so he did not worry.

Another idea was using the cutout of Meighan and the kiddies and setting them up in a sand pile, which anchored the various pieces securely.

Not long ago the manager of a theatre in western Pennsylvania announced that he did not require the aid of the Paramount exploitation staff. He felt that he could do his own advertising unaided.

The New Title

It is pretty hard to realize that a man could pay the rental on a picture costing what "Blood and Sand" still costs and then not taking the trouble to advertise it properly, but there it stands just as it was in the paper. We had to see the paper before we would believe that any exhibitor could make such a whale of a break. The exhibitor is now in the class with the men in Massachusetts and Chicago who advertised "Bring the children" when they ran Ibsen's "The Doll's House."

A Paramounteer Stirs Up London

George A. Smith, Toronto Paramounteer, rocked London to its very foundations with a press fake. It should be remembered, however, that there is a London in Ontario, and that is the one he picked on.

A letter written on the stationery of the Biltmore Hotel, New York, was sent the mayor offering $250,000 to the city if he would permit Gallardo, champion matador of Spain, to pull off a bullfight in London. Senor Garcia, manager for Gallardo, explained that London was so centrally located he could pull patronage from all over Canada and New York City.

One Fell for It

It was pretty raw, but one paper fell for it. The other kidded it along with the suggestion that they have four fights and make a million or monthly bouts and pay the taxpayers a premium.

Smith kept on, however, and arranged preliminary details with an insurance man to supply a bond of $10,000 to guarantee the performance of any contract Garcia might enter into with the city, and a Syrian cook was installed in the leading hotel, registering as Garcia.

Once more one of the papers fell, but the other announced that Gallardo was a Spanish onion and not a matador and the only wrestle he ever had with the bull was when he bit into a tough steak.

Came on Film

Then the theatre announced that owing to the laws the bull fight could not be given, but that Gallardo would be seen in the person of Valentino in "Blood and Sand."

It was all very nicely done, and the kidding stories in the "wise" paper really did more good than the stolid acceptance of the story by the other, and the play was put over to really readable news stories.

And not satisfied with this, W. A. Lake, of Loew's Theatre, added a fashion show when he played the feature.

Eli Got Them

After spending a lot of time persuading the one Jewish newspaper in Philadelphia to run a daily column of notes about the pictures, the nine neighborhood houses playing in the Jewish section found themselves in a quandary. There was no one to write the copy in Yiddish and the paper would not waste the time translating.

Then it was that Eli M. Orowitz came to the fore. The Philadelphia Paramounteer can write from left to right or from right to left with equal ease, so he is editor of the department with the understanding that the column is one hundred per cent. Paramount. Now the nine houses have to book Paramounts or lose their advantage.

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., turned his entire lobby into a cage for "Her Gilded Cage," and the effect was so striking that many of his patrons told him the lobby alone was worth the price of admission.

Put Lightest Day Next to Saturday

When you can put your lightest day's receipts so far ahead that they come next in rank to the Saturday taking, it sounds like something.

Thursday is the worst day of the week in Birmingham, Ala. L. R. Towns, of the Strand, was closing a run of big pictures, and he wanted the last week to be the largest.

Thursday morning he ran a coupon in all of the papers good for one admission for ten cents. This was repeated in the afternoon papers. The receipts went nearly $200 over the previous day's business, and not only that, but Friday and Saturday both showed a decided increase over the previous week.

As Lem Stewart points out, it will not do to make this a regular stunt, or the people will wait for the bargain day, but on occasion it will help sell a really good picture through word of mouth advertising. It helped pull "Manslaughter" a hundred per cent. over the summer average.

Recharging

J. G. Evins, of the Odeon Theatre, Savannah, Ga., used the diving pearl stunt on The "Man Unconquerable," adding some moth balls to the water to save buying so many imitation pearls.

He reports that the carbonated water can be recharged for this stunt by adding a little potassium bicarbonate. He used fresh soda water only twice daily, adding the potassium from time to time.

Cleverly Done

Irving McDonald, of Fox's Theatre, Springfield, Mass., used a good one on "Grandma's Boy." It is not new, but his method of working it is ahead of the earlier examples.

He had a fake check printed on a slip just large enough to go into a standard window envelope. The name of the recipient was filled in on the typewriter, much as dividend checks are sometimes filled in, and enough of the "Pay to" line and a part of the amount, (which was done to suggest a check writer), showed through the window to give the suggestion that it contained a remittance. A line directed the attention to the other side for endorsements, and this, of course, was the display advertisement for the attraction.

It was sent out under two cent postage, to a more limited class than usual, but it was so well done that probably all of the checks paid a neat profit.

It is a pity that we cannot reproduce the stunt, for it was done with especial care, even to an £ with an s added to live up to the 2912 laughs promised. The main idea, of course, is to suggest a check through the open window.

Eight Foot Dishpan Played for Feature

THE BIG DISHPAN

He figured that the women would fall for the appeal of the dishes and come all bring their men folks with them. The six women in the cut, lined up at the box office, may be phoney, but they had a string of real patrons at the showing times.

Branching Out

Because he has had so many snow lobbies lately, Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., turned to the woods idea for Jan of the "Big Snows," and turned out a lobby forest costing only $7 but which was much admired. And he covered the lobby floor to a depth of four inches with pine needles and dried leaves.

The high light is that he tacked a small banner for the title on the branches, to connect the banner intimately with the display.

Tom Boland, of the Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, is picking on Norma Talmadge's hair now. He interested the beauty shops in the Norma Wave and gave a stage demonstration of how it was done.

Type 'Old Homestead' Makes a Good Display

When "The Old Homestead" was screened for the officials of Southern Enterprises, Lem Stewart figured that it would be a great seller, and the better the advertising, the better the sales. He sat down and doped out an advertisement which he worked out roughly on the typewriter. It was sent to all the managers with the suggestion that the copy be laid so that the selling talk suggest a shingled roof, as shown in his typewritten sketch. He did not realize, by the way, that this, in itself, would make a good advertisement, but intended it only as a suggestion. The ad design itself looked something like the reproduction, the original being on the usual 8½ by 11 inch sheet. After a few suggestions on the composition Lem added: "You may think this is difficult to read. THE FIRST ATTEMPT

The suggestion was given to Assistant Manager Kennedy, of the Howard, Atlanta, before the diagram was complete, and working with what he had, Kennedy gave a rough sketch to the compositor and the result was a one front house, built of straight rule work and one cut from the press book. It looked like the second cut, and will be better for houses not able to afford large spaces. In the original it is three tens.

Then Mr. Kennedy got the sample sketch, and with this to show the compositor, he got a much better effect in four eights. This is only two inches more than the three tens, and yet it is vastly better and well worth the trifling additional cost. One is sketchy, the other fairly complete, and the wider display gives a much better proportioned house. Of course this is time work, and it probably took more time to get this clapboard effect, but if you had the two examples before you in the original size, you could see that there is no comparison as to effect. The wider design is worth several times the other in display effect. There is very little trick composition, and the only difficult part is putting on the roof. In a reproduction in which the same measure is used for the two cuts, the larger display comes out smaller, and will not yield the same effect in the reproduction, but the idea of the cuts is not to offer a comparison for display but merely to show the better effect of the more carefully prepared display and to illustrate the value of having something definite and tangible to show the printer. This is one point where many managers fail to get the best result. They give the compositor only a verbal picture of the effect they desire instead of offering a sketch, no matter how rough, to show the relative display they require. In straight composition much can be done by sketching in the big display lines, lining for the smaller type and putting in the cuts. If the printer were a mind reader, he would be getting more important money in vaudeville. Even the roughest sketch is better than the most elaborate verbal explanation, and in this case Lem's layout is very definite and complete. The general "Old Homestead" display is one using the plan book cuts, but this novelty advertisement will be better in most instances, and the type can be lifted and used for a throwaway, if desired, without additional cost. In an office using stereotype plates, the matrix can be cut out and cast flat after the edition is run off, and this can serve as a plate with any additional matter you may care to use. Personally we think that a typewritten sketch, carefully done, will be even more attractive.

Liked the Lady

Jimquin sends in some smashing good ads for "The Fast Mail," done for the West Coast Theatres while he is waiting around Los Angeles for a really good opening, and adds one for "Nanook of the North" in which it is announced that a real Eskimo woman and a dog will be in the lobby daily, and that the woman will answer all questions about her home land. You can get most any race in Los Angeles, where the pictures demand types and it would not be so simple, say in Iowa, but it shows that Jimquin is always on the job, and it also suggests that you can have an Eskimo woman—if she answers the questions in her native tongue. Get the idea? Patrons, like a sell now and then.

A FINE EXAMPLE OF CUT RESTRAINT FROM LOS ANGELES

And with all the extra space, the only cut work is the figure of Pop Grout and the only hand lettering is in the title and the signature. All of the rest is in type; big, clear, legible type, which puts the message over as no drawn work possibly can. It is a seven tens; close to half a page, and it would be readable in a space one fourth the size. It would not be as conspicuous, and it would not put the picture over as well, but it does not add on a lot of useless facts merely because there is more space to fill. It is merely set in larger faces that the few necessary arguments may get the widest reading. The display speaks for itself. It is capital; about the best work Tom Reed and Hubbard Robinson have given us since they were teamed up a couple of months ago. There is a punch even to the "Please come early," which is more appealing than come early to get a seat. It shows a more personal interest, and even so small a thing may influence the sales.

Sells Crowd Idea on "Blood and Sand"

Evert R. Cummings, of the Fort Armstrong Theatre, Rock Island, Ill., sends in two of his displays for "Blood and Sand." The Sunday space foreshadows the other when he urges them to "Assure yourself a good chair by coming early or attending the matinees," and "This attraction is breaking attendance records everywhere. He does not tell how good the play is, but how large the crowds are, and it is part of mob psychology that they want to get where the other people are. It is this which leads them to stick around for an hour or so in a stand-out. They want to get in all the more

Fussy Designs Still Hurt Grauman Spaces

If the Grauman press agent could steal the Grauman artist's ink bottle and dole out only enough ink to make a proper design, it might be possible to get good Grauman advertisements, but this will never be possible while the artist is permitted to make the sketches and then letter in most of the talk, as well. This is a wider display than the present Grauman style, which runs only two columns wide, and it is so stuffed with copy and picture that it looks like the office towel in a printer's shop. It is dirty—just plain dirty—and when we hear Sig Grauman praised as a great manager sometimes we wonder whether he knows anything about good advertising. About half of this space is given to the personal appearance of Charles W. Cadman, the composer, which explains the design on the right which might be an end view of a wood basket or a lyre. In view of the other facts we think this is as close as the artist can come to a lyre. Still, it might be an overturned piano bench. Whatever it is, it would seem that a composer is worth more than the feature, for the title of the big reeler is shoved up out of the way and you do not get the fact that this is supposed to be an advertisement for "The Valley of Silent Men" until you have soaked up the added attraction. There is something discouraging about these Grauman spaces. They were going very nicely for a time, but the improvement did not continue and now they are worse than they were before. We get cleaner work from the hick towns.

Overcrowded Space Loses Attraction

Trying to do too much in an 85 by three cost the Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, a pretty display for Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame." The title is almost wholly sunk in the flames which surround the letters, and the flames are not necessary. A straight letter would not only have been legible, but it would have done much to help all of the space devoted to the copy. This is small at best, and made seemingly smaller through the division caused by the almost solid black of the title. Of course, Miss Talmadge sells more than the title, but it would be better to sell the star plus the title and at the same time get a better display. We do not like this suggestion of material fire for the title. "The Eternal Flame" was the flame of love and there is no sense in ringing in the fire department. For "Burning Sands" there is better reason for the flaming letters, but there is no cause for conflagration in "The Eternal Flame," which is better typified by the votive candles at the right. The copy is a rather abrupt transition from the poetic to the vernacular. It starts off all right, but it ends with a bump, reading: "Gorgeous to behold, yet never to be held—vivid to love, yet never to be won; pure beauty asking only the fealty of one man, but when he wagered on her faith as he would upon a horse—then things start to happen." It would be almost as fit to use "Oh, boy!" in place of those last five words. Better would be—"then 'The Eternal Flame' lowered, to burn more brightly than ever when true love came." We think that managers make an error in using "Better than 'Smilin' Through,'" as most of them do. This play does not appeal to the same clientele as does the former production. To lead them to expect another "Smilin'

Three Column Space With a Single Cut

Arthur Swanke, who does the publicity work for the Rialto Theatre, El Dorado, Ark., sends in a three fives for "While Satan Sleeps" planned on the use of a single column portrait. With a few pieces of twelve point rule, and a little six, he gets a bold and vigorous effect with no special art work and no intricate composition. His device for working up the cut to a point of importance is very simple, yet effective in the extreme, and he has produced an effect that higher priced men with larger facilities at their command do not achieve. The scheme is by no means new, yet it is not often used in spite of its value. It is a hint to other small house men who want something big and who cannot afford special work and who perhaps cannot utilize the larger cuts, most of which call for a greater investment in space. Mr. Swanke gets about four times the usual value for his space and does it simply.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

CARDIGAN. This is mediocre, not a special. You cannot boost your price and get by with this. Advertising: ones, photos, Am. Legion. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. P. S. Nielsen, Rex Theatre, La Moure, North Dakota.

JAN OF BIG SNOWS. Good picture. But patrons would rather see couple married at ending instead of leaving them to guess. Advertising: ones, three, 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. Good picture, but we failed to take in rental. We were "darn" fools to pay the rental we did. Buy it right or pass it up, is our advice. Advertising: like a circus. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair—never a full house. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Rulcville, Mississippi.

GRANDMA'S BOY. Opened to pleased capacity business and held up for an entire week. No kicks on this picture, which is a money maker for the office. Patronage: general. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

RIDER OF KING LOG. A padded program picture. Was "kidded" here by college students. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good (with vaudeville). J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

F. B. O.

BEYOND THE RAINBOW. An excellent offering. Patrons all pleased with it and made it a point to say so. Advertising: threes, ones and photos. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

GLORY OF CLEMENTINA. Whew! what a "lemon" for us. Couldn't stand to look at it myself. Pleased mighty few. Pauline Frederick is good, but what a story!! Advertising: regular. Patronage: general. Attendance: poor. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. A very good picture. Pleased ninety per cent of the patrons but failed to draw any business. Advertising: window cards, newspaper, slide, lobby, display. Patronage: family. Attendance: fair. William Brill, Rialto Theatre, Akron, Ohio.

LURE OF JADE. Pauline Frederick in six reel production that was acclaimed by all to be excellent. Miss Frederick very popular here. The film was in fine shape, not one misframe: the photography was clear and showed up fine on the screen. Ending was somewhat sad but all left theatre saying picture was much better than general run of films. Advertising: ones, threes, slides, exploited star's name. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MY DAD. Very good Northern story; wonderful scenery. Does not command any higher rental than regular program picture It will get by, but don't advertise as a special. Advertising: two newspapers, lobby. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. G. H. Rardin, America Theatre, Longmont, Colorado.

SEVEN YEARS BAD LUCK. Five reels of laughs. If they like real humor, feed them this. Max Linder is a clever artist and works hard in this production. Advertising: circular, tack cards, program, papers. Patronage: transient. Attendance: stood them up for an hour and a half. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

First National

CAVE GIRL. Not too good: in fact, a common, ordinary picture. The story is not very good and it is not very well put over. Our advice is, lay off of this one. Advertising: two sixes, two threes, six ones, slide, newspaper, 11x14s. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

CHILD THOU GAVEST ME. Wonderful picture but, for me, no pulling power. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK. If your people like melodrama, give them this one. Business good and everyone satisfied. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

DEVIL'S GARDEN. An unreasonable story and did not please. Advertising: all I could get was a slide and set 8 x 10 photos. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: poor. W. H. Goodroad, Strand Theatre, Warren, Minnesota.

ETERNAL FLAME. Norma Talmadge in excellent picture, well produced and well acted, which played to pleased capacity business for whole week. Patronage: general. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ETERNAL FLAME. Most perfect picture to date. Everybody pleased. Booked for four days, extended to full week. Advanced prices. Advertising: window cards, one, three, newspaper space quadrupled. Patronage: best. Attendance: excellent. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

GAS, OIL AND WATER. For me, absolutely poor. Another one like "Barnstormer". You had better have a dark house. Patronage: resort. Attendance: fair. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

HAIL THE WOMAN. One of the very best pictures ever shown in my house. 100% satisfaction for both exhibitor and patron. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. L. Hepp, Idyl Hour Theatre, Greeley, Nebraska.

THE OATH. Will appeal strongly to Jews, but will please most any crowd. Eight reels is about two too many but you can go after business with this one and please what you get. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance, fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

THE OATH. Miriam Cooper in one of her very best. Wonderful attraction. Star especially adapted for this type of show. Advertising: newspaper, ones, threes. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

ONE ARABIAN NIGHT. For me, another can of foreign junk. People walked out in disgust: Pola Negri unpopular. Advertising: extra good. Patronage: family. Attendance: poor. Wm. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

PECK'S BAD BOY. Go the limit on this: will back anything good you can say. Did not break house record, but did fairly well. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. A good comedy but not her best. Seemed to please most of our public. Neither good nor poor. Advertising: large campaign. Patronage: high class. Attendance: good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

PRIMITIVE LOVER. Far better than anything Constance has done in months. It had a plot well suited to the star, with good direction and photography. Some thrills and lots of comedy blended into a very entertaining comedy. Patrons derived more merriment out of this feature than from any other Constance has appeared in heretofore. The aboriginal tactics as applied to their squaws were varied somewhat but accomplished the same results, causing plenty of laughter. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

SCRAMBLED WIVES. Pleasing comedy drama, with color scenes that add novelty. Advertising: posters, press. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Chas W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

SEVENTH DAY. This is a sure money getter. It is one of the best I have played. Advertising: ones, three, six, photos, window cards. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

SILENT CALL. The most wonderful Northern picture yet. Strongheart is wonderful. Bill it big. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

SONNY. A splendid picture that pleased our patrons, but not as good as "Tol'able David." Advertising: extra. Patronage: better class. Attendance: fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

TROUBLE. Give us more like this one and no one will complain about business. Jackie Coogan a most wonderful actor. Picture pleased 100%. School teachers urged children to see it. Advertising: billboards, heralds, photos, slide. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

WEDDING BELLS. Good Constance Talmadge comedy situation. Story well acted and directed. Pleased all. Bought right, will make money. Exploit, Advertising: seven ones, two threes, two sixes, twenty-four, lobby and mailing list. Patronage: small town. Attendance: very good. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

Fox

CHASING THE MOON. Fine Mix picture. Pleased. Advertising: six threes, five ones, slide. Attendance: good. Vincent J. Votalats, Myrtle Theatre, Thornton, Rhode Island.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE. This is something extra good and takes better in the small towns than in the big burgs where they have nothing but a lot of illiterate Hunyaks, Dagos and Kikes and such ilk that wouldn't know Mark Twain from a bale of hay. Patronage: small town. Attendance: very good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

JACKIE. This one very weak. Mason all finished here. Very disappointing: nothing but kicks. If you play it, keep mum, don't exploit. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor; glad of it. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

JUST TONY. This is a 100% picture. Pleased all who saw it and they are still talking about Tony. Tom Mix's horse is well trained. Boost this for all you are worth. Advertising: ones, three, 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: extra good. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

LIGHTS OF THE DESERT. I consider this a good program picture. It pleased 100% so you can't want any more. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

OVER THE HILL. One of the most wonderful pictures shown in my theatre. My patrons could not comment on it more highly or better. They thought the world of this picture. Book it. You cannot go wrong on this one. Advertising: as usual. Patronage: all kinds. Attendance: not too good, on account of fireworks. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

STAGE ROMANCE. A very highly dramatic picture which was enjoyable to about 5% of my patrons. Fox ought to put Farnum back in his kind of picture if he wants to give me the series. Advertising: lobby and billboard. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

UP AND GOING. Tom Mix again, so we can't kick. He plays a mounted Copper this time. Lots of action but no stunts. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Marsden and Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

Between Ourselves

A Get-Together Place Where We Can Talk Things Over

Since Straight From the Shoulder started to become the dependable tip department it is, exhibitors have had a chance to get wise to the pictures that ring the bell—and the ones that toll it, too.

Mr. H. Odom, down in Durant, Mississippi, had a vision of the wider usefulness of these pages when he wrote—you read it some weeks back—that producers ought to profit greatly from a study of your honest and unbuyable opinions.

His wish has come to be fact. The producers are studying these tips. Once the producer of a certain type considered the exhibitor something to unload his stuff on; but now that the exhibitor has a voice and a place to use it—right here!—the producer can see that he can learn something to his advantage from the man who takes his product.

Besides being a guide to the booking of pictures, Straight From the Shoulder has become a source of information that the producer consults.

Proof? He's quoting your opinions and giving them still wider circulation in his advertising matter.

That's appreciation—and a step forward.

VAN

Goldwyn

BOYS WILL BE BOYS. Good, entertaining comedy drama. Will Rogers draws well here. Advertising: newspaper, heralds, lobby display. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. Good production of married life with its trials and tribulations. Lightened with touches of humor that brought down the house. Six reels. Clear photography, good cast, excellently directed. Boys, you won't make a mistake in booking this one; it has splendid entertaining qualities and will please the most discriminating audience. Pleased 90%. Advertising: ones, threes, slide, heralds. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

EARTHBOUND. Fine picture. Well received and considered a good picture by all. Teaches good lesson. Book it. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones, photos, handbills. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. E. E. Stearns, Dew Tell Theatre, South Dayton, New York.

GODLESS MEN. Some of the men liked it, but few of the women did. Too morbid for a good audience picture. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

Hodkinson

FRENCH HEELS. A fairly good picture, but did not draw very well. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

SLIM SHOULDERS. Very artistic fashion show. Irene Castle's best so far. It pleased the better class and displeased the farmers and laboring people. Advertising: double quantity. Patronage: general. Attendance: light. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

Metro

BROADWAY ROSE. Mae Murray in superb picture splendidly played and acted. Full of pep and well worth seeing. Will get the business and fill the cash box, if well exploited. Patronage: general. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CONQUERING POWER. Personally thought it wonderful but picture is too good for average small town audience. Pleased 75%. Ingram is a wonder at selecting cast. Advertising: big. Patronage: s town. Attendance: fair. A. La Valla, munity Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

FOUR HORSEMEN. Almost e the record for this house. Cast e tional. One of the really great pictures the year. Pleased 95%. Advertising: more than average. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

THE HUNCH. Fair picture but no business on it. Gareth Hughes not much of a star for me. Advertising: usual. Patronage: general. Attendance: poor. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

Paramount

BACHELOR DADDY. Most wholesome "kid" picture since "Daddy Long Legs" and deserving the same sort of exploitation. Should please anywhere 100%. Best Saturday house in many weeks. Well worth double run. Tom Meighan did it like a million dollars. Grab this, fellows, and bill it like a circus. Advertising: every way. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very good. J. J. Wood, Redding Theatre, Redding, California.

BLOOD AND SAND. A great picture in every respect and will draw anywhere if advertised. O. K. Advertising: ones, threes, six, twenty-four, inserts. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

BORDERLAND. A picture with a good moral but one which, for me, does not appeal to the majority. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

BOUGHT AND PAID FOR. A good picture that they want, in my case, more than it's worth. It was not a big box-office puller: patrons forget dramatic successes six years old. No great kick on the picture only I was oversold on the picture considering box office draw. Advertising: usual and heralds, mailing list. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

GOOD PROVIDER. With Vera Gordon this is one of the greatest pictures of regular flesh and blood that has ever been shown: with the unsung hero of millions of homes—"father." No mistake will be made in booking this picture. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GHOST IN THE GARRET. A fine comedy: the best we had for some time. It was enjoyed by all. Advertising: photos, ones, slide. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

HER HUSBAND'S TRADEMARK. Just fair. Not what you'd expect from DeMille. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. J. A. Emory, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

IF YOU BELIEVE IT, IT'S SO. Satisfactory for our Sunday program. Opinion was divided as to its merit but personally thought it of considerable value. Famous Players are the wisest of them all, but Meighan needs something a little different if he is to stay popular. He was losing with us until we played him in "Bachelor Daddy" which was a winner. There is a sameness to his acting that gradually sinks him out of the "pulling" class except with those with whom he is a favorite. Patronage: rural town. Attendance: fair. Arthur B. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

INSIDE OF THE CUP. A fine picture with a great lesson. Many said, one of the best and truest pictures we have shown. Get them out to see this, especially church people, and it will help the movie cause. Patronage: rural. Attendance: fair. H. G. [illegible], Community Theatre, Meredith, New [illegible]

MISS LULU BETT. Did not please very well and absolutely had no drawing power. I guess Paramount made some money on this one—I didn't. Advertising: banner, lobby, two daily papers, slide. Patronage: college town. Attendance: poor. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Ardakelphia, Arkansas.

MANSLAUGHTER. Greatest picture this year. Pleased 100%. Public mobbed theatre all week. Advertising: heavy, all kinds. Patronage: all types. Attendance: great. L. R. Barhydt, Federal Theatre, Salem, Massachusetts.

MORAN OF LADY LETTY. Good production. Plenty of action. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Mrs. J. A. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

NICE PEOPLE. This is a good one. Advertising: double order. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: almost double. Wm. H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY. Will Rogers does fine in this, but for some unknown reason or other, it only pleased about 50 per cent. And I can see now where this picture will not have universal appeal. Personally, I thought it a very good and unique picture. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful. Saranac Lake, New York.

THE ORDEAL. Good. A little too suggestive at times but, on the whole, splendid entertainment. Will please the fair sex because of the rich costumes and settings. It has some good acting; Agnes Ayres a good actress. Advertising, lobby, newspaper with cuts, slide, program. Patronage, high class. Attendance, fair. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

THE ORDEAL. Miss Ayres becoming more popular. This picture has average entertainment value. Patronage, better class. Attendance, fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Frankness

I don't mind telling you frankly that my reason for becoming a subscriber is the exhibitor reports column. Keep it up. It's great. With every good wish for your continued success, I am, sincerely yours, Arthur L. Shanahan, Owner, Strand Theatre, Kittery, Maine.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. I saw this picture at Oklahoma City and it appealed to me as extra good. Theodore Roberts helps the cast wonderfully. Jack W. Ogilvie, of Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

RESTLESS SEX. Six like it would put a sprag in my Saturday's business. The producer calls it a special, but I will have to give it another name, (a lot of bunk, for me). Seven reels of film is about all I can say for it. It might have been a good picture if it had been in about four reels and a lot of that filthy, undesirable, degrading drinking love scene that should not be seen by the younger class, left out. J. J. Wright, Rex Theatre, Bevier, Missouri.

SATURDAY NIGHT. Another good DeMille picture, book it. They will probably like it. Patronage, first class. Attendance, fair, account of rain. H. Odom, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

THE SHEIK. Very good picture. Highly pleased the audience. Advertising, special frames, lobby display, trailer. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SOUTH OF SUVA. Mary Miles Minter puts this picture over. It's a good program picture and ought to satisfy everyone. Advertising, ones, three, six, slides, program. Patronage, general. Attendance, fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS. A crackerjack, the book especially good. Good plot, good direction and photography. Call it 90 per cent. Advertising, six twelves, one three, one twenty-four, photos, slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, poor. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

Pathé

NANOOK OF THE NORTH. Talk about specials! Here is a real one. Record business in middle of summer. Every one pleased. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones. Fred J. Jones, Rialto Theatre, Nelson, Nebraska.

Playgoers

Selznick

EVIDENCE. Did not see this picture personally but patrons report it's a dandy production. Would say that it ought to prove a good program attraction. Advertising: one sheet, two threes and slides. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

SHADOWS OF THE SEA. A fine picture, pleased 100%. Good for any program. Advertising: threes, ones, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WAY OF A MAID. Nice little story. Niles Welsh overshadows the star, Elaine Hammerstein. Patrons pleased. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

WHY ANNOUNCE YOUR MARRIAGE? Played this on a Saturday and did not draw very good but nevertheless it's a good program picture that pleased 80%. Advertising: two newspapers, photos, slide, one sheet. Patronage: half of them farmers. Attendance: fair. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

United Artists

THE NUT. A typical and very good Fairbanks that cannot help but chase the blues. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. E. J. Breggers, Gem Theatre, Crystal Falls, Michigan.

WAY DOWN EAST. Big business at increased prices, at a fair rental. Play it—those who haven't—by all means. Put it on right! Don't railroad it through the projectors. Get their special music. Increase your price, "present" it, and you'll clean up. Advertising: usual, with heralds. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: excellent. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WAY DOWN EAST. Played percentage. Just got by. A splendid picture. Had I rented it, would have lost money. Patronage: town. Attendance: fair. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Universal

AFRAID TO FIGHT. A knockout and Frank Mayo in the best picture. Universal gave him the story he should have. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: very good. G. K. Nenes, Liberty Theatre, Miami, Arizona.

FOOLISH WIVES. One of the most elaborate pictures we have ever shown, but just about the poorest story ever written. Good business first day, nothing the second. Strictly a one-day picture. Advertising: newspaper, billboards, heralds, photos, slide. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: as above. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

GALLOPING KID. Another Gibson "knockout". As a Western star he can't be beat for good, consistent stuff. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

MAN TO MAN. One of Carey's best. Second run on this one. Lots of action. Pleases all. Did a very good business for second run picture. Patronage: middle class. Attendance: fair. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

NO WOMAN KNOWS. Had the print been in good condition it would undoubtedly have been a treat for the Jewish crowd. With a perfect print you can clean up with it in a Jewish neighborhood. Advertising: one, threes and photos. Patronage: mostly Jewish. Attendance: good. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

PLAYING WITH FIRE. Another good Universal. Nuf sed. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Leslie Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

STEP ON IT. Hoot Gibson right now is as good as the best for a peppy picture. Advertising: newspaper, slide, posters. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. Arthur G. Pearson, Auditorium Theatre, Melrose, Massachusetts.

THE STORM. A real picture that lives up to all the advance notes. The kind of a story movie fans like. Big and active all the way. A real story and one that gets business. Just say you have it and they come. Attendance: big. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Vitagraph

ISLAND WIVES. Go slow on this one, boys, for there is a stop, look and listen sign on its reading, another South Sea Island picture just like the rest of them. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

Comedies

FROZEN NORTH (First Natl.) Keaton always pleases. This is a satire very well done, showing the real bad man of the arctic, and the Royal Mounted Police. Will please anywhere. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

I DO (Assoc. Exhib). I consider it a knockout. Great! Made for laughing purposes and will produce said laughs. W. L. Landers, Grand Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

LOOK OUT BELOW (Educational) Best comedy for many moons. This one really made them snicker and snort. We so detest pathetic comedy such as so many of them turn out to be. This one has more real laughs and more big stuff than many of the great, high priced comedies. Must hand it to Educational. And don't fail to play "Spooks". Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

MATINEE IDOLS (Federated). This is one of the poorest Hallroom Boys ever made. Very seldom get a bad one; but nothing to this one. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

PALEFACE (First Natl). An excellent two-reel comedy. Keaton is good. H. G. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith,

NOW OR NEVER (Assoc. Exhib.). This three reel Lloyd comedy very good. Better than average. Excitement begins with reel one and lasts until end. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

RGW SHOW (Vitagraph). A knockout of a two reel comedy. Everything in it to make them laugh. If you have a patron that can't laugh at this one, there is something wrong with him—examine his brain. E. T Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

Does His Bit

When C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, La., sends a record sheaf of reports he adds:

"Will give you another list soon, Van, as I intend to return the boys the many favors furnished me through your columns."

IMITATE MR. JOHNSON—IT HELPS

Short Subjects

LEATHER PUSHERS (Universal). Fine. Record, and each drawing better than previous record. Certainly pleasing all. Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Special Subjects

THE CONTRACT (Labor Unions at Fairmont, W. Va.). A very high class and interesting six reeler. Put out for the benefit of Labor, had a better drawing power than "Sheik" or "Humoresque". A good price, and a money maker. As artistic and fine as any special of the market. Ran two days, turned over a thousand away. C. W. Jennings, Francis Theatre, Victoria, Virginia.

"To Have and to Hold"

Paramount Production of Famous Novel Is Masterpiece of Cinema Art.
Reviewed by J. M. Shellman

George Fitzmaurice's production of Mary Johnston's romantic novel is in a class by itself and should be placed among the big ten cinema features of the year. From the first flash to the closing scenes this film masterpiece carries a convincing atmosphere that makes the spectator feel as if he were in the story. The delightful beginning with the flash of the old volume showing the title page and the artistic title work on scrolls of paper carry a distinct psychological impression.

There is realism, romance and action. Each situation builds logically upon the preceding one with a coherence that grips the spectator and holds him spellbound until the final fade-out. Mr. Fitzmaurice has used to advantage all the resources of the Paramount organization and handled the production with an ability that stamps him a master director. Every dramatic situation is heightened by subtle touches of humor skillfully injected. The scenes of the fight between two ancient galleons, the powerfully gripping scenes in the powder magazine of the privateer just prior to the blowing up of the ship should prove thrilling enough for anyone.

The sets are massive and designed with skillful insight and rare knowledge of the period, and the costumes are gorgeous, the lighting effects used for the court of James I are wonderful examples of artistic skill, and there is one of the most realistic night rain, lightning and thunder storms ever seen on the screen; this is one of the outstanding features of the picture.

Betty Compson and Bert Lytell, the featured players, enact their roles realistically, especially the emotional situations, which they handle with extraordinary dexterity.

Theodore Kosloff was exceptionally fine as Lord Carnal the court gallant and erstwhile favorite of King James, while Raymond Hatton played the King with a deep insight for detailed character work. The sword work between Bert Lytell and Theodore Kosloff and between Lytell and the three pirates, was dangerous and convincing. The duel at the climax was extra fine.

W. J. Ferguson was delightful and the remainder of the cast even to the smaller roles, were exceptionally good. While Lucian Littlefield was good as the Duke of Buckingham, students of history who have found him painted as a shrewd, capable statesman, skilled in court intrigue, may criticise the weakness of the character.

It is a fierce fighting and furious flaming vehicle with thrills, heart throbs and suspense, that should prove a fine attraction.

Based on Novel by Mary Johnston.
Adaptation by Ouida Bergere.
Directed by George Fitzmaurice.
Length, 7,518 Feet.

The Story

In order to escape having to marry Lord Carnal, Lady Jocelyn Leigh runs away from the English Court, joins a ship of prospective brides bound for Virginia. On arrival she is roughly handled by a brutal fellow who picks her out for his bride, but is rescued by Captain Ralph Percy, and marries him but remains a wife in name only, as she continues to scorn Percy.

Lord Carnal follows Jocelyn to Virginia and has her and Percy arrested, and prepares to take Jocelyn back to England. Percy escapes, goes to Carnal's ship, rescues Jocelyn, overpowers Carnal and all start off in a small boat. A storm arises and the four are shipwrecked on an island on which there is a pirate gang.

Percy announces he is a celebrated pirate leader and takes charge of the band. A treasure ship comes in sight and when the crew starts to fire on it, Percy takes Carnal below and threatens to blow up the ship if a gun is fired. The magazines finally explode and the four escape on a raft and reach England, finally aboard another ship.

The engagement of Jocelyn and Carnal is again announced, but the Duke of Buckingham takes a hand and manoeuvers so that Carnal and Percy fight a duel. Carnal is beaten and takes poison and the wedding then proceeds with Percy as the bridegroom.

"Wonders of the Sea"

(Williamson-Submarine—Two Reels)

Decidedly out of the ordinary and intensely interesting are the pictures contained in this subject, which were filmed on the bed of the Atlantic Ocean, in the West Indies. They were filmed by J. W. Williamson by means of a unique device, which enables the cameraman to go down in a tube to the ocean bottom and, through a window, film the ocean bottom. The fact that pictures taken with this device have been used previously does not detract from the interest. There are scenes showing two men in divers' suits walking along the ocean bed with strange deep-sea plants growing around them and numerous fish swimming about: there is an encounter with a large poisonous moray, and also an attack on an octopus that sends out an inky fluid coloring the water, which prevents a view of the fish itself. A novel section shows an attractive girl who, by means of an eighteen-pound weight, reaches the bottom without using diving apparatus and swims around. She repeats this several times. This should prove an attractive offering on any program.—C. S. S.

"Till We Meet Again"

An Appealing Picture Made by William Christy Cabanne, Starring Mae Marsh—An Associated Exhibitors' Release
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Observed from any one of its several angles of appeal, this Associated Exhibitors' production, "Till We Meet Again", has the popular note. It brings back a charming star, Mae Marsh, after a considerable lapse of time. It has an appealing story treated with pathos, humor and a dash of the melodramatic, pictured against a variety of interesting backgrounds. It has been produced with a definite understanding of what is generally liked on the screen and should be satisfying on any program.

The star in one of her most characteristic roles again expresses an art that is peculiarly her own. Her moments of pathos are handled as no one else succeeds in doing. Slightly over-emphasized, however, this particular gift of hers loses some of its appeal. There are too many close-ups of the same expressions. This does not prevent her return to the screen from being an important event and her many friends will find much to enjoy in her performance.

Showing a keen sense of showmanship values, the picture includes several of the tried-and-true angles of interest. The heroine who escapes from an insane asylum wanders into a deserted country house inhabited by a gang of crooks. The romantic interest begins. An attractive cabaret scene appeals because of a Spanish dance and a display of fine lighting. When the beautiful home of the girl's protector is invaded by burglars, the call for help via radio and the response is a big thrill. The cast includes Martha Mansfield and Norman Kerry.

The Cast

Marion Bates.....Mae Marsh
Robert Carter.....Norman Kerry
Henrietta Carter.....Martha Mansfield
Mrs. Whitney Carter....Julia Swayne Gordon
Jim Brennan.....Walter Miller
Arthur Montrose.....J. Barney Sherry
Sam McGuire.....Tammany Young
Clarence De Vere.....Dick Lee
Pete Morrison.....Danny Hayes
Curley Jensen.....Fred Kalgren

Story by William Christy Cabanne.
Scenario by Edmund Goulding.
Direction by William Christy Cabanne.
Length, 5,822 Feet.

The Story

Marion Bates is placed in an insane asylum by her guardian, who steals her fortune. She escapes and is befriended by a gang of crooks led by Jim Brennan. Her helplessness appeals deeply to his better nature and he lets her go.

She finds her only friends, the Carters. They, too, have been deceived by her guardian, Montrose. Robert Carter loves Marion and secretly secures from Montrose the papers Marion signed. Jim's gang breaks into Montrose's house and he hires them to steal the papers from Carter. There Jim comes face to face with Marion and learns that his contemplated robbery will harm the girl he loves and the man who had valiantly saved his life in France when he was a doughboy and Carter a captain. Jim defends them from the gang, losing his life in serving the two he cared for most.

Exploitation Angles: Herald the return to the screen of this charming star and make enough of a fuss to pull in the old-timers and the new star hunters.

"Trail's End"

Franklyn Farnum Star in W. M. Smith Production of Arthur Somers Roche Story.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

This is the most entertaining of the W. M. Smith series of productions for Franklyn Farnum that has yet been released. The story itself is superior, and the treatment involves more suspense.

Arthur Somers Roche is the author of the short story from which the scenario has been adapted. It is the story of a hunted man, wanted, he fears, for murder, but in reality because he has fallen heir to a vast fortune. The plot has been entertainingly developed. Closer attention has been paid to dramatic construction than to meaningless heroics, and the result should be a broader appeal than usual.

The opening, introducing the stranger and following with the unexplained flight of the man who has already won admiration by befriending the hero of the story, is successful in starting the suspense. From then on there is plenty of shooting, a few moments of comedy and a pleasant love story, which Peggy O'Day makes more pleasant. The cast, except for one or two new names, is the same which has been used in recent Franklyn Farnum pictures, a fact which registers satisfactorily in their team work. The direction is unusually good.

The Cast

Wilder Armstrong.....Franklyn Farnum
Edith Kilgallen.....Peggy O'Day
Frayne.....George Reehm
Stanley.....Al Hart
Cahoots.....Shorty Hamilton
Molly.....Genevieve Berte

Story by Arthur Somers Roche.
Direction by Francis Ford.
Length, 4,700 Feet.

The Story

Stanley, a stranger, appears in the western town of Aroya and asks for Frayne, a friend of Wilder Armstrong, who owns the big ranch. Armstrong mistrusts Stanley and withholds the information. Meanwhile Frayne makes his escape, and Stanley explains that all he wanted was to notify Frayne that he had fallen heir to a vast fortune. He shows Armstrong a clipping. Armstrong decides to follow Frayne with the news. About this time Edith Kilgallen, also one of the heirs mentioned in the clipping, appears on the scene. Armstrong advises her to follow him to where Frayne is hiding. Stanley gets there first, tries to trap Edith, but is worsted by Armstrong and his gang. Frayne is discovered, reveals his reason for hiding, and Edith and Armstrong are united.

"Wildcat Jordan"

Phil Goldstone Feature Shows Richard Talmadge in Spooky Affair That Is Good Second Feature

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Richard Talmadge is capable of better things than "Wildcat Jordan," although in the neighborhood houses it should mop up, for it shows this champion film athlete at his very best, performing hair-raising feats that are wonders. The story is seemingly secondary with these Talmadge pictures, all efforts being concentrated on giving Talmadge a chance to "do his stuff". And he does.

This performer, however, is deserving of bigger productions. He is certainly capable and it is unfair to him to keep him in the background by a lack of proper exploitation. As a matter of fact, Richard Talmadge is now one of the delightful secrets of the industry. Nevertheless, exhibitors are finding him a good box office bet at neighborhood houses.

There is very little on which to comment on these Talmadge pictures, for the star is seemingly the thing. All in all, "Wildcat Jordan" is good for any double bill. The production didn't cost much to make and rentals should be accordingly. And with this fact in mind the contention is advanced that "Wildcat Jordan" should prove a sound investment. Sylvia Grant and the rest of the cast all do well.

The Cast

Dick Jordan.....Richard Talmadge
Sylvia Grant.....Eugenia Gilbert
Roger Gale.....Harry Von Meter
Billy Talbot.....Jack Waltmeyer

Directed by Al Santell.
Photography by Harry Fowler.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story

Dick Jordan, an athletic westerner in search of adventure, is approached by Roger Gale and his business associates who seek to purchase the young man's ranch. The westerner seeks a bigger price and is invited to come East. Gale plans to give Dick such a wild time that he will consent to do anything, but here his plans miscarry, for the westerner falls in love with Sylvia Grant, whose services are recruited to play a practical joke on the visitor. The joke, however, is reversed, with Dick beating up the jokesmiths and ultimately making up his mind to keep his ranch on which to settle with his new wife.

Exploitation Angles: Play up the star and his stunts, and put him over the same as you used to work for Mix and presently you can clean up with the name. In many places you can already.

In "One Exciting Night" D. W. Griffith has forsaken the heavy and spectacular type of productions with which his name has been associated, and has given to the screen a production of the general type of the highly successful stage plays, "The Bat" and "The Cat and the Canary." It is a modern story of mystery, with uncanny situations, masked figures, strange midnight happenings, and two murders.

He has succeeded in making a picture which rivets your attention, with thrills, romance and an excellently handled mystery. Then there is good comedy relief to offset the tenseness of the melodrama. The denouement of the mystery occurs during a tremendously effective storm scene. Altogether, it is vastly entertaining, though of an entirely different type from what is usually expected from Mr. Griffith.—C. S. S.

"Peaceful Peters"

Thrilling Ride Leads to Effective Climax in Arrow Picture Starring William Fairbanks

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The successful handling of the climax in this Western, "Peaceful Peters," overshadows to a great extent the ineffectiveness of some of the earlier scenes. There is a thrilling pursuit on horseback and a fight sufficiently realistic and prolonged to suit the most red-blooded. The entire picture is full of action but these later scenes should be especially satisfying.

William Fairbanks is the star. He fulfills the requirements of the ideal Western hero and exploits his amiable personality and physical prowess in approved style. At times, the picture shares the familiar fault of being out of proportion in its characterizations. That is, the star has everything his way, and the other roles are subordinate and powerless to an extreme degree. The types differently handled could be made more human and natural. This could be done without detracting from the star, but on the other hand, heightening his appeal to discriminating patrons. Harry La Mont handles the well-known role of the suave villain convincingly.

A slight romance has been well moulded into the story without detracting from the main purpose which is heavy and fast action, the type of offering which will appeal primarily to men. The suspense has been skillfully maintained.

Peaceful Peters, a gold prospector, finds old Uncle Billy wounded and learns that he has been shot by jealous prospectors. Peaceful traces the crime after the old man's death and finds that Jim Blalock, proprietor of the saloon, is the chief offender. "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew"

Gloria Swanson Is Provided with Contrasting Role in Sam Wood Production for Paramount.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Admirers of Gloria Swanson will have the opportunity, in Paramount's "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," of seeing her in a sympathetic role, for in the earlier reels she appears as a home-loving wife and mother, one who sacrifices herself and saves her recreant husband for the sake of her child only to have him torn from her by court decree because of her husband's ingratitude.

Opportunity is also afforded for Miss Swanson to appear, however, in some of the gorgeous gowns for which she is noted, also in a very chic bathing suit and, finally, in draperies impersonating a statue. The latter scene is very discreetly handled so that it should offend no one.

This seemingly dual characterization is effected by having her go to Deauville, France, where she finds she is socially ostracized, and, stung by the injustice, she attempts to have "the game as well as the name" by acting so as to shock even the ultra-blasé set of social wasters. There is, however, a young novelist who believes in her, and finds the real woman under the false gayety, and a happy ending is brought about.

Handsomely produced, with elaborate sets and striking photography, it only succeeded in arousing mild interest on the part of the writer except in a few scenes, such as the spectacular scene in the Russian count's palace and the scenes where the star has her little son torn away from her and where she is reunited to him.

The scene where the husband, who has imbibed too freely and, goaded on by a scheming woman to believe that his best friend is paying undue attentions to his wife, and consequently returns home and kills him, and the wife falls in a faint at the dead man's feet, is melodramatic, but the remainder of the picture is handled with repression. Even in the scene where the novelist finds the count attempting to insult the star there is no fight, but simply a dignified and gentlemanly exchange of remarks between the two men; also there is no final embrace between the lovers, the picture ending with Miss Swanson kneeling beside her sleeping son, and the poet admirer having just left with a promise that she will see him the next day.

Coincidence plays a considerable part in the development of the story, and some of the action is not altogether convincing. The average spectator will probably wonder how it was that the wife, who was actually present at the murder, did not even have to appear at the trial. Also, though the subtitles make it appear that the wife, to save her little son from dishonor, agrees to the plan to have the killing appear as accidental, you nevertheless find later that it is the husband who has secured the divorce and the custody of the child.

Miss Swanson is assisted by a high-class cast, including Robert Cain as the husband, Conrad Nagel as the poet, and Herbert Standing as his father, with June Elvidge as the "vamp" who is the cause of the trouble.

Rev. Dr. Helstan.....Herbert Standing
Lance Bellew, Jr., age 4.....Mickey Moore

Aunt Agatha.....Helen Dunbar
Attorney Potter.....Arthur Hull
Detective.....Clarence Burton

Adapted from novel by David Lisle.
Scenario by Perch Heath and Monte Katterjohn.
Directed by Sam Wood.
Length, 7,155 Feet.

The Story

Wealthy Lance Bellew spends little time with his wife and child, but is enamoured of Naomi Templeton, who is instrumental in making him jealous so that he kills his best friend, charging him with stealing his wife's love. Bellew is acquitted on the plea that the shooting was accidental, but later secures a divorce from his wife and custody of the child, who is torn from the wife as she is en route to Europe. Bellew marries Naomi, who soon reveals her true character. Mrs. Bellew goes to Deauville. When even the father of the one man who believes in her, a young novelist, turns against her she proceeds to try and shock even the fast set. Her aunt arrives with the child just about this time, explanations occur, and Mrs. Bellew finds happiness in the love of the novelist.

"The Thoroughbred"

Helen Gibson's Riding Skill Is Chief Feature in Certified Film Release

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A Western with a familiar plot but with a slightly different twist in characterization in making the chief "go-getter" a woman instead of a man, if offered by the Certified Film Exchange in "The Thoroughbred". Helen Gibson carries off equestrian honors. Her ease and skill as a rider is setoff in some vivid scenes in which a beautiful horse plays an important part.

Urged on to perform the duty which her failing father, the sheriff, is unable to finish, the heroine sets out to hunt a notorious bandit. She has some colorful experiences, including a sojourn in a rough amusement den where she poses as one of the dancers. The star seems not entirely at ease in these scnes, but regains her poise and appeal when the scene of action returns to the out-doors. The headquarters of the outlaw gang has been pictured with some ingenuity, and the climax when the girl, alone, gets her man is an effective bit of drama. While not teeming with novelty, "The Thoroughbred" offers enough entertainment to keep the average Western fan interested.

The Cast

Pop Martin's daughter.....Helen Gibson
Remainder of Cast Not Available.

The Story

Pop Martin, the town sheriff, is too sick to hunt down the bandit who has robbed the bank. The enraged citizens are about to take away his star when Martin's daughter offers to take her father's place and insists on a trial. One of the younger men in the group offers to go with her. She refuses, but he follows anyway. She learns where the robbers have their headquarters, and in order to detect their plans she dresses as one of the dance girls at the saloon and gets the desired information. She goes after the bandit the next day and holds him up in his cave. The man who has befriended her from the start proves of valuable assistance. Her father's reputation is saved and the sheriff star remains in the family.

Exploitation Angles: Play up the star and the western angle, for the two are largely one, and they want Miss Gibson in western roles.

In Johnny Hines latest starring vehicle, "Sure-Fire Flint," Producer Charles Burr has given exhibitors of the country that "something different" for which they have been asking for years. This comedy drama is a combination of versatility and entertainment with both at their 'teenth degree. As an entertainment "Sure-Fire Flint" finds its best box office description in the first two words of its title. Dell Henderson turned out a crackerjack, with Johnny Hines at his best.—R. F.

"Women Men Marry"

Edward Dillon Production for Genius Films Has Big Box Office Appeal

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"Women Men Marry" is one of those artfully designed productions that triumphantly carries out its purpose, which is to give the public a type of entertainment for which it has shown a decided liking. The theme and the style of production are in popular favor. The material success of the picture seems a certainty.

A study in social values underlies the story of the picture. The conflict between snobbery and a spirit of democracy stirs up considerable interest and the old picturesque contrast of the rich girl and the poor man is used effectively. The heroine goes out to marry a title and falls in love with the ship stoker.

The nature of the story brings into prominence the splendor of the material appointments. It is a society drama with all the glamor that so widely appeals. All this is emphasized in the ultra-sophisticated atmosphere of the earlier part of the picture, which is rather too long, while the point of the story in showing the survival of real love dominates the rest of the action.

E. K. Lincoln as the stoker who can afford to laugh at trouble gives a performance that will please. The less likable role of the girl who has been taught the hard and fast rules of class distinction, is skilfully handled by Florence Dixon, who is charmingly pretty. One of the best scenes, and one that has fine comedy value shows the stoker spending his precious ten dollar bill to buy food for a gang of starving bums. The picture ends with some graceul New England country scenes, beautifully photographed.

The Cast

Direction by Edward Dillon.
Length, 5,986 Feet.

The Story

Emerie Rogers is scarcely more than a baby when her parents give her up to Montgomery Rogers, who promises to give her the finest of advantages if they will allow him to adopt her. She is never to know but that he is her real father. Her Aunt Gertrude teaches her the strict rules of class distinction, and urges her to marry a titled foreigner. While on the ocean liner Emerie's pet dog escapes, and she finds it in the stokers' quarters. Here she meets Dick Clark, to whom she is greatly attracted. Later she finds him in the park and helps to get him a position as her father's butler. Her father promotes him to secretaryship. Meanwhile Lord Brooks Fitzroy, whom Emerie met in England, comes to see her, and their affair progresses. The sudden death of Emerie's father brings several surprises, however, and a big change to Emerie.

Exploitation Angles: The star name has a value not to be overlooked, but the chief selling angle will be found in a big play on the title. Try and get the newspaper to print pictures of the recent brides under the play caption or hook into any national matrimonial event.

"Without Compromise"

Ordinary Material, but Fine Cast, in Fox Production with William Farnum

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A lack of suitable material or a misconception of William Farnum's capabilities is evident in "Without Compromise" as it has been in his recent vehicles. His personality and his following is strong, but neither can survive an indefinite number of disadvantageous stories.

"Without Compromise" is the story of an honest sheriff, crooked politics and an involved love affair. From the standpoint of plot and action it is fairly successful, but William Farnum is worthy of a picture with more individuality and appeal. Prepared for a less popular performer, the production would not be so liable to criticism, as there is nothing distinctly unpleasing about it.

The cast is splendid. Lois Wilson is charming every minute and Robert McKim makes the picture seem something above the ordinary whenever he appears. Tully Marshall, Otis Harlan and Alma Bennett are others that will be appreciated. Some of the melodramatic situations are so protracted that they lose force. A striking example of this is the delay at the end where the sheriff gives his sweetheart's father ten minutes before answering to the arrest. The attempt to keep up the suspense here is unsuccessful.

The Cast

Dick Leighton.....William Farnum
Jean Ainsworth.....Lois Wilson

Length, 5,173 Feet.

The Story

Dick Leighton as sheriff is a recognized authority by everyone except Cass Blake and a few others. He is in love with Jean Ainsworth, but promises to take care of Nora Foster after her guardian dies. Cass Blake brutally murders Nora, and Dick starts on a hunt for him. He trails him and in capturing Blake, shoots and wounds him. Jean's father, a political power supported by a gang that is opposed to Dick, refuses to allow the wounded man to be cared for in the hospital which he controls. He frames Dick, knowing that Dick will defend the sick man, and hoping that he will shoot in his own defense and hurt some of his own followers. Dick does shoot when the mob attacks the hospital, but he kills Ainsworth's own son. Dick is forced to prosecute Ainsworth, but knowing that his arrest would come between his daughter's happiness and Dick's, Ainsworth escapes, and leaves Dick's conscience clear.

Exploitation Angles: Make your drive on the cast, ignoring the story, and sell the star as strongly as you can, backing him up with the long list of favored players in his support.

"Blazing Arrows"

Ordinary Western-Indian Picture With Its Appeal Probably Best at Neighborhoods

Lester Cuneo is some scrapper when he gets started. Why send armies across the seas to make America safe for Prohibitionists when there are such battlers as Slugging Les Cuneo on the western slope of the Rockies? Armies of rustlers, gunmen, mean nothing to him, for he goes through these mobs like some politicians go through a public's treasure chest. And then, too, what is a flying bullet in the life of this scrapper when he has his bow and arrows! You tell him, William, not much.

Anyway, "Blazing Arrows" because of this superhuman's prowess should knock the kiddies, who line the fore rows of neighborhood houses, for a row of sardines. Lester plays the role of an Indian who isn't an Indian. He only thinks he is what he isn't, and, because he isn't, he is sentenced to serve as bread earner for a damsel who comes out of the East with a guardian who isn't owner of his own will power and a mustached villain who thinks nothing of sending individuals not to his liking on indefinite visits to unknown lands.

"Blazing Arrows" will blaze no paths to the box office, but for a place on a double bill wherein it will serve as a bargain attraction or the neighborhood houses it should prove a sound investment. Francelia Billington is the young lady who convinces herself that Indians are good for something else other than to serve as mere cigar store ballyhoos.

Then comes the discovery that Sky Fire is not an Injun, but an honest-to-goodness white man whom Gray Eagle had found when a baby, adopted and raised as his own child.

"Bells of San Juan"

Charles Jones Has Opportunities for Emotional Acting in Fox Production

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

More varied opportunities for emotional acting have been given Charles Jones in "Bells of San Juan" than in his former pictures. The strength of the production lies in his performance. The story offers entertainment without novelty. As it has been constructed to keep up a rapid dramatic sequence, the picture should mean average success in the box-office.

Charles Jones surmounts the highly sensational quality of his role to a degree that inspires confidence in what he could do with a more enjoyable part. He reveals a fineness and sympathy, in addition to his splendid physical qualities which have been emphasized in previous pictures. As the sheriff in "Bells of San Juan" he goes mad due to a doctor's careless treatment of his wound. He becomes a criminal and threatens the girl whom he had loved and admired. This scene seems too long and too melodramatic.

There is some good riding and an effective climax in the saloon where the sheriff arrests one of the law-breakers. This has been well directed. The heroine is a doctor played earnestly by Fritzi Brunette. A village on the Mexican border is the setting for much of the action, but the backgrounds are somewhat lacking in realism.

The Cast

The Story

The man refuses and is put into jail. He escapes, however, and Roderick is wounded in the battle. He loses his reason and starts a series of lawless acts, robbing others and terrifying Dorothy, whom he had previously asked to marry him. Her devotion brings to light the cause of his trouble and in recovering his first act is to get Garson. A fight between the two men ends the feud as Garson is beaten and punished.

"The Unconquered"

Aywon Film Corporation's Maciste Rapid-Fire Moving Melodrama A Clever Production.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

"The Unconquered" is a showman's picture in every sense of the word. Maciste, star of several spectacular productions imported from Italy and shown in this country at great profit, assumes the leading and outstanding role in this picture which, like the others, was made in Europe and shows the giant athlete at his very best. This seven-reel production is cleverly put together and its dozen or more thrilling and spectacular moments remind one of an American serial of twelve episodes, for in point of action this one is built like a serial. The only difference being that there are at the rate of virtually two big thrillers, fights and what not, to every reel.

It is an up-to-date story with modern dress. Maciste is as powerful as ever and as an athlete extraordinary he knows no equal on the screen. He thrashes dozens of men at a time, pulls out huge poles from their foundations, crashes through walls, climbs towers, hops on and off moving trains and otherwise keeps the action of the story at top speed all the time. This production should prove a gold mine in houses where Maciste's former screen exploits were shown, and in the neighborhood houses where action aplenty is demanded "The Unconquered" should go over with a wow.

To attempt to enumerate the many strong-man stunts in this production would mean the use of more space than has been alloted to this review. Suffice, however, to say that "The Unconquered" serves the purpose for which it was made—to entertain and exploit the remarkable brawn of this human monument of muscles and strength. There is an interesting love story told involving the princess of mythical land and a newspaper publisher. The picture is cleverly put together with many elaborate scenes and hundreds of persons appearing.

This is truly a Maciste picture and should make real money. It can be exploited and is entertainingly interesting at all times.

The Cast

Maciste.....Maciste
His Brother.....Antonio Fella
The Prineess.....Madaline Guido

Presented by Nathan Hirsh.
Length, 6,500 feet.

The Story

The Prime Minister of a mythical kingdom attempts to oust the Princess so that on the death of her father, who is in failing health, he can ascend to the throne. In attempting to carry out this plot the Prime Minister reckons without a hustling newspaper man and his friend, Maciste. Called into action Maciste overthrows the attempt to gain control of the country by rescuing the Princess and restoring her to her cousin, the Prince. In doing this there take place a series of exciting episodes. Along toward the end of the picture Maciste is knocked unconscious by pulling a building down on top of himself. Maciste is sentenced to die by the Prime Minister. By risking his life and standing on the hand of a huge clock in a high tower, his friend delays execution long enough to save Maciste's life. At another moment Maciste and his friend go over a cliff in an automobile running at top speed.

"Another Man's Boots"

Francis Ford At Advantage In Smart And Exciting Western Anchor Production.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

"Another Man's Boots" is a smart western picture replete with exciting, good horsemanship plus a story that is highly entertaining. No effort is made at turning out anything pretentious and in this the producer was perfectly correct. Westerns are popular and this one will disappoint no one; on the contrary it will entertain where many other westerns of the stereotyped brand will fail, for the reason that in "Another Man's Boots" the producer adhered to a human logic.

There is nothing in this picture that will throw any of your patrons out of their seats, but it is exciting to the point where fight follows fight and races galore. For the neighborhood houses where patrons demand westerns this picture should prove a good money-maker. Directorially, this feature was handled better than the ordinary run of ourdoor pictures. The local is mostly outdoor with some splendid long shots.

The cast, headed by Francis Ford, is a hard-working one in every instance. Ford as the stranger is a treat. This writer hasn't seen Francis Ford do better work in a long time and the entertainment value established by this picture is set materially because of his praiseworthy work. He is a good horseman as well. Elvira Weil as Nell Hadley does well as does also Harry Smith as her brother. Frank Lanning as "Injun Jim" is satisfactory, while Robert Kourtman makes an acceptable heavy.

The Cast

The Stranger.....Francis Ford
Ned Hadley.....Harry Smith
Nell Hadley.....Elvira Weil
Injun Jim.....Frank Lanning
"Sly" Stevens.....Robert Kourtman

Directed by Ivor McFadden.
Length, five reels.

The Story

Ned Hadley has saved some money while working on a ranch where he and a stranger become pals. Ned receives a letter to return home. While riding home he is shot by bandits. The stranger fights off his assailants, managing to recover the money. Believing he is about to die, Ned persuades the stranger to go to his parents, posing as their son. The stranger reluctantly does this and arrives at the ranch, where his identity is not questioned by the elder, but blind Hadley. "Sly" Stevens is planning to steal Hadley's claim and would have succeeded but for a blunder in accusing the stranger, who has fallen in love with Nell Hadley, of being an imposter. The stranger is about to be hung, when the real Ned Hadley appears and makes an explanation that ends all happily.

News and Reviews of Short Subjects and Serials

Julius Stern Returns from Europe with New Ideas for Century Comedies

Julius Stern, president of Century Comedy Company, who has just returned from a three months' stay in Europe announces that the plans for his company's releases through Universal for the coming season include a series of all-star comedies in which each of the actors will be a clever featured player and each will have equal chance. This series is in addition to the Baby Peggy special productions and the animal plays. There will be twelve subjects in the all-star series. Scripts for the first two which have well defined plots, have already been prepared.

Mr. Stern also announces that in response to the demand for a new series of Century beauties, his company is going to produce comedies which will contain some of California's most beautiful girls. He has also received many requests for more comedies with the Century lions, but states he feels that the new order of animals, Brownie, the wonder dog, Maudie the temperamental mule, and little Joe the monkey, are more clever and give the audience more laughs, and believes that the day of the comedy lion is past.

During his stay abroad, he contracted for several trained animals from a big German menagerie. In addition he secured two circus clowns and has a clever animal trainer under contract.

Mr. Stern states that he was impressed by the fact while abroad that while the European idea of farce would not take in this country that our American comedies, particularly the Baby Peggy pictures appeal to their sense of humor. This little comedienne's work is well received in England, France and Germany. He was also impressed by the fact that while the foreign comedies did not have the sparkle demanded by American audiences, they did have carefully thought out plots and he intends to follow some of these ideas without sacrificing rapid fire American humor.

Pathe List for November 5 Headed by Third of "Our Gang" Comedy Series

Heading the list of Pathe releases for week of November 5 is "Our Gang" the third of the series of two-reel "Our Gang" Comedies which appear to have struck a popular chord with exhibitors and which have been praised by the trade and daily press. The casts of these popular comedies consist almost entirely of boys of various types from the "angel child" variety to regular "holy terrors," including Sunshine Sammy, Little Farina and a tough little three-year-old; also dogs, kittens, ponies, etc. They are action comedies involving a riot of mischief.

The current Hal Roach single-reel comedy is "Shine 'Em Up" featuring Paul Parrott who is seen as a bootblack who gets mixed up shining two of his customers shoes, making one shoe black and one white. In the Aesop Film Fable, two elephants, a dog and a mouse are used to point the moral "A Friend in Need Is a Friend Indeed."

The program also includes, the third episode of "Speed" in which Charles Hutchison leaps from a high tower into a moat and is riding on a wild freight car when it plunges into a ravine; a single reel Harold Lloyd reissue "His Only Father" showing the star as a peanut fiend who finally makes good. Then there is also a Pathe Review, 180, showing more photographic gems, how to make fire without heat and other interesting items; Screen Snapshots No. 12 with a large variety of stars including Lila Lee, Helen Jerome Eddy and Rodolph Valentino. Two issues of Pathe News and one of Topics of the Day complete the program.

Harry Lehrman to Direct Second Six Carter DeHaven Comedies for F. B. O.

Henry Lehrman, who has been directing screen comedies for the past twelve years and is one of the very best known directors in this branch of the industry, has been engaged to direct the remaining six two-reelers in the series of twelve Carter DeHaven comedies for F. B. O. release.

Mr. Lehrman succeeds Mal St. Clair who directed the first six, and was selected by P. A. Powers to direct the series of "Fighting Blood" two-reelers based on H. C. Witwer's stories, for F. B. O.

Carter DeHaven has returned to the studio from a country-wide trip during which he met hundreds of exhibitors, and has already started to work on his first comedy under Mr. Lehrman. It is titled "The False Alarm" and promises to be an uproarous "fire" comedy, with Mr. and Mrs. DeHaven in the leading roles.

Mr. Lehrman is well known to exhibitors and the public because of his large number of box-office successes, both short subjects and features. One of his recent hits was "Reported Missing" starring Owen Moore. His experience dates back to the days of Biograph and Imp, and Keystone. He also directed the Lehrman Sunshine Comedies and in 1917 had his own producing organization.

Making Fireless Heat

Very interesting and instructive, dealing with a subject which is very little known to the average person, is a section of Pathe Review, 180, which is titled, "Fireless Heat." It shows how, the chemical union of water and unslacked lime produces enough heat to fry an egg. There are also experiments showing the enormous amount of heat generated when sulphuric acid attacks caustic soda and when the same acid comes in contact with sugar and permanganate of potash. These experiments are both impressive and entertaining.

Hamilton Finishes Second Comedy

Lloyd Hamilton, whose new series of Hamilton comedies for Educational release was started with "The Speeder," has finished his second picture of the series. It is "The Educator" and shows the comedy situations and hardships suffered by a new teacher in a peaceful (?) town at the hands of his wild and wooly class.

Ruth Hiatt is again Hamilton's leading woman, portraying the only "angel" in the town of Angelville. The cast also includes Otto Fried and Orral Humphrey. Hamilton's "The Speeder" has attracted favorable attention at many first-run showings in all parts of the country.

New Comedy Company

Richmond Film Productions, Inc., a new organization with Joseph A. Richmond as president, G. B. Garrison as secretary and treasurer, and Harry G. Koch as vice president and attorney, has begun production in a new studio at Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y., of a series of two-reel comedies which will be distributed by Clark-Cornelius Corporation. They will be produced at the rate of one a month.

Mr. Richmond, who is a member of the M. P. D. A., will direct, with Horace G. Plympton at the camera. Edward Noulder will be juvenile lead, and the cast includes William Favers and Jenny Harris. The company has a thoroughly equipped, modern studio, and production will be increased later. The comedies will be high class.

Novel "Music Film"

Harold Rodner, a well-known film salesman, has brought forth a novel short subject known as the "Music Film," in which the action on the screen is synchronized with the musical accompaniment. No mechanism is used but it is said that it is impossible for the orchestra to get out of step with the film. It was praised by the New York Times when shown at the Rialto and has been booked for the Rivoli and Criterion, also Loew's and Bim's circuits. It was directed by J. F. Leventhal.

"Robbing 'Em Good" Is Montana's Latest

Hunt Stromberg, producing the series of two-reel comedies for Metro starring Bull Montana is now cutting and titling one of these subjects which is said to have been made in secret. It is titled "Robbing 'Em Good' and will be ready for release in a few weeks. Mr. Stromberg is particularly enthusiastic over this comedy which is described as a burlesque on "Robin Hood."

Bull Montana has completed another comedy "Glad Rags" which was to have been the third of the series, but it has been held up on account of the timeliness of the burlesque, because of the current showing of the Douglas Fairbank's picture.

Fox Lists Second Six Educationals, Scheduled for Release November 26

November 26 has been selected as the release date for the second six Fox Educational Entertainments, "Old Spain," "Pekin Ducks," "Bits of Europe," "Camphor," "Bird Life," and "The Runaway Dog." It is announced that each has a special appeal to the public and that they are such as will bring to the theatres the better class in each community.

What is claimed to be one of the most entertaining single reels ever issued is "The Runaway Dog," a dramatic animal story with no human beings in the cast. The story deals with a puppy that gets away from its mother, has an encounter with a cat and then when the mother dog starts after him, she catches her leash in a chicken coop and the coop and chickens are dragged into the water. The old dog rescues them as they near a waterfall, and later rescues her errant son when he falls into the water.

"Old Spain" shows points of historic interest in that country, a bull fight and many beautiful women. "Pekin Ducks" is a half-reel showing the largest duck farm in the world. There are several special color effects. "Bits of Europe" shows unusual sights in London, Berlin, Monte Carlo, Venice and Versailles.

"Camphor" is a half-reel said to throw new light on its various uses. The scenes showing the gathering of this substance in Formosa it is stated were secured at great risk as the territory is inhabited by head hunters. It is said to be the first picture taken in Formosa.

"Bird Life" showing camera studies of birds unaccustomed to the photographers intrusion. They were secured by building a blind and show them feeding and protecting the young. There is also included the official picture of the National Audubon Societies for the protection of wild birds and animals, which should prove a drawing card for the better class of patrons. There are also scenes of the professor of the University of Washington hanging over a cliff collecting rare eggs.

Unique Tribute for Pathe Serial

An unusual tribute to the Ruth Roland serial, "The Timber Queen," is contained in a letter received by Pathe from I. E. Runyon, manager of the Iris Theatre, Hutchinson, Kansas. Beginning with the statement that he has been running two serials a week for over five years, Mr. Runyon says: "I believe it is the best serial that has ever been produced. It outranks them all in point of story, action, suspense and thrills—best of all, it is getting the money." Every exhibitor should grab at this serial and boost it to the limit.

Graphic Shows Captain Rheba Crawford

In the current issue of Educational's new screen magazine, "The Graphic," is a novel subject, "Vamping Broadway Into Ways of Grace," showing Captain Rheba Crawford, of the Salvation Army, holding a street meeting, stating that she is known in the theatre district as the "vamp evangelist." What makes this doubly interesting is the fact that Captain Crawford, while holding just such a meeting as is pictured, was arrested for blocking traffic on Broadway. She was honorably discharged, and secured the co-operation of the police commissioner for future meetings. A considerable amount of space was given to the affair in the New York papers and several theatres were offered to her to hold Sunday afternoon meetings. It is said that she accepted the first one, Shubert's "Inter Garden."

New Lane Comedy

Fox Film Corporation has selected November 8 as release date for "The Pirate," the second of the series of two-reel comedies starring Lupino Lane, the famous English pantomimist. It is said to be an unusually funny laugh-provoker with many funny situations, in which the diminutive star takes ample advantage of the opportunities offered to display his unique talents.

"Nick Carter Series"

(Garsson-Dramas—Two Reels)

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Here is a series of two-reel featurettes inspired by the well-known Nick Carter detective stories that bids fair to win great popularity, particularly at the neighborhood houses. Although but 2,000-foot length subjects, each featurette is a complete production in itself with good scenic settings plus dramatic value that contributes materially to the mysterious atmosphere that pervades each story. Directorially, the three subjects reviewed by this writer are a credit to John J. Glavey, for they are well done, with the mystery carried throughout and not totally solved until the very end, thus giving maximum entertainment value.

Because of the nature of the original Nick Carter stories there is a temptation confronting the director; that is, to overdo and complicate. But not so with the gentleman who presided over the directorial destinies of the three pictures reviewed. True, the stories are introduced with a novelty that prompts the query why many directors could not follow suit and thereby save thousands of superfluous footage by giving the spectator a production that dwells with the story concisely, minus the experiments in the form of close-ups and what not. But that's neither here nor there.

Murray Garsson has a splendid series of featurettes that should find a place on any program. They're not made for any particular audience, for its one outstanding asset and box office quality is its superlative entertainment value. This value is due to the rapid action, the good acting of Edmund Lowe as Nick Carter and Diana Allen as his ward and assistant, the consistent lighting and, last, but not least, the production given each picture.

For the young folks, Nick Carter should prove a mop-up, while for the older ones it should clean up on its ability to hold attention undivided, entertain and at the same time furnish a genuine treat in these days when a fickle public is demanding the like of "The Bat", "The Cat and the Canary" and "The Monster". On any bill, the Nick Carter pictures should prove a valuable draw, for here is something that is absolutely new, diversifying and entertainingly clever throughout.

"A Game of Craft" is the first release, dealing with the rescue by Nick Carter of a gullable young man from the influence and clutches of a pair of crooks, a man and woman. The second is "Unseen Foes" involving the mysterious murder of an aged guest of a leading hotel. The solution of this mystery constitutes a remarkable piece of novel detective work that will surprise everybody. "The Spirit of Evil" is a mystery founded upon the psychic, a man dropping dead during a seance, the discovery of a mysterious Hindu and the final running down of a seemingly impossible clue. These all contribute toward making "The Spirit of Evil" the best two-reeler of the series.

The photography is good. Here's a series of featurettes that should help materially in strengthening the increasing value of the short subject. Overlooking to book this series is like dumping your hard-earned money in the treasury of your competitor. —Roger Ferri.

"Blazes"

(Educational-Comedy—Two Reels)

This two-reeler released by Educational is a characteristic Jack White slapstick comedy. There is a lot of sure-fire laugh getters in this number and it should immensely please audiences that like this type of production. Naturally there is not much of a plot, just enough to hang the desired stunts and gags on. It involves a penniless artist who has left his wife and children, and a rival who seeks to win her love. There are several novel pieces of business; one, which will make your audience wonder how it is done, shows some of the comedians run over by a steam roller; he is pressed down into the asphalt and several automobiles roll over his face and body, while a horse appears to step squarely on his face. Another good and novel bit is the scene where the artist in a burning room stops to eat dinner, heating the coffee and toasting bread by holding them over the leaping flames.—C. S. S.

"Shine 'Em Up"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

The clever gag used in the opening of this comedy provokes an interest which is fairly justified by what follows, although the rest is not up to the same standard of originality. Paul Parrott plays a shoe-shiner. His task proves rather too complicated for him and he gets mixed up while taking care of two patrons at once. They go off with one boot white and the other black. There is plenty of action in what follows and the comedy as a whole would appear to be a good investment.—M. K.

"The Elephant's Trunk"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

In this Terry cartoon, in which the artist illustrates the old adage that "a friend in need is a friend indeed," Fido and a pair of playful elephants take the lead. The comedy is lighter and more fleeting than usual. There is nothing that marks it as an exceptional number, but it should go well where this style of humor is liked. —M. K.

"The Cabby"

(Universal-Comedy—Two Reels)

There are several laughs in this Century Comedy distributed by Universal and it is well up to the standard maintained in this brand of fun-makers. Much of the humor is furnished by Maudie, the clever Century mule, that does a number of stunts, such as placing a bomb in a tailor shop and recovering money for her master. Another stunt is where a number of kittens get into a cash register and it starts racing down the street, of course, starting a typical chase. There is a good bit where a chap goes into a tailor shop, gets a dress suit, goes out on the street and gets married and then returns the suit.—C. S. S.

Screen Snapshots No. 12

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Some of the most popular personalities of the screen, stage and art world are featured in this number. Will Rogers, while on location during the making of "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow;" Maude George on a shopping expedition; Helen Jerome Eddy, starring in her own productions for the first time; Neysa McMein, selecting the winner of the bathing girl contest, and a few short but vivid glimpses of Wallace Reid, Lila Lee, May MacAvoy, Louise Fazenda, Rodolph Valentino, Bill Hart and others. Anyone will find entertainment in this subject.—M. K.

Pathe Review No. 180

(One Reel)

Camera fans will enjoy the photographic beauty of the mountain scenes in this. In suggesting that the "pearls of the mountains" are their lakes, there is display of art in the selection of scene and in the color treatment that should appeal widely. A few facts about "Grandpop," a tortoise that is three hundred years old, a demonstration of various ways of getting heat without a fire and several views of the Acropolis comprise the rest of the number. A worthwhile addition to any program.—M. K.

"Our Gang"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

A cast of interesting children has been directed with unusual appreciation of their capabilities, in this third number of the new Hal Roach series. The motive is light and mischievous, with an undercurrent of burlesque. For instance, the leading lady has a few big emotional moments, and her triangular romance is treated with a mock-seriousness that results in very enjoyable entertainment. The children decide to do something noble and with the aid of the pony and mule save the heroine and her mother from the threatened mortgage foreclosure. A number of highly amusing incidents are included and the trend as a whole is decidedly entertaining.—M. K.

"Step Lively, Please"

(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)

Chester and Charles Conklin are the lively sponsors for the amusement in this Sunshine comedy. The romance of a hack-driver is the theme and the treatment is slapstick, some of it familiar, some of it new, but almost all of it effective. During the course of his flirtation the driver's cab is used by a notorious robber who deposits his evil gains underneath the seat of the cab. The girl proves to be a detective in search of this man and mistakes the cab driver for the criminal. The horse, however, saves his master and brings the real guilty man into the court-room just in time. This is a good program number and in places is hilariously funny.—M. K.

"Moonlight Sonata"

(Prizma—Drama—One Reel)

This is an interesting and well-made production showing how Beethoven came to compose his celebrated "Moonlight Sonata," by endeavoring to interpret for a blind girl the beauties of an autumn night. It is in Prizma natural colors and as presented at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, with the orchestra playing the "Moonlight Sonata," it proved very effective.—C. S. S.

"Blue Blood and Red"

(Universal-Drama—Two Reels)

This is the second of the series of two-reel "Timber Tales" distributed by Universal starring Roy Stewart. It well maintains the good impression created by the first issue. Not only is it high in entertainment value, with a good snappy story with plenty of punch and action, but it is instructive as it shows how the big trees are felled and ingenious devices used by the lumbermen to make the giants of the forest fall in the desired direction. There is also an indirect plea for conservation of the second-growth timber, but it is all worked legitimately into the story. This number involves an encounter between the foreman and a crooked superintendent resulting in thrilling chase and fight in mid-air on a swaying scaffold. It should prove a welcome addition to any program.—C. S. S.

"Entertaining the Boss"

(F. B. O.-Comedy—Two Reels)

Like the previous issues in this series of Carter DeHaven comedies distributed by F. B. O., this one depends for its humor on the situation in which the star becomes involved. He invites the boss to dinner and finds that the gas and water have been cut off, but ingeniously gets around this difficulty, however, when by chance he gets hold of a basket of laundry and uses a table cloth and a dress shirt only to find that the basket belongs to the boss he gets into an awful scrape and is fired. There is considerable entertainment in this number with some clever situations, but it is not as snappy as "Twin Husbands."—C. S. S.

"Choose Your Weapons"

(Educational-Comedy—Two Reels)

Romantic costume drama is burlesqued in this two-reel Christie comedy distributed by Educational. It is a timely number because of the prevalence at the present time of a number of big feature productions of the type which it satirizes. The picture is well directed with elaborate sets and scenes built on a feature scale. It contains a lot of laughs and should please the average audience. Bobby Vernon is the leading player and his adventures take him to a mythical European kingdom where he rescues the princess, Charlotte Stevens. He meets all sorts of comedy adventures, gets into many scrapes and has some good comedy fights. Eventually he finds out it is all a dream but meets in real life the girl who was the princess of his imagination.—C. S. S.

"Such Is Life in Busy London"

(F. B. O.-Travelaugh—One Reel)

Following a previous number showing life near London, this reel deals with the very heart of the British metropolis. It is a Hy Mayer Travelaugh, released by F. B. O. and containing many interesting and several out of the ordinary views of that city. It is treated in Mayer's characteristic fashion with a number of characteristic types and with pen drawings, cleverly executed, which dissolve into moving pictures. It is an entertaining offering.—C. S. S.

Starland Revue No. 14

(F. B. O.-Magazine—One Reel)

Following the policy of showing favorites of the stage, this screen magazine issued by F. B. O. is up to the standard of previous numbers from the point of interest. Sir Harry Lauder, the internationally famous comedian is shown entertaining the inmates of the hospital at Ward's Island, N. Y. Then there is a scene showing how the costumes for Greenwich Village Follies are selected, a scene from the Scotch play "Hunky Dory," Florence Easton of the Metropolitan Opera House at her home with her family, a novelty number from a Broadway musical play showing ballet dancers in training and a vaudeville team with pretty girls rehearsing.—C. S. S.

"Hale and Hearty"

(Pathe-Comedy—One Reel)

Almost the entire action of this single reel Rolin comedy, distributed by Pathe and starring Snub Pollard is in the period when hoopskirts were in vogue and when men also wore garments very different from today's styles. Snub's rival was a champion football punter and his exploits which are broadly burlesqued furnish much of the comedy of this number which contains quite a number of humorous situations. Snub cleverly outwits his rival for the hand of Marie Mosquini and the end of the picture shows how he gets back at his rival who is now suffering from gout and has lost his "kick."—C. S. S.

"Bumps and Thumps"

(Fox-Cartoon—One Reel)

A Mutt and Jeff cartoon without unusual merit or fault. The trip in a motorcycle furnishes most of the excitement as well as the bumps and thuds. Halting for more gas, Jeff achieves a miracle in color transformation with his three passengers. This scene is the high spot in the comedy which ends with a prize fighter's doing a few esthetic steps to the tune of his wife's dictates.—M. K.

"The Graphic"

(Educational-Magazine—One Reel)

Bird lovers will be interested in the first section of this screen magazine which shows a bird sanitarium in Atlanta at which sick song birds are cared for and the ingenious means to make them sing again. Many spectators will be surprised and interested to know that in New York there are a number of titled Russian refugees who are making a living by humble means as for instance a general conspicuous in the Czar's regime who now washes shirts in a small laundry. Particularly timely in view of her recent arrest and exoneration on a charge of blocking traffic, are the scenes showing Captain Rheba Crawford of the Salvation Army, a beautiful girl said to be known as the "vamp evangelist" conducting a religious meeting on Broadway. Another section shows how a dancer keeps her figure by exercises on the roof and there is the usual clever section of drawings by Ollendorff.—C. S. S.

"The New Mama"

(C. B. C.-Comedy—Two Reels)

As usual with the Hallroom Boys in the series of two-reel comedies which C. B. C. is distributing on the state right market, they are in need of cash and in endeavoring to replenish their funds meet with ludicrous adventures. Sid Smith is featured as Percy and George Williams appears as Ferdie. After a ludicrous scene in which they attempt to get over a newly laid cement walk without leaving footprints they answer an ad for a man and wife to manage a summer hotel. All kinds of stunts occur and while there is not much originality in this section there are some sure-fire gags.—C. S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Use Slip Joint

Jack Cassin, Port Huron, Michigan, writes:

Would like to have your help with regard to installation of two Power Six E Lamphouses.

I desire to connect them to a sixteen-inch vent flue in center of ceiling of projection room. A sixteen-inch exhaust fan is at upper end of vent flue, which is about six feet from ceiling. I use slides, and am unable to figure out any practical method of making the connection to meet this condition. Any aid will be appreciated. I will gladly pay any charge in connection therewith.

No Charge

No charge, Brother Cassin. You have not given me the location of the vent flue with relation to the vents in your lamphouses, but anyhow it is merely a matter of a couple of loose elbows and a slip joint, as per diagram.

One of the elbows may be at top of lamphouse, or higher up, as you prefer. The slip joint can easily be made by any tinsmith. In the diagram A is, of course, the vent flue. B—B are joints made loosely enough so that they will slip easily when the pipe is moved by moving the lamphouse, with a slot cut in either side, with a small bolt through to keep the upper pipe from sliding down.

The bolt rides on the upper edge of the lower pipe and the lower edge of the upper pipe rides on the bolt. C is what is known as a "slip joint." It is nothing more or less than one pipe made a bit smaller than the other, the smaller one slipping into the larger a foot or more.

The joint must be a loose one, so that it will slip in and out to make up for any change in length of the pipe when the lamphouse is moved. If intelligently constructed such a joint will work very well. I have made them in steam pipes even, to take the expansion and contraction in long lines. A stuffing box is added, in that case, of course.

Sincere Compliment

On the back cover page of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, September 30 issue, appears an advertisement by one of the largest and oldest projector manufacturers in the world.

It is almost entirely taken up with a cut of the fourth edition of the handbook and a quotation therefrom. I take this as one of the highest compliments ever paid my books. It is quite true that the company did this in order to push a piece of equipment they are introducing.

But if they consider the influence of my books such that they can afford to use up a whole page, which they pay very real money for, telling what the book says about the desirability of the use of the kind of apparatus under consideration, certainly I have the right to feel rather highly complimented.

Unless they were very much convinced that the book had great influence they most emphatically would not do such a thing as that!

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Film Buckees

Whiting H. Andrews, Pensacola, Florida, makes following inquiry:

Pictures come to us which have a decided tendency to buckle. "The Four Horsemen" was very bad in this respect. Have tried everything we could think of, but have been unable to overcome it. If you know of anything to eliminate this trouble I would be very glad indeed to know what it is.

Sorry, but I don't. The trouble seems to be in the film itself, and is, apparently, due to a wrong procedure in the drying of same, which causes the edges to shrink faster or more than the center of the film. This latter is not made as a statement of fact, but merely as the deduction drawn by several who have examined films showing the trouble.

I would advise you and all others who encounter the buckling trouble to make the facts in the case known at the office of the producer of the production, setting forth the fact that the trouble certainly lies in the film itself, since only certain productions give the trouble, while others, and by far the greater number, run through your projectors perfectly. I would suggest the following form of letter to the exchange:

We have been unable to put on a good show with the ——— received from you for showing (date) because of the fact that the films buckled over the projector aperture, making it impossible to keep the picture in focus on the screen.

We ask that you make proper protest to the producer of these films. That the trouble is in the films is proven by the fact that (name half a dozen productions run just before and after which ran perfectly) ran through our projectors perfectly.

Signed———

To the producer I would suggest the following letter:

The Buckling Film Corporation.

Gentlemen: We have just run your ——— with very poor results. The fault does not lie in the production, as such, but in the films, which "buckle" over the projector aperture, thus making it impossible to keep the picture in focus on the screen.

That the fault lies in the films themselves is conclusively proven by the fact that other productions used prior to the one named ran through our projectors perfectly.

This is unfair to both yourselves and to us—to you because we are unable to do justice to your production before our audiences, and to us because we were unable to satisfy our audiences, and this has injured our business instead of helping it by having used the production named.

Will you, in your own interest, look into this matter and remedy whatever is wrong, as the trouble is not infrequently encountered lately and is a very serious one.

Signed———

Address this letter to personal attention of the president of the corporation. A few hundred such letters will probably start something real quick.

Lens Chart Works

A. L. Fell, Projectionist, Collingwood Theatre, Collingwood, New Jersey, orders a handbook and remarks:

Want an autographed copy if possible.

Have lens chart. Find my screen illumination much improved since using it. A good, clear field with no dark corners or spots.

Have two Powers projectors and a Hallberg motor generator set, pulling fifty amperes. Use ¾ positive, with 11-32 Silver Tip negative. Center of condenser to aperture is 17 inches.

Use 7½ collector and 6½ converging lens, spaced 1-16 of an inch apart. Projection lens is 7½ E. F.

Have a 125-foot projection distance. One thing I don't like is the motor generator located in the projection room, but there is an adjoining room and it will soon "move in."

I read our department every week and find it very helpful. Have seen only one man who did not need help, up to date, and his name and work is not worth wasting ink over. I wish yourself and the department much success.

You will get—in fact, should now have—your autographed copy. Let me know what you think of it. You either have made one mistake or have expressed yourself wrongly, probably the latter.

You say you have a 7½ collector and a 6½ converging lens. It should be just the reverse. The difference is that the 6½ lens should be next the light (collector lens) because it will send forward a more nearly parallel beam than will a 7½ lens.

Glad you find the department helpful and believe you will find the new book the same.

Congratulations

Carlisle M. Anglemire, Projectionist, 44 South Main street, Nazareth, Pa., has his new "Blue Book of Projection," and says.

Dear Mr. Richardson: I desire to congratulate you upon the fine work you have done in creating the BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION, meaning by that the new handbook. It certainly does treat projection and all things allied thereto in a wonderfully complete manner.

I do not hesitate to say that any man who desires to become a real projectionist should read the book from cover to cover, and then study it.

The book should and will be a great help to all small town men. It certainly will be to me. This is no snap judgment. I have had plenty of time to read, and to some extent to study the book, and it comes fully up to my expectations.

In closing I again want to tender my sincere congratulations for your great work in making the BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION possible.

Comment seems unnecessary. I do not print such letters from personal preference. True, I appreciate them very greatly, because as I have said when one has labored hard to produce 100 per cent value, one likes to know his work is approved. But printing them LOOKS like pure vanity. It is not, however.

My reason for printing a few of them is to show you that those who have paid the six dollars feel they have full value. I want YOU to have the book, NOT merely because of the sale involved, but BECAUSE YOU NEED IT and your having it will be for your own personal good, the good of the profession and the good of the motion picture industry.

Believe me or not, as you wil, but nothing would or could make me happier than had I the ability to give you every one a copy of the book without money and without price. I have worked so long and so very hard to improve that which I regard as one of the very foundation stones of the industry (projection) that it has become almost a part of my life.

Power Co. Buys

The Nicholas Power Company, manufacturers of the Powers projector, through its president, Edward Earle, has ordered twelve copies of the new handbook, paying the full six dollars per copy, one for each of the heads of its various departments.

This I think you will all agree is a very high compliment to the worth of the book itself. Certainly in these times of financial stringency, when business men all over the world are watching expenditures very carefully and limiting them pretty closely to actual necessities, a company such as this, which has been in the projector manufacturing business pretty nearly ever since the beginning of the business, would not buy a rather expensive book for each of its department heads unless it was well convinced that it would pay to do it—that the actual VALUE was in the book.

And if this is the view of a projector manufacturer, who has many sources of knowledge available, what should be your view, Mr. Projectionist and Theatre Manager ? ? ? ? The several question marks mean that you should ask yourself that question several times.

And right here let me say that because you have the third edition is no reason why you should not get or do not need the new book. The third edition was a good book IN ITS DAY, but its day is done. Every one of you who bought the third edition said it was well worth the money. Well, by comparison, the fourth edition is easily worth five times as much as was the third, and mind you that is NO BLUFF or selling talk either.

A Bad Combination

The Nicholas Power Company have seen fit to use up fully two-thirds of their advertising space on the back cover of September issue of the Moving Picture World (and I am told they used a like portion of their advertising space in the News the same way that week) in publishing a picture of the new handbook and a quotation from page 802 thereof, with regard to the inadvisability of using the stereopticon attachment on a motion picture projector and the advisability of using a dissolving stereopticon.

What I said in the handbook was said only after very careful consideration. I believe it will be well to set the matter forth in this department.

The use of a stereopticon attachment on a motion picture projector is distinctly bad practice, if for no other reason than that the slide carrier reduces the light available to the spot by twenty-eight (28) per cent, and if the condition be such that the projection lens is able to pick up the entire light beam from the unobstructed face of the converging lens, then the slide carrier will decrease the screen illumination by twenty-eight (28) per cent.

Not the Only Reason

But this is not the only reason why a combination projector is objectionable. The amperage used for motion picture projection is usually several times that either required or desired for stereopticon work, and the resultant heat is such that it is impractical to leave a slide in the stereopticon attachment for more than a very few seconds, unless we want it broken.

As between the single and dissolving stereopticon the latter is much to be preferred, for two reasons, viz.: the projectionist must be very, very careful in placing a slide in the carrier of a single stereopticon or he will "jiggle" the carrier, which will cause the slide in the other side of the carrier, then in process of being projected, to move, and the picture on the screen to move, which is a very bad effect indeed. Looks to an audience like precisely what it is, viz.: s'loppy work. This of course cannot happen with a dissolver. Then, too, the dissolving of one scene into the next is a very much more pleasing effect than it is possible to get with a single stereopticon.

The motion picture theatre is no longer in the kindergarten stage. It is no longer a question as to whether it is merely a fad, which will die when the people are tired of it. It is now merely a question as to what exhibitors will "die" and what ones will "live," insofar as concerns their connection with the business.

My answer to that is that those who stick to antiquated methods and equipment which is cheap in first cost, but which is not capable of giving 100 per cent results upon the screen will inevitably put themselves out of the business which their methods prove them to neither understand or be suited to, while those who grudge no reasonable outlay for equipment and its efficient operation, so long as the added cost adds to the beauty of screen results, hence to the value of their "show" and the pulling power of their box office will "live" in the business and will wax prosperous in the days to come.

Something New

Recently I paid Mike Campbell, Chief Projectionist for Marcus Loew Theatres, a visit at his office in the American Theatre Building, New York City. While there he showed me a new German arc lamp. Campbell said he had tried it out and had obtained a very good picture in Loew's State Theatre with less than twenty-five amperes of current, and Loew's State is a big house with a big picture.

I examined the lamp and expressed skepticism. It was a very lightly built affair—seemingly absurdly so. The negative carbon was not even clamped in with a screw, but was merely poked in under a flat spring. The crater faced back, away from the screen, and the light was picked up by a curved mirror five and one-half inches in diameter and sent forward to the spot. The negative carbon came through a hole in the mirror.

Mr. Provonski, who had brought the lamp to the United States, and who proposes to import them, was present, and he and Campbell offered to "prove it to me" by a demonstration in the State Theatre the following midnight.

After the show was finished the lamp was mounted, in series with an ammeter. One of the high intensity lamphouses was removed from one of the other projectors and a regular arc put in its place, so that a comparison of results could be made. And this was the result:

The German lamp gave a really excellent picture, covering the entire surface of the State screen. We alternated with the other projector having the ordinary arc and at seventy-five amperes it gave a distinctly less brilliant picture than did the German lamp at 24 amperes. I examined the angle of crater of the ordinary arc and the size of the spot. They were both O. K.

At first I was at loss to know what the answer to such a truly remarkable thing might be, but after thinking it over for a day or two it became plain. You know the condenser is enormously wasteful. It has even been claimed that as much as 70 per cent of the light is absorbed or lost in the condenser. In other words, the light measured at 200 c. p. at the face of the collector lens only showed 60 c. p. at the face of the converging lens. Also its quality is altered.

There is no condenser in the German lamp optical train, but merely a thin reflector, which should not cause a loss to exceed three (3) per cent of the total light; also the light is much more white and brilliant than after passing through a condenser.

But another equation enters, viz.: the spot is very hot—much more so than with the arc. Just to what extent this will prove objectionable remains to be seen. The officials who will pass upon the lamp will have to answer that.

Mike Campbell will handle the lamp in this country. Don't get excited, however. It is not yet ready for the market. Maybe it never will be. One can never tell.

The New McVickers of Chicago Possesses Many Novel Features

THE new McVickers Theatre, Twenty-five Madison street, Chicago, which will open its doors to the public on the night of October 26, represents an expenditure of over two million dollars by its owners, Messrs. Jones, Linick and Schaefer.

It occupies the site of the original McVickers Theatre, erected in 1858 and rebuilt in 1871, 1872 and again in 1892, which makes the present structure the fourth re-incarnation.

The new theatre is of thoroughly fireproof construction with brick walls lined with concrete and marble. Over six hundred tons of structural steel were used in its construction and it is said that the current required to operate its lighting systems would serve the illuminating requirements of a city of the size of Schenectady.

The exact seating capacity of the new McVickers is twenty-eight hundred and these seats are of Circassian walnut, upholstered in plush and very attractive in appearance—of greater importance to the patrons is the fact that they are extremely comfortable and roomy enough to accommodate picture fans of large diameter.

The seating plan consists of orchestra and one balcony, no proscenium or mezzanine boxes being provided. A feature of the architectural arrangement of the house is the spacious mezzanine with its electrically operated and illuminated fountain and fish pool. The floor of the mezzanine is of marble, covered with magnificent oriental rugs and the floors of other portions of the house are either of marble or covered with heavy Brussels carpeting.

The Ventilating System

The ventilating system is worthy of more than passing comment.

There are three air intakes to the building; one at the East alley, one at the West alley and one to the Chicago Tunnel Co. freight tunnel, which is 47 feet below the Madison Str. level. From these openings 80,000 cubic feet of air will be drawn per minute; first thru tempering coils, then through an air washer and then through reheating coils by a large fan which is driven by a 50 horse power motor.

The air is discharged by this fan into a series of concrete, tile and metal ducts to the various parts of the building. The concrete ducts are beneath the basement floor level, leaving the basement ceiling clear of ventilating pipes. These ducts all drain to an automatic ejector of the air lift type and will always be dry. Provision having been made for flushing them out with a hose when necessary.

The air is introduced into the auditorium through perforated plaster grilles, located in the proscenium arch and at 10 other points on the side walls about eight feet from the floor line.

The main exhaust fan is located in the attic and is designed to remove the air through plaster grilles located in the balcony soffit and main ceiling. This fan is equipped with remote control, that is the speed of the fan can be regulated from the engineer's room in the basement and can be stopped from that point but can be started only at the fan.

Basement Exhaust Fan

There is also an exhaust fan in the basement, designed to remove air from the basement rooms.

The air washer is constructed of copper and brass.

In the south alley an artesian well has been sunk to a depth of 1,600 feet, where water in quantity will be pumped to a 5,000 gallon storage tank under basement floor. This water will range in temperature from 47 to 55 degrees. From storage tank the water can be used in the air washer for the purpose of reducing the temperature of the incoming air to desired or comfortable temperature, regardless of outside weather conditions.

Steam is furnished to the building by the Illinois Maintenance Co. The system of heating used is the vacuum system, with thermostatic traps on all heating units.

Hot water for the building is heated in a brass tube steam heater with automatic regulator controlling same.

Automatic Regulation

All gauges used in connection with system, fresh air damper control switches, remote control for attic fan and temperature reading apparatus are located on a marble gauge board, installed in engineer's room. The vacuum pump and basement exhaust fans are also in this room.

The direct radiators in organ rooms, auditorium, foyer, rotunda, lobby and executive office are all automatically regulated by thermostats adjacent to radiator locations.

A complete system of electrically operated thermometers (12 in number) are located throughout theatre, with system of wiring terminating at the gauge board, and by pushing a button the engineer can see the temperature at any of the thermometers.

Lighting Control System

What is said to be the largest control switchboard ever placed in a theatre has been installed by Roscoe Major, who began his service at a Jones, Linick & Schaefer switchboard several years ago. The system consists of a pilot board mounted on the stage operating a remote control board placed in the basement in a fire-proof steel room. It is this board located beyond sight and sound of the auditorium that performs the function of controlling every lamp througout the entire edifice.

Push switches are located in multiple throughout the entire auditorium and in the projection room to control house lights, thus preventing panics caused by trivial incidents and darkness. There will be 8,500 lamps throughout the house, all fixtures of indirect design and the huge signs contain over 2,000 more. There is upward of 300 amperage in the attraction sign and an equal amount in the canopy and other front lighting. The auditorium proper requires 400 amperes. The stage alone requires as much current as the balance of the house.

The Projection Room

The projection room is a two-story compartment situated at the rear of the balcony. Each of the compartments measures twenty-five by fourteen feet. The lower compartment contains the rheostats and the lavatory for the projectionists. The upper compartment houses the projectors, spotlights and the rewinder.

The projection room was equipped by the Amusement Supply Company of Chicago and the installation was made by Max Pearl of that concern.

The apparatus consists of three Motiographs de Luxe, enamelled in blue, and equipped with General Electric high intensity arcs, Schafer Bros. Special rheostats, five Robin Synchronizers, Weaver change over device and a Fulco Rewind with automatic cut-out switch.

In addition to the high intensity projectors in the projection room, two additional Motiographs, equipped with Mazda outfits are used in the reviewing room, making a battery of five of these machines in all. The projection throw measures 170 feet, putting an 18 x 22 picture on the 19 x 23 foot screen.

Two spotlights and a stereopticon also occupy space in the projection room and a staff of five projectionists, working in shifts, are in charge.

Stanley Company to Build Theatre in West Philadelphia Seating 2000

WEST PHILADELPHIA, PA., is to have one of the handsomest theatres in the city and one that will compare favorably with the best in the United States in the very near future, announcement to the effect having been made yesterday by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, following the recording in the City Hall of certain property transfers.

The theatre will be located at 63d street and Woodland avenue and will be known as the Benn Theatre, in honor of Marcus E. Benn, who, in conjunction with the Stanley Company, will erect the new edifice, which will be modern in every respect and will be a building for which everyone for miles around this section have been awaiting with eager anticipation for a long time.

The Stanley Company with Mr. Benn has acquired a very large piece of property which is in "L" shape, and includes the premises, 6316-18-20 and 22 Woodland avenue and also those at 6325 to 6343 Saybrook avenue, which thoroughfare is in the rear of the Woodland avenue portion. This gives the Stanley Company 87 feet on Woodland avenue by 100, 85 by 157 on Saybrook avenue.

Plans have been drawn for the building to be erected on this site and these include the erection of a theatre with a seating capacity of from 1,800 to 2,000, four stores and a dance hall, with capacious floor capacity. It is roughly estimated that these improvements will involve an expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars, and, with the cost of the ground included will reach the sum of $350,000.

Announcement is made that the theatre will be known as the Benn and its policy will be to present to residents in the southwestern section of the city feature photoplays on first run in this part of the city, together with other cinema subjects. The lobby will be a large one, occupying a space of 25 feet by 100 and the foyer leading into the theatre will be of the same dimension.

The lower floor will seat about 1,600, while there will be a balcony reached by inclines, thus doing away with the stairs and making it doubly secure in case of fire. The entire building will be fireproof throughout. The theatre will contain all the most modern equipment known to science in fitting up such buildings today. The structure will be of brick, terra cotta, marble and re-inforced concrete.

"For a long time past the Stanley Company of America has felt that motion picture lovers in the extreme southwestern section of Philadelphia were deserving of better accommodations than they were receiving in the way of motion picture theatres," said Mr. Mastbaum, in discussing this latest addition to the long chain of theatres under his direction. "The people in all that wide territory adjacent to 63d street and Woodland avenue are enthusiastic motion picture lovers. In our theatres in the neighborhoods tributary to this section we have given the best of pictures, but unfortunately our theatres were not adapted in seating capacity to the demands. It was with this in mind that we decided, in conjunction with Marcus Benn, to secure a site and build an entire new house rather than attempt to enlarge any of the present structures. We finally secured the present site."

Perfects Motion Pictures to Act in Unison with Sound of Human Voice

MOTION PICTURE films which will carry the sound of the human voice as the pictures are flashed on the screen have been perfected by the General Electric Company, of Schenectady, N. Y.

The first announcement came with a visit paid by Thomas A. Edison, to the General Electric's laboratories last week, when as the guest of the company, he was shown an invention which, it is said, may revolutionize the motion picture industry within the next two or three years, and perhaps sooner. The invention is known as the "Pallo-Photo-Phone" and is the brainwork of Charles A. Hoxie, one of the experts connected with the General Electric Company.

To the ordinary person, the invention appears rather complex. To a representative of the Moving Picture World, the invention was explained in the following language:

"This is a device for the purpose of recording sound upon a photographic film so that the sound may be afterward reproduced.

"The record is made by causing the sound waves to produce vibrations on an exceedingly minute and very delicate mirror. A beam of light reflected by this mirror strikes a photographic film which is kept in continuous motion. The film, when developed, shows a band of white with delicate markings on the edges which correspond to the sound which has been reproduced. On account of the exceedingly small size of the mirror, its low inertia, etc., it is possible by this means to produce a sound record which includes the very delicate overtones which give quality to speech and musical sound. This has not been so successfully accomplished by any other method of recording sound waves.

"The reproduction of the sound from the film is accomplished by moving the film in front of an exceedingly delicate electrical device which produces an electromotive force which varies with the amount of light which falls upon it. In the past attempts have been made to produce these results by means of selenium cells, but a selenium cell, though it responds to the changes in the amount of light which it receives, does not respond with sufficient promptness to produce good results; there is a sluggishness in the reponse which seriously interferes with the quality of sound which is produced.

"By an ingenious combination of vacuum tubes, there has been produced an apparatus which responds to variations in the light falling on it, with a speed which is so high that it can only be compared with the speed of light itself, or with the speed of propogation of wireless waves in space. Therefore, when this film is moved continuously in front of such a device, the device produces an electric current which corresponds very accurately to the original sound wave."

Good Projection and Fine Entertainment Draw Patrons Within Radius of 25 Miles

ARTHUR N. LAWSON, who is chief projectionist and advertising manager for Robert E. Riley, owner of the Capitol Theatre, Riverhead, and other theatres on the east end of Long Island, is one of those men in charge of projection who give a substantial meaning to the use of the term "projectionist."

Lawson thoroughly understands his work and on every occasion shows the world that he considers projection a highly important feature of the entertainment in a motion picture theatre. It is unfortunate that in some instances owners of picture theatres do not realize that the projection room is the heart of the house and they make little effort to help the projectionist get good results by supplying him with the proper equipment. Mr. Riley, however, is an experienced and successful owner and he gives his projectionist full support. He is building another theatre at Babylon.

Riverhead is the county seat of Suffolk county, New York, but this is an agricultural community practically without any important manufacturing industries. It cannot be regarded as a thickly populated section, but Mr. Riley built the Capitol Theatre, which compares favorably with many city theatres and draws his patronage from considerable distances. Southampton, one of America's exclusive summer colonies, is located about twenty-five miles from Riverhead, but many of the people residing there through the summer and winter are regular patrons of the Capitol Theatre.

Mr. Lawson, whose photograph is shown herewith, is a Green Mountain boy. He was first sergeant of his squadron in aviation. His knowledge of electricity made him an excellent man to take charge of projection for Mr. Riley's enterprises. Lawson is an enthusiast about his work and in order to keep properly informed regarding the motion picture industry he has all copies of the Moving Picture World issued during the past year nicely arranged on shelves in his office so that he can get at them easily when they are required for reference.

Mr. Lawson recently paid a visit to the factory of the Nicholas Power Company in order to get some points regarding Power's projectors, which are used in the Capitol Theatre. Mr. Lawson thinks it is a good idea to know something about how the machines are made which he is using. The Capitol Theatre does considerable advertising in the local papers and the following is taken from a column article which Mr. Lawson recently wrote for the County Review of Riverhead: "Its patrons are from far and near and the streets are lined for blocks with automobiles nearly every night in the week, bringing their passengers to the Capitol to seek recreation and rest in the comfortable leather upholstered chairs within, with the comfort and beauty of the interior of the house, the efficient and courteous service, the mammoth Robt. Morton Orchestra organ and the artistic presentation of entertaining motion pictures with the leading moving picture machines. Power's 6-B's guarantee the patrons perfect projection. The Power's projectors are installed in all the biggest theatres and studios throughout the country."

This seems to us an excellent illustration showing how exhibitors can interest their patrons in equipment.

A Warm, Well-Ventilated Auditorium Next Winter

Install a Skinner Bros. Direct-Fired Heater and you will have a warm, comfortable and well-ventilated auditorium next Winter. The Skinner Heater uses no pipes or ducts as warm air carriers—your aisles and walls are not blocked, cluttered up and made unsightly with the various kinds of heating fittings commonly used.

Can Be Installed Almost Anywhere No Odor, Practically Noiseless

The Skinner Heater may be installed almost anywhere in your building—in the basement, at the front of the auditorium or wherever it may be most convenient. It is easily operated and requires no more care than an ordinary furnace. Burns coal, coke, wood, gas or oil—creates no odor and is practically noiseless in operation.

A Very Good Ventilator

Besides being an effective heater, the Skinner system also acts as a very good ventilator. It supplies fresh, warm air, which replaces the impure air in the building—in use it needs to be operated only several hours daily.

Fully Guaranteed—Get Details

Every Skinner Heater is fully guaranteed when installed as directed by our Engineers, after a survey of the premises. Fully illustrated information will be forwarded on request.

Mov-Ezy

Means Ease at the Movies

"SIT DOWN"

How often have you felt like saying that as somebody decides to leave in the middle of a picture. Sometimes you have to stand as the offender stumbles past, other times a row of people in front of you are obliged to get up. In either case the screen is obscured and the picture's spoiled for you.

This was a condition common to all theatres—until the invention of the Mov-Ezy, the theatre chair that means "Ease at the Movies."

This chair is a beautiful, comfortable, individual armchair; but in addition, by means of a patented device, it may be turned to either side at the will of the occupant, providing ample passage space between rows, without the necessity for anyone arising.

The Mov-Ezy story is an interesting one. If you are a live theatre owner or manager, with an eye to profiting by the experience of others in increasing the comfort and popularity of your theatre, stop at our show room or write for beautifully illustrated catalogue.

How Abraham and Lot, with their caravans, met and joined forces, only to find later that their herdsmen could not agree, and how Abraham solved this problem by allowing Lot to choose the portion of the country he wanted while he (Abraham) took the other side is interestingly and reverently told in this single reeler. Are You Using the Press Book Ads?

MOST exhibitors find that their newspaper advertising problem is solved by the use of the Paramount press ads.

They are used by the largest theatres in the world. In New York, the Rivoli and Rialto use them constantly.

The smallest house has the services of an expert staff—for nothing.

Above is the four-column cut on "A Daughter of Luxury." It's a business pulling cut—and business pulling copy.

You can get the press ads in mats or electros at your exchange.

FOOLISH WIVES continues to prove the sensation of the age, duplicating in foreign countries its remarkable success in the United States. Universal Exchanges report record breaking bookings for repeat play dates on Von Stroheim's masterpiece.

THE STORM, the biggest picture of the new season, is acclaimed in thousands of letters that have poured in to Mr. Laemmle as the greatest box office attraction that any exhibitor could wish for.

THE KENTUCKY DERBY, produced with a special cast headed by Reginald Denny, star of all the LEATHER PUSHERS, was directed by King Baggot. Prints are now in Universal exchanges, where exhibitors will be able to see this stupendous romantic melodrama before booking.

THE FLIRT, Booth Tarkington's masterpiece, produced with an all-star cast under the direction of Hobart Henley, is hailed by Universal City authorities and artists as the finest production of its type ever offered the exhibitor. Some go so far as to call it the best picture Universal ever made.

BITTER SWEET is now in its final stages of completion at Universal City. A remarkable cast is headed by Lon Chaney, who has for his leading lady, Virginia Valli. It is being directed by Lambert Hillyer.

MERRY GO ROUND, with its great cast and typical Stroheim settings will shortly be ready for the editing department.

THE NEW LEATHER PUSHERS, in six rounds, with the original cast headed by Reginald Denny and including Hayden Stevenson, are now completed. They were made under the direction of Harry Pollard, director of the original series of six. Prints are on their way to all "U" exchanges.

UP THE LADDER, William A. Brady's big Broadway stage success by Owen Davis, has been purchased for Virginia Valli, who will star in the role made famous by Doris Kenyon.

THE HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME will be produced by Universal with Lon Chaney and one of the greatest casts ever assembled for any big picture. All filmdom is agog and wondering who the lucky director will be in the final selection. A list containing the names of the finest directors in the industry is now being carefully scanned.

WHITE TIGER, starring PRISCILLA DEAN, is rapidly nearing completion, with Tod Browning directing. This is said to be along the lines of "Outside the Law," but bigger and more elaborate in every way.

DRIFTING, the sensational Broadway stage success from the pen of John Colton, produced by William A. Brady with Alice Brady in the lead, will shortly be put into production starring PRISCILLA DEAN.

EXHIBITORS HERALD

Excellent acting, beautiful photography and rich sets are outstanding features of this Travers Vale Production, a tale of stage life, adapted from a novel by Clara Morris.

"A Pasteboard Crown" is the story of a once wealthy girl who seeks a stage career after her family has been reduced to poverty.

The title of the production it is apparent, is one that arouses interest and readily lends itself to exploitation. The picture combines the rich embellishments of a society drama combined with the natural interest that attaches to a story of stage life.

ENID BENNETT

in The BOOTLEGGER'S DAUGHTER

with FRED NIBLO

Directed by VICTOR SCHERTZINGER

"The Story and Cast of this Feature Eclipses Any Other Picture of its Type"
—Motion Picture News

A rare combination.

Enid Bennett and Fred Niblo directed by Victor Schertzinger in a story by R. Cecil Smith.

Supporting cast includes Donald MacDonald, Melbourne McDowell, Virginia Sothern, Billy Elmer and J. P. Lockney.

The "bootlegger's daughter" (Enid Bennett) is shunned by all good folks because of her father's shady business. She never had a chance until a broad-minded clergyman with a sense of humor (Fred Niblo) sets her right. In time the despised bootlegger's daughter becomes the town's pride and joy.

It's a drama, replete with romance and comedy. Rely on Enid Bennett and Fred Niblo for that.

Victor Schertzinger's big idea in directing is action, atmosphere and interest.

In its review the Motion Picture News said:

"Recently pictures built along the lines of this one had a very successful run, mainly because they were well exploited. The same thing can be done with this one. The story and cast of this feature eclipses any other feature of its type."

8 Known Personalities in One Picture

DESTINY'S ISLE

A William P.S. Earle Production

Personally directed by Wm. P.S. Earle

All of the eight name roles of "Destiny's Isle" have been given to players who have audience-values for exhibitors. Singly and combined these players will bring patrons into your theatre; they will "draw" as good actors and actresses and on the reputations that personalities establish with motion picture "fans" everywhere.

"Destiny's Isle" is an exciting, romantic melodrama laid in a New York society environment; in the fashionable Florida winter resort hotels; in the picturesque Bahama Islands. It is a story of swift airplane flights; vigorous, breath-taking encounters; a theft that almost wrecked a romance.

2nd Successful Week of a Run at the Cameo Theatre New York

Please notice that practically every review on this picture either says or intimates that this picture is the kind that will make big money out across the entire United States. Its audience values must be very apparent to make critics say a thing of that sort.

Its opening Sunday at the Cameo was the second largest Sunday patronage and return in dollars in the history of the theatre —just a few cents less than the opening Sunday of "Peacock Alley," which made money for exhibitors everywhere.

QUEEN OF THE MOULIN ROUGE

From Paul Potter's Famous Stage Success

A Ray C. Smallwood Production

What the New York Critics Say:

Based upon the familiar play of the same title, the film version lends itself more readily to the technique necessary for the production of such stories than does the stage. There is a surfeit of action, and not a little suspense. The settings are extremely well done.—N. Y. World.

There is considerable to be said in favor of "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" in speed, action and thrills.—N. Y. American.

This being the season for thrills, if you want another sit through "Queen of the Moulin Rouge." The settings, the photography, the acting——in fact everything about the picture is of the highest type. It ranks with the best cinemas of the screen.—Evening Telegram.

We are able to predict with certainty that it is going to make a lot of money; it shows Paris, the Montmarte and everything.—N. Y. Tribune.

If we could roll our R's after the manner of a telephone girl, we'd be able to spell Thrill the way we'd have to in order to describe "Queen of the Moulin Rouge."—Evening World.

Pictures about pure girls who flee from haunts of Parisian night life to find happiness in true love are almost always assured of success; so it is with "Queen of the Moulin Rouge."

Production O. K., lighting and photography excellent, Parisian atmosphere first rate.

Friday...October 27TH, was the greatest day in our history!

This was the day "SHADOWS" was first shown to an audience...an audience that was as representative of the world and its viewpoint as an audience could possibly be.

It comprised people from all walks of life and from every quarter of the globe there was Hayakawa..Abe Blank of Des Moines E.V. Richards of New Orleans...Sam Katz of Chicago..in fact, people from everywhere. There were critics from all the trade-papers dailies, magazines. There were artists, producers directors, distributors, writers; foreign buyers, rewind girls, publicity men, and a great many not connected with pictures.

Here are some of the comments after the showing:

HAYAKAWA said, "Lon Chaney's characterization of an Oriental is the truest and most realistic impersonation an Occidental could possibly portray."

HARRISON, of Harrison's Reports, said, "The picture is in a class with 'THE MIRACLE MAN'".

Produced by PREFERRED PICTURES-INC.

Proud!

GILBERT EMERY, the playwright, said, "It is the most legitimate drama I have ever seen in motion pictures."

GEORGE BLAISDELL said, "This is a picture which will make new reputations and fortify others."

It is not merely because "SHADOWS" is a great picture that we are proud - after all, great pictures are expected of every producer. The fact that our second picture is one which has already created so much talk, and is acclaimed so wholesome and out-of-the-ordinary and one that will bring the whole industry honor and esteem, is what makes us proud!

"SHADOWS" will create prestige, profits and respect for your theatre.

Your patrons will thank you for the opportunity of having seen a picture so different and worth while.

The picture possesses appeal to the intellect as well as entertainment value. Clara Kimball Young gives a dramatic performance as the idealistic Russian woman, injecting much feeling into the part . . . the gowns worn are strikingly beautiful. The picture starts off with a punch and maintains a good rate of speed in development of plot, despite the necessity for elaborate characterization.

Weekly Film Review—

Clara Kimball Young is very beautiful as the Russian refugee and later as the faith healer. . . . The picture is beautifully and painstakingly produced.

The picture is a . . . box office attraction.

MUST NOT BE MISSED

"Here is a picture that stands out, one that must not be missed. A SCREEN MASTERPIECE

"A screen masterpiece of human interest. It is the best picture we've seen in months, splendidly cast, wonderfully photographed, superbly acted, as good screen entertainment as one could ask. Direction as near perfect as anything screened. Never a more appealing character than Jackie as Oliver."—New York Evening World.

"Make no mistake about it, this is one of the matchless pictures of the year—Jackie and the rest are the essence of Dickens. All the scenes are so vivid and arresting it is hard to single out any."—New York Sun.

JACKIE IS MARVELOUS

"'Oliver Twist' as a movie is everything that it should be. Little Jackie himself is marvelous. He brings Oliver to life. If Charles Dickens can sneak off from his angelic duties, we feel sure that he will float into the Strand this week—and we know that he will enjoy himself immensely."—New York Herald.

MOST LOVABLE

"We have never seen so lovable a figure in motion pictures as the 'Oliver Twist' of Jackie Coogan. If there is a better motion picture actor than Jackie, bring him out and let us have a look at him. WILL FILL THEATRES

"It is destined to keep the house full. A characterization you can not resist."—New York Times.

THOROUGHLY CAPTIVATING

"It achieves the Dickens we all love. We were thoroughly captivated by Jackie. He visualized perfectly 'Oliver Twist.' You should surely see it."—New York Daily News.

Things to Talk About

It's always the way. All the news and all the things to talk about compressed into one week. The resignation of J. D. Williams, the arrival of "Robin Hood," the Massachusetts censorship referendum —items in abundance on the memo pad this week.

Next week three film men talking in the Astor lobby will be heard to remark, "Say, things are terribly dead in the picture business, aren't they? Nothing happening."

Daddy and the Family Disagree

We have no desire to discuss the internal phases of J. D. Williams' retirement from First National. Doing so would make us feel very much in the position of the Innocent Bystander who interjects his views in a family quarrel.

The Innocent Bystander means well—but not being a member of the family he just doesn't know what he's talking about, that's all. And we all know his usual fate.

But the surface facts of the Williams case deserve comment. First National in New York is just "another film company" to a trade paper, and out over the country, it is a cooperative organization in which thousands of exhibitors are deeply interested.

Matters of Policy

The general understanding is that the split between First National and its General Manager came over differences of opinion on important matters of future policy.

Rumor has it that the sharpest division was on the question of whether or not First National should produce pictures itself.

The decision on policy was First National's to make. Once made, the situation demanded a man at the helm who had firm faith in the policy. And the soundness of First National, together with its bright prospects for the future, may be summed up in the person of Richard A. Rowland.

But there is still a shock in the stepping out of J. D. Williams. For J. D. has to us always signified "the First National idea." Way back to 1914 and beyond J. D. used to enthusiastically tell us "dreams" which we later saw in the reality—in First National.

The Week's Best Laugh

We have read many sublime asininities in the course of a hectic motion picture career—but we believe the prize will be held for all time by the writer who this week tells his narrow circle of the Williams news with crocodile tears and sniveling sympathy.

"We shouldn't pick on J. D. Williams now that he is down and out," is about the way the drivel winds up.

J. D. Williams is neither down, nor is he out. Nor will he ever be as long as he retains the vision, the courage, and the fundamentally clear conception of motion pictures that is his.

It is in the newspaper blood to know that—"a fight is a fight, and as long as the fight is on—FIGHT! But when the fight is over—forget it!"

The writer in question could favor himself by writing an editorial on J. D. Williams as an adversary who fought for "his organization, right or wrong. But his organization every time."

There's a streak in human nature that admires that type of man even when it disagrees with him.

Something To Be Proud Of

There is food for pride in the New York premiere of "Robin Hood," both because of the picture and because of the premiere itself.

The spontaneous enthusiasm of the crowds that packed the Lyric Theatre and the mob that jammed the street outside is a tonic to a film man's occasionally shaken faith. The deep appeal and strong pull of the motion picture still exist.

You battled your way through the Lyric lobby and the shouts of "Where's Doug?—and Mary?—and Valentino?"—with the joyous feeling, "This is like the good old days!"

A public that demands more, is, however, no less enthusiastic. And the enthusiasm is more solid because it is discriminating.

There is no necessity here to discuss "Robin Hood" as a picture. The reviews can do that—and then they seem futile and useless—for a Fairbanks picture has become a Fairbanks picture. There's no other guarantee needed.

But of "Robin Hood" as an epic of courage, of sincerity, of devotion to an art too much cannot be said.

They say that the truly great artist always feels within him a gratitude towards his art and the opportunities it has given him. We can well imagine "Robin Hood" being conceived and created in Gratitude—from Douglas Fairbanks to the Motion Picture.

We had better stop—before we start raving.

This Also Is Courage

You don't have to spend a million dollars to exemplify courage. We saw another example of courage on a screen at the Biltmore last week.

"Shadows" is a picture for the independent market, presented by B. P. Schulberg and Al. Lichtman.

It is a picture that we enjoyed, that patrons everywhere are going to enjoy—but sitting in the darkened ballroom we could only think of the courage of Benny Schulberg.

Benny is an experienced veteran film man. He knows that there is a lot of difference between the picture that pleases patrons and the picture that pleases film men.

And Benny knows that in the independent field the chief and usually the only thought must be to please the "fillum men." He displayed that knowledge to perfection in "Rich Men's Wives."

And "Shadows" is a gem of a story—but a story without a typical fillum hero, or heroine, or villyun, or situation. It's about the regular people who live in this world "outside the picture business."

What courage on Benny's part to follow through his convictions and produce this story! And courage that should be rewarded—by the exhibitor, his number is legion, that says, "My patrons are sick and tired of the same old thing. My better patrons are staying away because pictures are too hackneyed and cheap."

But they do say—the exchangemen—that this same exhibitor is the toughest one to sell something that is different. He hasn't the courage that he demands of producers.

After the Deluge!

After the deluge—what? 'Sfunny how pictures run in cycles. Just now it is the flood picture.

Brought on by the "storm" pictures that followed "The Storm." And probably finding its genesis in the rush and swirl of the climax to "Way Down East."

New York saw Goldwyn's "The Sin Flood" last week, first of the flood pictures, but held up to elaborate and intensify the flood scenes. Here's a flood picture that doesn't need its flood—for the strength of the drama is deeper, in the watching of characters in the raw when face to face with the crisis of life.

And they tell us that William Fox presents a flood that brings 'ems to the edge of the seats in "The Town That Forgot God." There will probably be more. Then—after the deluge—what?

Buy a Barrel of Spuds

The theatre owners' organization of Wisconsin has received an opportunity for real Public Welfare Work—and is responding.

Thirty days ago the farmers of Wisconsin and Minneapolis seemed doomed. Thousands of carloads of potatoes would never reach the market and thousands more would never be dug out of the ground.

State officials, civic organizations, took the matter up. And in the forefront of activity have been the theatre owners of the state. "Potato Week" is being held and enthusiasm is running high.

Now the theatre owners of Wisconsin need the help of exhibitors in neighboring states. It is to be hoped that it will be given—in full measure and heartily.

When the dust has settled and a great job is completed—the industry in the Northwest will hold its head just a bit higher.

First Time Before the People

For the first time in history the people of a state are to have an opportunity to vote on motion picture censorship. Next Tuesday is an important day for the industry throughout the country. And Massachusetts gives the verdict.

In the past it has always been a political machine and a Legislature that enforced censorship. After next Tuesday we will always be able to point out how "the people" feel about it—or else we will have nothing to say.

Right now it is difficult to forecast the verdict. The man sitting at a trade paper desk could write a different story every day on such events. One caller comes in to whisper to him inside information that the campaign is "all wrong," the next visitor has the evidence to show that it is headed straight for success.

Only the votes give the answer. And the day after brings the opportunity to write the story.

Aside from the importance of the censorship fight in itself next Tuesday's election has another important angle. It is the first occasion that the industry has waged a political battle since the Hays organization was formed.

The first battle should never tell the story. But it is often made to do so. Thus a gentleman by the name of Will Hays may be expected to have considerable concern over the actions of the voters of Massachusetts next Tuesday.

Cecil B. DeMille Elected Officer of New Hollywood Bank

Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been elected vice president of the newly organized Federal Trust and Savings Bank of Hollywood. This new financial institution will care for its share of the rapidly increasing monetary business of the film capital.

Associated with Mr. DeMille in the enterprise are prominent Hollywood business men, including C. E. Toberman, president; George L. Eastman, vice-president, and A. J. Olsen, vice-president and manager. Mr. DeMille's step into a vice-presidential position in the new bank was not altogether a new venture into banking as he has been for some time a director of the Commercial National Bank of Los Angeles.

The new Hollywood institution opened its doors to the public on October 14.

Famous Players Hold Sales Convention in Los Angeles

On the invitation of Mayor Cryer of Los Angeles and the Chambers of Commerce of that city and of Hollywood, and at the earnest solicitation of Jesse L. Lasky, Adolph Zukor announced yesterday that the semi-annual convention of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be held November 21 in Los Angeles.

A special train, leaving the Grand Central Station the night of November 16, will carry the Paramount executives, heads of home office departments and many of the district and branch managers to the Coast, picking up other contingents at stops along the route. The convention will be held at the Hotel Ambassador.

Details of the convention were not divulged further than the announcement that the sales policy of the company for the six months after February 1 will be discussed and announced.

T. O. C. C. Dance December 2nd

December 2 has been set as the date of the Third Annual Supper Dance of Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the Gold Room of the Astor as the place. Plans include special entertainment, a fashion show, motion pictures of those present, two of Lopez's Pennsylvania orchestras, and numerous novelties. Lee Ochs is chairman of the Ball Committee and Victor Shapiro is attending to publicity.

Newsy Briefs

Aaron A. Corn and Henry Fried, real estate agents, are suing J. Alton Bradbury, president of the Bunny Theatre, N. Y. C., for $2,952.50, which they claim as commissions due in securing the lease of the theatre.

The Federal Trade Commission, after many hearings, has finally issued an order prohibiting the Eskay Harris Feature Film Co., from using the title "Black Beauty" in connection with a re-issued Edison film originally made in 1917 under the title, "Your Obedient Servant."

The committee of producers and distributors appointed to co-operate with the American Red Cross in the annual Roll Call starting November 11 is as follows: Will Hays, chairman; Harold Bolster, William Fox, R. H. Cochrane, Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, Lewis J. Selznick, Earl W. Hammons, Frank J. Godsol, John M. Quinn, Joseph M. Schenck and Warner Brothers.

The third annual report of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, shows profits of $439,192.18. Dividend of eight per cent. was declared on the preferred stock.

Famous Players Canadian Corporation has acquired Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto. Film attractions booked for the Regent, for the past six years home house of the corporation, will be transferred to Shea's.

They are still unloading the Black Theatres—announcement coming that New England Theatres, Inc., has sold the Strand, Randolph, Vt., and the Black, Bethel, Vt., to James F. Bennett.

Mayflower Photoplays Corporation is asking for the vacating of an attachment secured by Nat Brown, who is suing for an alleged breach of contract of employment. Justice O'Malley, of the N. Y. Supreme Court, has set next Monday for a hearing.

Looking Into It

Will Investigate Advantages of Co-operation

The Post Office Department, Washington, D. C., is now studying the service with a view to determining wherein advantage can be taken of the recent offer of Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to cooperate in building and perfecting the postal service.

To Study Situation

All postmasters throughout the country have been advised of Mr. Cohen's offer, in which the screens of the United States are placed at the free disposal of the Post Office Department, and have been instructed to study the situation within the jurisdiction of their offices with a view to ascertaining to what extent various postmasters may avail themselves of the offer.

The instructions sent out by the Post Office Department suggest a number of ways in which the theatres may cooperate with the postal service.

Sees His Mistake

Senator Repudiates Censorship Bill Which He Himself Fathered

One of the most dramatic incidents in connection with the eleventh hour fight in Massachusetts for and against the bill providing for a State censorship of moving pictures, has been the sudden and sensational repudiation of the bill by Senator George D. Chamberlain of Springfield, the author and father of it.

The Senator admits that since the bill was passed he has been able to get a little more insight into what the bill really provides and he is afraid that its enforcement will most seriously endanger the free institutions of the State. He now doubts, he says, the wisdom of his action in sponsoring the bill.

Snub for F. I. L. M.

Sign of War in Walker's Letter Representing T. O. C. C.

Signs of a possible war between the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce in New York City and the local F. I. L. M. Club are evident in a curt and snappy letter by Senator James J. Walker, representing the exhibitors.

The letter was in response to a request by the F. I. L. M. Club to Messrs. Grob and Nabel to appear at a hearing and explain charges that they had entered into an agreement with Charles Goldreyer to stifle competition.

In addition to satiric references to "divine right" possessed by the exchanges the letter closes with the statement: "The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce is prepared to defend each and everyone of its members with all the force it possesses against any unjust exactions or illegal proceedings."

Urge Its Repeal

Exhibitor's Voice Strong Protest Against Daylight Saving Law

Strong opposition to the daylight saving law was emphatically voiced at the meeting of the Western New York Motion Picture Theatre Owners, Inc., in Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 30. The meeting was held in the Palace Theatre. It was urged that the law be abolished.

It was pointed out that the law worked an injury in all localities by upsetting the regular routine of the people. It was especially emphasized that the law worked against the health of children by interferring with their sleeping hours.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. A., and J. O'Toole, chairman of the public service committee of the national organization, were present, and made interesting addresses.

Williams Resigns From First National; Rowland Appointed General Manager

J. D. WILLIAMS has found it advisable, in view of his plans for the future, to resign as manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and the directors of First National have regretfully accepted his resignation.

Mr. Williams' association with First National, as manager from the time of its organization, and his prominence in the starting of this company, as well as in the motion picture industry generally, are so well-known that little need or can be said.

Mr. Williams leaves the office of manager of First National with the best wishes and kind regards of all of his former associates. It is probable that Mr. Williams will take a considerable vacation before announcing his further plans.

Richard A. Rowland, who has been associated with H. O. Schwalbe and Mr. Williams for the last six months in directing the affairs of First National, has been appointed by the board of directors, general manager of First National.

Weiss, Head of Artclass Pictures, Tells of Plans

WITH Alfred Weiss, one of the best known film executives in the industry, now at the helm of the organization and determined to place that firm at the head of their class, Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures' Corporation this week officially confirmed a report published exclusively in Moving Picture World several months ago that it will produce a definite number of high class productions annually for distribution by national distributing corporations. According to a statement made this week by Mr. Weiss to a representative of Moving Picture World the program this year will embrace four big productions, of which the first will be "Between Worlds," said to be a great spectacle production entirely different than any of the current offerings. Another big special is now in the course of production and definite announcement as to its title and story will be made within the next week, said Mr. Weiss.

Mr. Weiss comes to Artclass Pictures' Corporation from Goldwyn which he help found. He was Vice-President and general manager of Goldwyn and in charge of their distribution department for six years. He held a percentage contract with the New York and Buffalo Goldwyn exchanges. Last season when negotiations were opened between Goldwyn and First National, the latter demanding 100 per cent. distribution of Goldwyn pictures. Mr. Weiss withdraw and sold his interests in the corporation for $100,000. Mr. Weiss has been in the motion picture business for 18 years and following his resignation from Goldwyn decided to associate himself with the Weiss Brothers' Artclass Corporation with the distinct understanding that that firm would produce a series of four big special productions annually.

As a production executive Mr. Weiss ranks among the leaders in the industry, which he studied from every angle. Mr. Weiss emphasized the claim that Artclass will make pictures to conform with the public demand and that at all times the firm will keep in touch with this demand. Three national distributors already have opened negotiations with Artclass Corporation, which, in the brief period that it has been in existence, has made remarkable progress.

The advent of Mr. Weiss further strengthens the position of that corporation, financially, artistically and otherwise, for he brings with him an experience that covers an intimate knowledge of every branch in the business and an acquaintanceship that constitutes a "Who Is Who In Filmdom." Mr. Weiss is now President and General Manager of Artclass Pictures' Corporation.

Prior to his association with Goldwyn Mr. Weiss operated the Alfred Weiss Film Exchange in New York, selling it to General Film Company. Later he headed the old Mutual and from the latter went with Triangle Pictures' Corporation. Six years ago he founded, with others, Goldwyn Pictures' Corporation.

While no definite announcement concerning the production activities of Artclass Pictures' Corporation has been made, the fact remains that that firm has opened negotiations with a number of leading directors and authors. An announcement that will prove a big surprise to the trade in general will be made next week.

To Attend Meeting

President Sydney S. Cohen, of the M. P. T. O. A., and J. O'Toole, chairman of the public service committee of the national organization, will attend a meeting of the Moving Picture Theatre Owners of Northern New York, Tuesday, in Rochester. This territory extends as far as Syracuse. The national officers will be the guests of George Eastman at the Eastman Theatre Tuesday morning.

To Get Franchise

Sydney S. Cohen, national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has said that he will grant exhibitors of St. Louis and Eastern Missouri a separate franchise from the national organization. Under the plan, Missouri will have two distinct organizations of motion picture theatre owners, but both will be affiliated with the national organization. One association will have its headquarters in St. Louis and the other in Kansas City.

Dear Sirs: Enclosed please find our cheque for $7.00, in payment of renewal subscriptions for Mr. Ball and Mr. Tickner, as per statement enclosed.

As subscribers to your journal for—we think—eleven years, permit us to extend our congratulations to Mr. Welsh, who has recently taken up the reins of office in the editorial chair, and to express our recognition of the vim and enthusiasm shown in recent numbers. The boxes in the "Review" columns are certainly very welcome; they signify very plainly where you stand on these particular notices.

And here allow me to emphasize the great importance we attach to criticisms of current attractions. It matters little how well trade magazines are conducted if the review pages cannot be relied on by the exhibitor, for, after all is said and done, this department is of paramount interest to all theatre owners and managers.

Yours very truly,
R. S. TICKNER.

Big Premiere

"Douglas Fairbanks in 'Robin Hood'" was given its premiere at the Lyric Theatre, New York City, Monday night, October 30, and so great were the crowds that were anxious to see the picture that a second showing was put on at 11:15 p. m.

Outside the theatre before the showing started the crowds, waiting to catch a glimpse of "Doug" and Mary who were to make personal appearances, made it necessary to call out the police reserves to make way for traffic.

The newspapers praised the picture highly.

Omaha Convention Off to a Promising Start

Omaha, Neb., Nov. 1.
(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

EXHIBITORS began gathering here today for the Third Annual Convention of the M. P. T. O., of Iowa and Nebraska. The day was taken up with addresses of welcome, an open meeting of addresses and an evening banquet. More than 100 registered during the day, and nearly 200 were present at the banquet in the evening. While the business meeting does not begin until tomorrow, there already is talk of action on an arbitration board of exhibitors and exchange men, collective buying, reduction in the price of accessories, music tax, equitable contract, election of officers and the advisability of the M. P. T. O. A. producing films.

The addresses at the opening session today, as well as the general attitude of those attending the Convention, indicate that the key note of the interstate gathering is co-operation. Among the prominent out-of-town people present are: Dr. Thomas G. Patten, of New York, representing Will H. Hays; A. J. Moeller, of New York, general manager of the M. P. T. O. A.; E. T. Peter, former president of the Texas association, and W. A. Steffes, president of the Minnesota association.

Dr. Patton, in an address before the convention, said, "The motion picture industry and the public are already on better terms as a result of the Will Hays organization." He declared the industry has scarcely begun to develop, and predicted an amazing increase in quality and character of pictures in the next ten years.

Nearly 200 exhibitors and exchangemen, with their wives, attended the annual banquet this evening. Secretary J. E. Kirk, of the Nebraska association, responded to a toast on the past year, declaring that the Nebraska association has increased greatly in strength during 1922. President A. R. Pramer, of the Nebraska organization, predicted an even greater growth during 1923, and pictured the development of the motion picture theatre industry in the Middle West in the future. Dr. George E. Condra, of the State University of Nebraska, spoke on visual education.

Films Appropriate for Book Week Tie-ups

FOR tie-ups with Motion Picture Book Week, Associated First National, Inc., and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation each have a number of productions that are particularly appropriate. These films have been sanctioned by the National Committee for Better Films and the National Board of Review and are listed by them as particularly appropriate for Book Week presentation. All of them have been made from world renowned literary works or have been suggested by paintings of no less renown.

Of the list of 109 pictures which the National Board of Review selected as particularly applicable for Book Week showing, nine are released under Associated First National auspices. The Book Week list compiled by the National Committee for Better Films includes no less than 14 productions released by Hodkinson and which, it is said, fit in particularly well for presentation during the week of literary showings.

The works of some of the greatest authors of the present as well as the past have been transferred to the silver sheet by these two prominent organizations, and it is these filminizations as well as those suggested by the works of artists of renown that have received the sanction for Book Week showings by both the National Board of Review and the National Committee for Better Films.

The Hodkinson productions that have been listed are "The Beggar Maid," "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," "A Certain Rich Man," "God's Crucible," "The Gray Dawn," "The Headless Horseman," "Jane Eyre," "The Light in the Clearing," "The Mysterious Rider," "No Trespassing," "Rip Van Winkle," "The Young Painter," "The Bashful Suitor" and "Hope."

The Associated First National productions are "All for a Woman," "Bob Hampton of Placer," "Kindred of the Dust," "The Last of the Mohicans," "Lorna Doone," "The Old Swimmin' Hole," "Penrod," "Pilgrims of the Night" and "The River's End."

Montana's Golden Days Still Linger in Johnson's Memory

Back in Minneapolis in 1906, the Unique Theatre was one of the newest and most up-to-date "Movie Palaces" of the day. It was in the projection room of the Unique that Leroy V. Johnson, an ambitious young fellow, was first introduced to moving pictures. In a short time he learned to become an expert operator. Then he wanted a house of his own. Greater opportunities beckoned from the West, and in 1910 drew him to Montana, where he bought the Dreamland Theatre in Great Falls and played to golden business.

Those were the days when Montana was in the height of her greatest prosperity. Amusement seekers didn't care how often they spent 10 cents for a show. The show lasted for about 20 minutes. Slides invited late comers to remain and see the first of the picture.

It was also the popular thing to have a ballyhoo. First, a speaker who yelled through a megaphone from the projection booth, which was so hot and stuffy he had to drink innumerable glasses of water, in order to exist, at the same time grinding out the picture to his audience, slowing up for pathetic or love scenes, speeding 'er up, for "drammer" or a fight.

Edison had invented a repeating phonograph, for which wax cylinder records were made by the management, describing the show within. This was a saver on the lung power of the manager, but the problem confronting this young exhibitor was that his phonograph was not a repeater. Therefore, he ingeniously devised a string arrangement which would lift the needle at the end of the record, and could be drawn back to the beginning and started over. This worked from the booth, and turned the trick nicely, bringing in a goodly number of dimes at every show.

Over a period of three years, Mr. Johnson traveled about, owning houses in Idaho and Butte, looking over the territories and possibilities of further development. Another problem confronting the exhibitor of those days was the fact that only two good services were available, namely, Universal and General Film Co. Wherefore, if an exhibitor came into a small town already having two theatres, he played a bad third, found "three was a crowd" and moved on.

Returning to Great Falls, Mr. Johnson purchased the Alcazar Theatre. He remained in Great Falls until 1920. During the latter years of his residence there, he became identified with the Jensen & Von Herberg interests, later managing a Portland house for them. On November, 1921, he was put in charge of the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, a J. & V. house, where he has made a record as a live-wire. More recently, Mr. Johnson has added the management of the Neptune, a high-class residential theatre recently purchased by Jensen & Von Herberg, to his other activities. Only the cream of first-run features are offered at the Neptune.

As a reminiscence of old times and by way of contrast, Mr. Johnson offered with his New Year's Eve matinee program last year, the ancient film of "Jesse James."

Jim Jackson, Runaway Boy, Started Three Flights Up

Jim Jackson, of the Tudor Theatre, Atlanta, may lay claim to being one of, if not the oldest, exhibitor in point of service in this neck of the woods, for Mr. Jackson's first picture experience was in a little shot-gun theatre in Providence, R. I., in 1905. He has another claim to distinction—he is one of the first exhibitors to ever read a copy of Moving Picture World, and has been a regular reader of every single issue since that first sixteen-page sheet out on March 9, 1907.

Mr. Jackson was born in Danville, Va., and it was as a runaway boy, in Providence, that he first started in the picture game. From the house in Providence he went to Woonsocket, where he managed a very "up-to-date" place over the opening of which the towns-people waxed self-congratulative. It seated 1,500 people, and it was three flights up.

"In those days," said Mr. Jackson, "the pictures were almost all foreign efforts and everybody fought for a Pathe picture. If you could book a Pathe, you were set and smilin' pretty—and Pathe's big star then was Max Linder. 'His First Cigar' and 'The Runaway Horse' were among the Linder masterpices that we played then, and a Vitagraph comedy called, 'The Electric Elixir,' was another comedy that I recall."

From Woonsocket, Mr. Jackson went to Webster, Mass., where he managed the Music Hall, and then back to Danville, in 1908. There he became associated with the Trent Brothers, who opened a nice little house in Danville, called the Gaiety, which was so big a success that the brothers were encouraged and sent Mr. Jackson to Lynchburg to open another Gaiety, which ran pictures and Keith vaudeville.

From Lynchburg, Mr. Jackson went to Baltimore, where he managed the Little Wizard and the Blue Mouse. In 1915, William Oldknow, veteran Atlanta film man, built the Alcazar in Atlanta and Mr. Jackson came down to manage it.

"And the Alcazar put on just about everything that has been hailed as new in Atlanta within the last few years," adds Mr. Jackson. "Prologues, lobby displays, illustrated songs, 'spot-light' singers—practically every innovation that has been trotted out and hailed as startling and sensationally novel, was used by the Alcazar."

After a brief trip to Jacksonville, and a much needed rest, Mr. Jackson assumed management of the Tudor Theatre in 1918, and except for five months during the war, has been in command.

One Oldtimer's Troubles

She Couldn't Smell the Liquor!

Editor, Regional News and Gossip Department:

"I have been in the exhibitor end of the business since the time when a three-reel jumping picture was classed as a wonderful show," writes Ned Pedigo, owner and manager of the Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Okla. "Something fascinating about the game; don't know what it is, for it is not all pleasure—lots of disappointments, lots of pleasure.

"One night we had on a big picture. Two women were buying and the cashier explained that it was a big picture and prices were 40 cents on the first floor and 30 cents on the second floor. They stood thinking a moment and then asked if we were going to have it on both floors.

"Yes, we have these patrons who have seen most all the pictures even before they are made; those who really never see anything new to them anywhere. These people, the Lord protect them, are everywhere. One old lady remarked the other evening that we did not get the effects here that they did back home. 'For instance,' she said, 'now back where I used to come from we could just smell the liquor in a barroom scene.'

"If some fellow could educate the masses so that they would know that a picture was not made in the East and just gradually worked its way West, we would be very thankful if he would get busy. We would also like to see a Methodist, Baptist or some kind of a preacher in a picture and not have him turn out to be a crook. Why do they always make monkeys of them? People are getting tired of this sort of thing. What do you say we hold the priest out for a few weeks and give the other fellow a chance? It would not hurt anything and might do much good."

Charles H. Ryan Is a Chicago Pioneer

Charles H. Ryan, of the Garfield Theatre, Chicago, controlled by the Charles J. Schaefer Theatrical Enterprises, rates as a veteran although he is only 29 years old. He has been an exhibitor eleven years, the managing director of the Garfield, a neighborhood house, since 1911, and has been in the business, part of the time as an assistant manager, thirteen years. That's some record for a young chap!

Who Can Solve Syracuse's Problems?

WHEN is a city over-seated from the standpoint of the picture theatre? Can Syracuse, N. Y., be said to be over-seated when its downtown houses running straight pictures accommodate 11,000 persons out of a population of 175,000, and Buffalo, in its downtown houses, seats 13,500 persons out of a population of 500,000?

Does exploitation cheapen a house and does it really draw consistent business which will continue to maintain itself through coming weeks?

Would it be good policy for a picture theatre in the business center to close during three months of the summer and reopen in the early fall?

Are girls superior to boys as ushers? Should a premium be placed upon honesty on the part of ushers returning lost articles?

These are some of the problems that are confronting the exhibitors of Syracuse, N. Y., at the present time, and ones which they would welcome a word of advice through the experience of others in cities the size of Syracuse.

To begin with, Syracuse picture heatres are not experiencing any reat pick-up in business this fall. ome of the owners are inclined o the belief that the city is in n over-seated condition. During he past two or three weeks figres have reached Syracuse, showng that in Buffalo, with its half-illion or more population, the owntown houses, including those hich combine pictures and vaudeille, but not including Shea's, he houses accommodate 13,500, hereas Syracuse with a popula-on of only about one-third that f Buffalo, has houses in its down-own section seating between 10,-00 and 11,000 persons, and that ll told, in Syracuse, the forty or ore houses can take care of 27,-00 persons.

"The picture business in cities ne size of Syracuse is only one f nine months," declared J. M. riswold, manager of the Savoy, o a Moving Picture World repesentative. "There is no quesion but that the automobiles are utting more and more into the ummer business, particularly the heatre that is located in the busiess center of a good sized city. Vith residential houses showing ood pictures, the people are not nclined to come downtown even f they desire an evening's enterainment. If it isn't the automoile, then it is the residential house hat attracts them.

"I believe that the time is com-ng when picture theatres in down-own centres will find it to their dvantage to close for at least en weeks during the summer, uch the same as many legitimate ouses now do, and then open in he early fall. I think that such procedure would stimulate busi-ess and that many houses would ot only be money ahead but that he entire business would be bene-ited rather than injured, as now appens, when houses desiring to onserve, take to showing poor ictures during the hot months and ltimately reflect upon the entire ndustry."

Some of the managers in Syra-use are not quite of the same pinion, believing that if a house nce closes the patronage, drift-ng away to other houses, cannot e regained except at tremendous xpense and trouble.

The Savoy tried an experiment the past summer of reducing its admission prices from 22 cents to 10 cents in all parts of the house. While the manager admitted last week that the volume of business secured was considerably larger, he supplemented his remarks by saying that the volume was not such as to warrant a repetition next year.

As for exploitation, Syracuse is rather an indifferent city. Francis P. Martin, manager of the Robbins-Eckel, seating 1,550 and charging 35 cents admission, declares that he is through with it. Mr. Martin has been in the business for years. In fact, he was with the old Wieting when legitimate was the order of the day. Mr. Martin takes the stand that business has never been bad at his house, and furthermore, it gets bad only when one gives the people a bad picture.

Mr. Martin makes a feature of his musical programs, and probably spends more in this way than any house in the state outside of New York itself. His orchestra of 15 pieces, a symphony affair, is directed by no less a personage than "Patsy" Conway, leader of Conway's band, ranked as one of the ten bands of the world.

At the Strand, which is handled by another veteran in the business, E. L. Weill, and who leaves no stone unturned in attracting patronage, there is some exploitation done. During the week's run of "The Eternal Flame" six business windows were secured, and in addition to this a three-foot candle burned throughout the week with cash prizes to those who guessed the nearest to the number of days, hours and minutes before the candle burned itself out.

All of the big houses in Syracuse charge a 35-cent admission. Mr. Weill, of the Strand, has started a rather clever scheme this fall in the way of a book of admissions selling for $3. These books contain ten tickets and by buying the books, the patrons save themselves a matter of 50 cents on every ten tickets. According to Mr. Weill, the idea is taking well.

Another little scheme has been developed by the house so that now there is a card index of perhaps 2,000 residents of Syracuse, with the dates of their birthdays. To these the following worded card is sent two or three days previous to the birthday anniversary:

"The Strand Theatre takes this opportunity of congratulating you on your birthday and would enjoy having you occupy two seats at our theatre on that day. This card, when presented at our box office, serves as a ticket."

Mr. Weill is one of those managers who is eternally on the job. He not only boasts of being in the rear of his theatre at the conclusion of every showing, but he actually is. He keeps a watchful eye on his ushers, who are young men, and sees that they are on their job. For instance, should an usher see a man struggling in putting on his overcoat, he is supposed to step up, assist him, and then walk away.

"Don't stand with your hand outstretched for a tip. Don't ask a patron if you can get him a program, and say it in a tone as though your mind was riveted on a nickel or a dime. It's a part of your daily duty to assist patrons in the fullest enjoyment of the program which the management of the house has provided. Don't mar that program by injecting yourself in such a way that the patron feels himself forced to hand out a nickel or a dime."

This is the message which Mr. Weill conveys to his ushers. Instead of sitting in his private office while the show is on, Mr. Weill is around the theatre, just keeping his eye open and contributing his share toward the patrons' enjoyment of the program.

At the Empire Theatre, a particularly large and handsome house, which was taken over some months ago by Morris Fitzer, sixteen years in the business, there is a ten-piece orchestra. This house always played the legitimate and is an exceptionally fine theatre. Mr. Fitzer reported that business was good and added that the whole thing revolves around the one declaration that "the picture is the thing." "If I can get good pictures," said Mr. Fitzer, "I'll take care of the receipts."

Mr. Fitzer uses young women as ushers and believes them superior to young men. At the Robbins-Eckel, girls are also used as ushers, the management declaring that they perform their duties more satisfactorily, and that boys as ushers are too much inclined to patronize the smoking room for a cigarette just when they are needed.

Everyone of the managers not only reads, but studies the trade papers. They believe that their problems are the problems of others similarly located, that nine times out of ten a solution in some other section of the country, reaching them through the columns of the trade papers, is fully as applicable to Syracuse as to the city where it was reached. Go into the offices of any one of the managers, and you will find copies of the trade papers in racks, week by week, not thrown aside as in many a smaller house, but read, remembered and doing its bit toward improving the house and in turning loss into profit in many instances.

And believing this, they ask, through the columns of regional news and gossip, for exhibitors opinions. Let's have them.

We Stand Corrected

"I note in your October 28 issue the claim of Mr. Finley as showing the Dewey Parade pictures thirty years ago," writes John P. Dibble, of the Park Theatre, Branford, Conn. "That is simply impossible, as the Battle of Manila Bay was fought in 1898, just twenty-four years and six months ago, and previous to that date Dewey was an unheard-of proposition."

Mr. Dibble, by the way, has a great claim to the title of "The Daddy of Them All," and we're going to publish his biography in an early issue.

As for dates, the only ones we could ever remember were Christmas and birthday—and pay day—and lots of people err in that respect. Some can't even remember their birthdays, notably those of the feminine persuasion.—S. S.

Goldberg and Price Hosts to Educators of Baltimore

Thomas D. Goldberg and Arthur B. Price, operating the Strand and other picture theatres in Baltimore, with George F. Lenehan, manager of the Washington Exchange of the United Artists Corporation, invited educators and clergyman in Baltimore, Md., to attend the private performance of "The Man Who Played God," featuring George Arliss, at the Strand Theatre, on Thursday morning, October 26.

Frank Ford, formerly in charge of the box-office of the Century Theatre Roof, operated by the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests of Baltimore, Md., has resigned his position.

The Electra Theatre, 1039-41 North Gay street, Baltimore, operated by Frank H. Durkee, president of the Exhibitors' League of Maryland and who operates several other theatres, will be sold at public auction at the Real Estate Board Rooms by Samuel Lasch & Co., at 1 p. m., on Wednesday, November 8. This theatre reopened on September 4, after having been dark during the summer months. The ground rent on the playhouse is $67.50 and there are about 300 seats.

The Pimlico Theatre, Park Heights and Belvidere avenues, was reopened to the public under the management of N. Garman on October 19. The theatre has been practically rebuilt, about 500 additional seats have been added, and they have installed a new organ. The pictures are booked by Bernard Depkin, Jr.

A $12,000 organ has been ordered for the Cluster Theatre, 303 South Broadway, by Benjamin Cluster, owner. It is planned to have the new instrument installed in December.

Clubs, civic and other organizations will be asked to discuss pictures at one of their meetings; copies of the Maryland censorship law will be placed in the hands of ministers in the city, and each will be asked to preach one sermon during the year, in which stricter censorship of motion pictures will be urged, according to the program laid out at the first meeting of the season of the Citizens' League for Better Motion Pictures of Baltimore, held October 19. Mrs. Howard D. Bennett, president, presided at the meeting in the home of Dr. Charles K. Swartz, Windsor Hills, Baltimore, Md.

Crawford Plans Erection of $300,000 Theatre in Topeka

Roy Crawford, vice-president of Associated Exhibitors, was in Wichita last week conferring with L. M. Miller, owner of the Miller Theatre, on a proposed $300,000 picture theatre to be built soon in Topeka, Kans. Mr. Crawford was an exhibitor in Topeka for many years previous to his joining Associated Exhibitors. It is also rumored that Mr. Crawford's father, L. M. Crawford, will be interested in the project. Present plans call for a 1,900-seat house. The largest theatre in Topeka at present seats only 700.

D. Filizola, who has the Empress Theatre, Ft. Scott, Kans., was in the city for two days last week.

Charles Sears, re-elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri at their annual convention held at Excelsior Springs, won the golf tournament, which was held the third day of the convention. Ed. Frazier and his son were in town the other day. Mr. Frazier has the Grand Theatre at Pittsburg, Kans., while his son has the Empress Theatre at Paola, Kans.

"Grandma's Boy" is running its third week at the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City. Three weeks is a long time for a picture to run in Kansas City, and this is the first time that Sam Harding has kept a picture for longer than two weeks. There is a rumor that Mr. Harding will hold the picture over for even a fourth week, but there has been little substantiation.

W. F. McDowell, of Wellington, Kans., was a caller along the Exchange Row last week.

A. J. Moeller, general manager of the national organization of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, spent the entire week of October 22 in Kansas City.

Judd and Rardin, of the Orpheus Theatre at Excelsior Springs, Mo., were booking some of the season's attractions on their recent trip to Kansas City.

Kopoulos Brothers and Co., who operate the Princess Theatre in Kansas City, Kans., and the Columbia Theatre in this city, have plans for a new $43,000 theatre to be built at Independence avenue and Harrison street. It will seat 1,200 and cater to negroes. The Princess and Columbia theatres are also negro houses.

J. W. Holmes, owner of the Gillis and Auditorium theatres this city, was the victim of an attempted robbery recently. Two men were arrested in connection with the alleged hold-up and confessed to the police, it is said.

Sampson Succeeds Cowan at Grand Opera House, Toronto

Roy Sampson, a veteran theatre man of Chicago, has been appointed manager of the Grand Opera House, Toronto, in succession to Jimmie Cowan, who had charge of the theatre for many years. Mr. Cowan has gone to the Royal Alexandria Theatre, Toronto.

PRESTON HICKEY'S "TAKING MOVIES" STUNT

Live exploitation man in Minneapolis held up traffic during the run of "In the Name of the Law" at the Astor.

Los Angeles

Sid Grauman performed a spectacular feat in showmanship when he built his beautiful new Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood, giving this little fast-growing suburb of Los Angeles a first run theatre. He opened with "Robin Hood."

The splendid success of the undertaking proves that with right kind of showmanship a big first run house can be a success in a neighborhood community as well as on the main street of the city.

Grauman showed that a small theatre can successfully compete with a big one in the downtown district, when he took the old Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles, installed his system of indirect lighting, put on first run pictures and presented them with the same artistry and dignity as in the large show houses.

Now he builds a big first run theatre, seating 2,000, in Hollywood, adds a big orchestra and puts on a force of nattily attired usherettes. Instead of the people going downtown in the traffic jams at night they are coming out to Hollywood.

San Francisco Exhibitors in Controversy with Musicians

A live controversy is under way at San Francisco between theatre owners and musicians over the demand soon to be formally made by the latter for one day off a week for every member of an orchestra playing in a picture, vaudeville or legitimate theatre, and the installation of "swing" orchestras. That this demand will be met with strong objection on the part of theatre owners is indicated by those in a position to know, but statements are withheld until a formal ultimatum is received from union musicians.

The union will not only make a demand for one day off in seven, but will ask the managers to pay the salaries of the "swing" orchestras as well. The existing agreement between the musicians and managers expires on January 1. Union officials declare that a referendum vote was taken recently on the proposition of a six-day week and that it won out by five to one vote. More than 600 men are involved in the demand.

The theatres in Greater San Francisco that would be affected by the use of "swing" orchestras, or units that would go from house to house to relieve members, are the Orpheum, Pantages, Casino, Hippodrome, Wigwam, Princess, Golden Gate, Granada, California, Imperial, Warfield, Portola, Strand, New Mission, New Fillmore, Haight, Coliseum, Tivoli, Columbia, Curran, Alcazar, Rivoli, Fulton, Oakland Orpheum, Oakland Pantages, State, Century, American and T. & D.

Loew's Warfield Theatre, of which Fred G. Weis is manager, has gone over to the policy of changing the program on Saturday, a policy now followed by all of the downtown first-run houses.

Eugene H. Roth, managing director with J. A. Partington, of the California, Imperial, Granada and Portola theatres, has returned from a four weeks' trip to New York to look over the amusement field and to contract for attractions. He had a very interesting trip, he states, and saw such productions as "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "Robin Hood," "Dr. Jack" and "Tess of the Storm Country." He was greatly impressed with the latter, which he described as being a truly great picture. He contracted for Harold Lloyd comedies, and these will probably be shown at the Portola.

Eastern film men are watching the rapid growth and stability of San Francisco with much interest and have been particularly impressed with the results of the "greater movie season" launched here early in the fall. Mr. Roth showed the great snow picture, "Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera," while in New York, but, owing to the fact that a theatre could not be secured for an extended run until January, he has decided to exploit it here, road-show it through the West and then arrange for eastern presentation, as Griffith did with "The Clansmen."

A fire in the operating room of the Grand View Theatre at Daly City, Cal., recently, caused a loss of about $3,000. More than 200 persons were in the house at the time, but no excitement occurred as the audience filed out.

The Residential Theatres Corporation has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $10,000 by Samuel H. Levin, Alex. E. Levin and Joseph L. Levin.

The Larkin Street Theatre property, on Larkin street near OFarrell, San Francisco, has been purchased by Henry Rynaud.

The Horseman Automatic Rewind Co. has been incorporated at San Francisco, with a capital stock of $75,000. The directors are F. G. Horseman, Milton A. Nathan and G. B. Zemansky.

Charles Pincus, house manager of the California Theatre, is responsible for the attractive combination programs used by the California, Imperial and Granada theatres. It is in three folds, thin octavo, and has an illustrated cover. The inside pages are devoted to the programs of the three houses, while the others are devoted to coming attractions and notes about the Herbert L. Rothchild policy.

George C. Rhodes, for the past four years with the Coliseum Theatre in various capacities, has been promoted to the position of house manager by Manager N. E. Ayer.

I. H. Lichtenstein, of the Western Poster Company, who has been in Europe for the past six months, is expected home shortly.

Joel Cohen, head of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Honolulu, T. H., who has been in San Francisco for several weeks, will leave for New York shortly on a business trip.

E. C. Cunningham, who recently sold the Orchard Theatre at Campbell, has purchased the Iris Theatre at Pacific Grove, Cal., from C. B. Clark, who has operated it for many years.

Morgon & Estes have taken over the Emeryville Theatre at Emeryville, Cal.

Mrs. W. W. Walker, widow of the former proprietor of the Bell Theatre, Paso Robles, Cal., has disposed of this house to the owner of the building.

The Orpheum Theatre, Red Bluff, Cal., has been purchased from Stanley Leggett by J. L. Holbrook.

A fire recently occurred in the operating room of the Liberty Theatre at Klamath Falls, Ore., disabling the projection machine. Equipment was loaned by a competing house and business resumed at once.

Detroit Masons Lease House for Showing of "Robin Hood"

Shadukiam Grotto, comprising several thousand members of the Masonic Order, has leased the Orpheum Theatre of Detroit. The lease has been signed by Charles H. Miles, of the Wayne Amusement Company, and N. C. Chapman, secretary of the Grotto, and runs until June 1.

The Grotto has also obtained the contract for the first showing in Detroit of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood." This film will open the Orpheum on November 6 and continue for an indefinite period. The house will be redecorated for the opening and special effects will be arranged by Dean Deitrich, one of Hammerstein's advisory staff.

Booking of "Robin Hood" was incidental to a plan of Mr. Chapman's for a series of revivals of old time favorite musical comedies and comic operas. These will begin about January 1.

Miss Cleo Whitehead, who has for the past several years operated the Capitol Theatre at Eaton Rapids, Michigan, has sold the house to W. H. Montee, of Detroit. It is also rumored that Mr. Montee has bought the Family Theatre of that city, which has been running in opposition to the Capitol.

C. J. Donlin, who has been operating the Englewood Theatre, Detroit, for some time, has taken over the La Veeda and will operate both houses.

W. C. Hoffman has resigned as manager of the Fuller Theatre at Kalamazoo and has been succeeded by Roy Tillson, formerly connected with the W. S. Butterfield circuit.

Charles Seaman, of the Consolidated Theatres, Grand Rapids, who motored down to New York City a couple of weeks ago, has decided to remain for another two weeks. He and Mrs. Seaman are stopping at the Hotel McAlpin.

The new Berkley Theatre, Berkley, located on the twelve-mile road, one mile west of Woodward avenue, opened recently. The new house seats 600 and pictures are shown four times a week.

Among the 75,000 football fans who saw Michigan triumph over Ohio State at Columbus, on October 21, were the following men connected with the film industry: J. O. Brooks, Fred Nugent, Frank Downey and Floyd Wodlow. Pictures taken at the game Saturday afternoon were shown on the screen at the Capitol, Detroit, on Sunday.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" has been booked by the Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises for an indefinite run at the Adams Theatre, Detroit, beginning November 5.

"Some Wild Oats" closed in Detroit on October 21, after seventeen weeks at downtown theatres.

Exhibitors Visit Albany for Pre-Release Showing

Quite a few exhibitors from this part of the state were in town for the pre-release screening of "Oliver Twist" at the Mark Strand. In the group were Fred Mansert, of the Rialto at Glens Falls; Al Elliott, of the Playhouse in Hudson; George Davids, of the Stratford in Poughkeepsie; William Shirley, of the Strand, Schenectady; William Benton, of the Congress in Saratoga, and Paul Alberts, of the Albany in Schenectady.

The Alpine, a 400-seat house in Troy, has just been sold by Lew Fisher, of Fort Edward, to Professor Judges, of Mechanicsville.

The opening date of the State Theatre in Schenectady, of the Strand chain, has been set for November 30, according to a telephone message from Max Spiegel, in New York, to Edward Bruner, manager of the Pathe exchange here, on Friday. The house will open with "Grandma's Boy." The occasion will be one of importance in film circles, marking, as it does, the opening of a $400,000 house in the Electric City. The Albany exhibitors and exchange managers will probably attend in a body.

John Angelo, owner of the Family Theatre in Utica, was shopping along "Film Row" this week.

Samuel Suckno, owner of the Albany Theatre, is repainting the front of his house in handsome antique gold.

Oneonta's new theatre opened this week with William Smalley doing the booking.

The Royal, in this city, is banking heavily on the new Buffalo Bill serial put out by the Universal. Out of nine possible bookings in Schenectady, seven have been secured for the serial in that city.

Nothing has yet been done toward bringing the Albany Film Board of Trade back into existence. Managers are in favor of reorganizing the board, declaring that it is a positive protection to them in many ways.

The Hudson Theatre, a residential house handled by George Roberts, has just branched out with attractive printed programs for its patrons. It is the only residential house in the city which does this.

The annual meeting of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association will be held next Tuesday at the Majestic. George Roberts, now serving as president, has announced that he will not be a candidate for re-election. Fred Elliott has been serving as vice-president, Samuel Suckno as treasurer, and Ollie Stacey as secretary.

Harry Berinstein, of Elmira, who is managing the Majestic there with his brother Benjamin, is recovering from an attack of appendicitis. The Berinstein boys were former residents of Albany.

The Colonial reports a substantial increase in business this fall. The house has been obliged to weather two extremely bad periods of business, over which it had no control. The first came about from a street car strike, and the second resulted from a strike in the car shops, located nearby. The house kept right on showing good pictures, however, maintained its high musical standards, and is now showing a good profit each week.

Albany's picture houses are taking no part in the present state political campaign. The managers feel that they put up a good fight a year ago against censorship and were defeated, and now believe that it's good policy to sit tight and await developments.

William Berinstein, owner of the Colonial, and who recently moved to New York, paid a flying visit to Albany last week and then went on to Elmira, where he has other theatrical interests. Mr. Berinstein will continue to make periodical trips to the two cities.

Mrs. George Roberts, wife of the manager of the Colonial and Hudson theatres here, is recovering from a severe nervous shock incurred several weeks ago in Pennsylvania when a runaway team of horses dashed into the Roberts' car on a narrow country road. While the occupants of the car escaped with their lives, the machine itself was almost wrecked.

Evert R. Cummings, resident manager of the Rosenfield, Hopp & Company theatres, Rock Island, Ill., has resigned to become interested in the personal appearance tour of Bob Finlay, former Sennett comedian, and his revue. He managed Mr. Finlay for fifty-four weeks about two years ago, bringing him from the West Coast.

Troy's New $400,000 Theatre Opens January 1, 'Tis Said

"The Troy," one of the Strand chain of theatres, will be completed and opened to the public about January 1, according to predictions made this week. The house will cost in the neighborhood of $400,000, and is located in the business center of Troy. At the present time the interior is a bewildering maze of scaffolding, supporting a force of plasterers which have been brought here from New York City. This force will complete its work within the next two weeks. At the present time, fully 200 men are at work rushing the house to completion.

The theatre, which was designed by Architect Thomas Lamb, of New York, is quite similar in many respects to Loew's State Theatre. It will be one of the most modern in the state, with particular attention paid to the lighting and acoustic effects. No announcement has yet been made as to prices which will prevail, or to the feature which will be shown at the opening.

Employees of Proctor's Fourth Street Theatre presented H. Russell Emde, house manager, who has just accepted a similar position in Mount Vernon, with a complete set of wearing apparel, including silk shirts, etc. The presentation was made by Assistant Manager John M. Wagar. Charles H. Goulding has assumed his duties as manager of the Troy house.

A cash prize contest determining the person who could write the sentence "Tom Mix in Do and Dare" the greatest number of times on a post card failed to bring the crowds to the American Theatre, according to Benjamin Appel, owner. One person wrote the sentence 750 times. The postcards were displayed last week in front of the house. It was the first time the American ever attempted anything in the way of contests or exploitation.

Four houses in Troy are now for rent. These have a seating capacity of about 2,000 persons and include the Majestic, Empire, Keith's and Rand's. The last-named burned down and has been replaced by an office building.

Three musicians, formerly with Sousa's band, are now playing in the Lincoln orchestra. This week Frank Catricola, solo celloist, was featured in the newspapers in connection with the picture itself. The Lincoln is making a heavy play for patronage through its musical program.

Political parades this fall have raised havoc with Troy's picture houses. There has been a parade nearly every night, and this, along with an Industrial Exposition lasting a week, has made many of the managers a bit worried. On the night former Governor Smith spoke in Troy the houses were practically deserted.

Owners and managers of Troy's picture theatres are complaining that business is not up to that of a year ago. They are at a loss to discover the cause.

Edward H. Crawford, manager of the Lincoln, represented the picture theatres of the city, the other day, when a delegation welcomed the officers and crew of the U. S. S. "Lardner" to Troy.

"Orphans of the Storm," "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow" and the "Prisoner of Zenda" have just been booked for straight week runs at the American.

J. C. Rosenthal is erecting a new house which will be known as "The Rose" and which will seat 699. By keeping under 700, Mr. Rosenthal will avoid the expense incurred by a city ordinance which requires two firemen present at every performance, with the theatre paying the expense of $42 a week.

Mr. Rosenthal has been in the business many years, handling the Majestic and the Regent. When the owners of the block housing the Majestic raised Mr. Rosenthal's rent a matter of $55 a week, a short time ago, Mr. Rosenthal determined to step out, build a house of his own and be free from such extortion. The new house is a downtown theatre and will have a white terra cotta front.

Within four blocks there will shortly be five houses in Troy, having a combined seating capacity of 5,350, and yet the managers apparently are not worrying. The American seats 700; the new Troy will accommodate 1,600; the Lincoln seats 1,000; the Griswold, 1,350, and the Strand, 700.

The biggest moneymaker shown in Troy this fall, according to all accounts, has been "Manslaughter."

Last week was the last of splits for the Lincoln. From now on, straight week runs will be the rule, opening with "Human Hearts" and followed by such pictures as "If I Were Queen," "Under Two Flags" and "A Doll's House."

OSCAR WHITE USED A REAL TOY BULLFIGHT

His miniature Plaza del Toro was a big factor in getting in an unusual business for "Blood and Sand" at the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C. It worked better than a full-size lobby display.

Winegar Managing Buffalo's Elmwood; Fowler to Indiana

Elmer C. Winegar, former manager of the Central Park and Premier theatres, Pathe News cameraman, and recently engaged in industrial film making, has been appointed by Frederick L. Ullman to succeed Bruce Fowler, resigned, as manager of the Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo. Mr. Winegar takes up his new duties November 5. He is one of the best known exhibitors in Western New York. Before entering the exhibitor end of the business, he was associated with several Buffalo exchanges. While at the Premier and Central Park, two of the city's leading neighborhood houses, he put over an unusually large number of original exploitation stunts. Mr. Fowler will leave Buffalo November 4 to assume the management of the Indiana Theatre, Terra Haute, Indiana.

T. Cecil Leonard, exploitation manager of the Buffalo Universal exchange, has been appointed manager of the New Olympic Theatre, the house taken over this week in the Queen City of the Lakes by the Universal Film Company for the presentation of their big productions at the same time as they are shown in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. A new orchestra has been engaged.

Business at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is showing improvement over last year to a very noticeable extent. For the past five weeks, the box-office figures have shown a decided jump over 1921. And no wonder. Folks just can't pass up the brand of entertainment that Mr. Shea is passing out these days. Last week, with "Nice People," "The Three Must Get Theres," a Fashion Review and Yerkes' Flotilla Band, all attendance records went by the boards. So successful was the band at the big house that Mr. Shea engaged the outfit for a week at Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto.

Fashion reviews are all the vogue in Western New York theatres. Following the big success of the promenade of styles at Shea's Hippodrome, two houses in Niagara Falls, the Bellevue and Strand, offered similar added attractions. At the Bellevue, Manager Herman Lorence presented the Irene Castle Fashion Promenade, with seven living models, while Ralph W. Thayer, at the Strand, put on a review in cooperation with the Beir department store. Mr. Lorence also showed Irene Castle's picture, "Slim Shoulders." Miss Castle appeared in person in Elmwood Music Hall, Buffalo, November 3, in "Dances and Fashions of 1923."

The projectionist at the Strand Theatre in Ithaca, N. Y., is so enthusiastic over the candidacy of Al Smith for governor that he is enclosing printed material in all cans of films being returned to the Buffalo exchanges. The "dope," of course, boosts Al. Good work!

Harold Dygert, president of Associated Theatres, Inc., announces taking over the Park Theatre in Bath, N. Y., commencing November 1. Associated Theatres, Inc., took possession of the Strand and Andrews theatres in Salamanca, N. Y., November 1. It is understood that the deal involved a sum in excess of $60,000. In the case of the Strand the transaction includes the real property, while in the case of the Andrews the theatre only changes hands. C. A. Kammire and Company owned the Strand building. It was managed by John J. Kingston. The Andrews was bought from the Columbia Amusement Company, of Erie, Pa. O. T. Schroeppel, formerly of Buffalo, will manage both houses for the Dygert interests.

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria Theatre, Buffalo, is making elaborate plans for the presentation of "The Old Homestead" early in November. The Victoria artist is now at work on a mammoth rural landscape which will be used as a background for a big farmyard display in the "Vic" lobby. The stage will be dressed to represent a country exterior. Several big window displays are being arranged.

Al Beckerich, manager of the Loew State Theatre, is getting out a fine line of original advertising for his big Buffalo house. Copies of his work are being sent to every house in the Loew chain.

Sam Berman, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Inc., was a Buffalo visitor last week.

John H. Fennyvessy, manager of the Family Theatre, Rochester, was in Buffalo last week. He said that the C. B. Keith Amusement Company, Inc., will terminate its affairs November 4, due to the recent death of two members of the firm. Mr. Fennyvessy said that employees of the house may continue its operation.

Bill Van Dyne, assistant manager of the Lafayette Square, Buffalo, and H. Minuse, manager of the Elk Theatre, rode the goat at the last Elks initiation, much to the amusement of a host of brother exhibitors and exchange men who are also members of the Order.

Vincent McFaul, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, arranged for a radio concert given from the local W. G. R. station of the Federal Company and put on by Albert Hay Malotte, the Hipp's new organist, and Yerkes' Flotilla Band, the current attraction. The event was in the form of a tie-up with the Courier. The stunt was a great hit with radio fans and brought the Hipp a lot of publicity via the columns of the Courier.

George E. Williams, manager of the Linden Theatre, Jefferson street, Buffalo, showed the films of the firemen's cruise up the lakes last summer. In putting on this picture, he arranged with a nearby fire station to stage a run of apparatus from the station to the theatre. It was a great stunt and certainly did bring out the crowds. George is president of the Western New York unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, Inc.

The following out-of-town exhibitors were recent visitors along Buffalo's Film Row: M. Fitzer, of the Empire, Syracuse; Colonel Schweppe, of Elmira; H. P. Lally, of Dunkirk; Chester Fennyvessy, of Rochester, and C. R. Babcock, of the Babcock Theatre in Wellsville.

Manager Jim Cardino pulled a good stunt on "Grandma's Boy" when he showed it at the Kensington Theatre, Buffalo. He arranged to take subscriptions for The Northern Light, a new community newspaper, instead of charging admissions at the Saturday matinee. Persons presenting blanks printed in the paper were admitted free, in addition to receiving the paper for a year. Of course patrons paid 25 cents for the paper. The Northern Light gave Jim a lot of publicity.

Crawford, of New York, well known for his excellent exploitation of "Mickey" and for his work in and about Pittsburg while connected with Supreme Productions, is now manager of the new Lincoln Theatre in Troy, N. Y., which ranks as the handsomest and most modern house in the Troy district.

The Lincoln represents a realized dream of the Symansky brothers of Troy, who many years ago conceived the idea of giving their city one of the most attractive picture theatres in the state. The house cost upwards of a quarter of a million dollars and is located in the business center of the city.

J. Buchinski has taken over the Temple Theatre on William street, Buffalo, which he has re-opened as a picture house under the name of the New Family. "The Four Horsemen" was his opening attraction. The Temple was formerly operated by Harry Green.

Eugene A. Pfeil, manager of the Strand, Buffalo, booked a great Hallowe'en show for the week of October 29. It included Will Rogers in "The Headless Horseman," "Hope," a comedy appropriate to the Hallowe'en season, and other subjects. The Strand was especially decorated for the occasion.

Atlanta Theatres Benefit by Cool Fair Week Weather

The Southeastern Fair, always an interesting Southern event, brought the usual large crowds to Atlanta for the week ending October 21 and the picture theatres benefited thereby. The first two days of the fair were cold and rainy—ideal days to spend in a cozy picture theatre.

The Howard Theatre enjoyed fair business with Wallace Reid fans who rallied to the support of their favorite in "The Ghost Breaker." Manager De Sales Harrison had an atmospheric lobby, featuring ghosts and hobgoblins in the shape of lobby cards and the like.

The Metropolitan Theatre played to good business with Fox's "Monte Cristo," which was given a magnificent musical setting by the Metropolitan orchestra. Manager Willard Patterson also presented the Volpi singers.

The Rialto Theatre presented Lionel Barrymore in "The Face in the Fog" to excellent business. The overture, furnished by the Rialto Melody Artists, was unusually brilliant. Manager Bedell did not permit the fact that he is concentrating all his forces on preliminary plans for his week's showing of "When Knighthood Was in Flower," to interfere with his regular week-by-week business, and "The Face in the Fog" was well displayed.

Manager James Jackson, of the Tudor, finds that second-runs, well chosen, properly projected, with musical scores played on the big pipe organ and an admission price of 10 cents, mean excellent business. He runs his pictures two days, interspersing his second-runs with an occasional brand new one, and enjoys excellent business.

The closing of the Criterion Theatre makes the dyed-in-the-wool Atlanta fan a little "blue," but Manager Willard Patterson contends that the rapid growth of commercial enterprises in the vicinity of Five Points has destroyed the theatre's usefulness as such, and the site has been leased to a chain of drug stores.

The Alamo No. 1 maintains a policy of serials, Westerns and comedies, and Manager Sol Samuels reports good business.

The Bonita's policy is a five-reel feature, a comedy and a news reel, with a good tabloid show. Fair Week found Manager George Kimball booked with two Paramount second-runs, a Mack Sennett comedy and "Laughland," a well played and cleanly amusing "tab" show.

The Alamo No. 2, on Whitehall street, is in the heart of the shopping district and enjoys the patronage of women and children to an extent to be envied by other houses in town. Manager W. T. Murray's policy is two day runs of new second-run features, occasionally holding one over for three days. "Beauty's Worth" was the past week's most successful feature and did splendid business.

Manager John Thomas, of the Vandette Theatre, not only enjoys the confidence and genuine liking of his house force, but the confidence and support of his patrons. His pictures are usually second-runs of the "action" variety that make an especial appeal to the masculine sex, and crowded houses are the rule of the day for the Vandette.

The Alpha Theatre, located two blocks below what has always been considered the proper part of town for a picture theatre, has proven the truth of the "old saw" about "the play's the thing." Manager D. T. Darley packs 'em in with a program of two-reel first runs, a serial, a Western, a comedy and sometimes a news reel.

The Strand Theatre is a first-run house, with an occasional second that is particularly good. Manager Phillips played "Flesh and Blood," featuring Lon Chaney, an Atlanta favorite, with a Chinese lobby that was very effective.

Never Again!

Lewis Isenberg, manager of the Columbia Theatre, 449 Genesee street, Buffalo, has a habit of visiting his mother and father every Thursday at 2 p. m. He has never failed in this parental duty for many years. But last week he flivvered and as a result almost threw the pater and mater into a panic. It seems that Lewis was forced to attend to some important business, with the "big chief." When he arrived at the domus familias, it was close to 4 o'clock. It was a terrible homecoming for Lewis. He promised never to do it again.

Clemmer a Fast Traveler; Hill Sells Oregon Houses

"Doc" Clemmer, of the Clemmer Theatre, Spokane, was on Film Row recently, but he traveled so fast that the correspondent couldn't catch up with him. Must have taken in all the exchanges, for all the boys reported him in town.

C. F. Hill has sold his Majestic and Antlers theatres, Roseburg, Oregon, to Harrell M. McFarland, who takes possession November 1. Hill is a former exchangemen well known in the Northwest. In 1919 he opened the local Goldwyn exchange. He also handled the Triangle product here at one time.

Manager F. B. Walton, of the American Theatre, Bellingham, had blocks of hearts working for him when he put over his four days' showing of "Human Hearts." Practically every merchant in town co-operated to the extent of showing large heart-shaped easels containing photographs of the stars. He played to capacity.

O. O. Ruth, owner of the Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Wash., opened his Mission, recently purchased from R. K. Dunham, October 26. He has completely renovated and redecorated the house which seats 600.

It has been reported that Paul Coleman has sold the Bell Theatre, Springfield, Ore., to J. L. Larson.

R. A. Czerny, live wire exhibitor of Kent, Wash., this week puts on the opening chapter of the "Radio King," a serial. He is planning some high-class exploitation which includes the giving away of radio sets.

W. E. Graeper, who operates the Union Avenue Theatre, Portland, is reported to have purchased the Tivoli from Robert Marsden, who still owns the Nob Hill and Ideal. All are suburban houses.

The Princess Theatre, recently renovated and renamed (it was formerly the Union) and having a large pipe organ installed, has reopened for business under the same management, the Woolley Theatre Co. It is a downtown house and will operate henceforth on a 15-cent admission, showing only the best of the second-run features. "One Clear Call" was the opening attraction.

Manager John Hamrick showed a novelty film, "Endurance," at his Seattle Blue Mouse Theatre the week of October 22 that is attracting much attention. It demonstrates the sturdiness of a certain make of motor cars and the demands put on automobiles today.

THE TWENTY-FOUR CUT-OUT WORKS WELL HERE

In the narrow lobby of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., Manager Ray Beall made very effective use of the cut-out backed by a lattice and two threes for this Associated Exhibitors' winner.

Boston

The Rialto Amusement Company of Fall River, formed for amusement purposes with a capitalization of $100,000, has just been granted a charter by the Massachusetts secretary of state. The incorporators are Nathan Yamins, Samuel Sandler, Myer Markell, Louis L. Yamins and Jacob Yamins, all of Fall River.

Damage estimated at $15,000 was done by fire on Friday to the Imperial Theatre, a picture house on Broadway, South Boston, Mass. There was no one in the theatre at the time. It had not been opened for the afternoon performance, and the watchman was at dinner. The theatre occupied the second and third floors of the building, a structure of brick, three stories in height, erected in 1866. The fire started in the heating plant under the stairway, broke through the flooring and then attacked the gallery. It had gained considerable headway before it was discovered.

David F. Perkins, new manager of the Broadway Theatre, Chelsea, began his career there on Monday night under unusually delightful auspices, presaging a most successful future, and continuing his splendid record of accomplishment in other cities, both in the theatrical and advertising fields. He selected "Manslaughter" with which to make his official bow, and secured the presence of the principals in that production to address the audience, which filled the house. Several hundred stood outside in the rain, unable to gain admittance. Mr. Perkins takes the place left vacant by Sol Bernstein, who has returned to New York after managing the Broadway for several months.

Don't miss the story on page 145. And when you have read it, write us your opinions. It's a vital matter. Rally to the aid of your brother exhibitors.

Chicago Greets McVickers; Tiffin to Open on Monday

The new McVickers Theatre opened last Thursday at 6.30 p. m., under the management of Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, with "The Old Homestead." S. Barret McCormick is the managing director, with the orchestra under the baton of H. Leopold Spitalny and the ballet presentation under the direction of Adolph Bolm, director of the Chicago Opera Ballet. Remington Welch is at the organ, and the new house will be operated continuously from 9.30 a. m. until midnight every day, with the change of program each Sunday. Elaborate preparations were made for the opening, and a distinguished audience was on hand.

Another fine new picture house will be opened to the public next Monday night. This is the New Tiffin, at 4045 W. North avenue, owned and managed by V. T. Lynch, who owned another theatre by the same name on the same site, which was razed to make way for a larger, finer one. The new house seats 2,500 and ranks among the finest theatres on the Northwest side. The opening feature will be Milton Sills in "Skin Deep."

The Film Board of Trade dinner, to be attended by the officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, as well as being a "get together" for their own organization, will be held Monday night in the Rose Room of the Morrison Hotel.

Slides announcing tag day and soliciting contributions for the Disabled American Veterans of the World's War are being run in the Chicago theatres at present. The day is designated "Forget-Me-Not Day" and the slides bear the picture of a crippled soldier and the words: "Did you call it charity when they gave their legs, arms and eyes?"

Candidates for office at the coming election are finding it hard sledding to get slides on Chicago screens. Word has been sent to the theatres of the city by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners requesting them not to run slides of candidates until the office seeker has been interviewed by a committee from the organization on his stand on the motion picture question. It has resulted in a run of candidates on the committee's offices.

John M. Mayer, Frank N. Rubovitz and L. Wexler have organized the National Film and Export Company, with office at 736 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, to deal in films and accessories. The company has issued 400 shares of no par value.

The Lemle Barrett Company has been incorporated by William Lemle, John P. Barrett and M. Schear to operate picture theatres. The main office is at 6219 South Halstead street.

Roy Coleman, Guy Barrett and Joseph Britak has formed a company to manufacture and deal in picture equipment and films, with offices at 38 South Dearborn street. The company will be known as the Automatic Projector Company.

John Longley, James A. Sell and Benjamin Kaufmann have organized the California Theatre Corporation of Chicago with a capital of $50,000. Offices are at 3345 West Twenty-sixth street.

Lou Weil now is manager of the Bryn Mawr Theatre on Bryn Mawr avenue and is showing feature films with news reels and comedies on his program. The new symphony orchestra, under the direction of Samuel Leviton, and Gustave Magerman at the organ, are providing musical treats for the fans of north shore district.

E. D. Hopson has been made manager of the Calo Theatre, one of the Ascher houses located on North Clark street at Balmoral avenue. He is a veteran of the business and opened the first out of the loop vaudeville house at Sixty-third and Halstead streets back in 1904. He has been connected with Alfred Hamberger Enterprises and the last five years with the Schoenstadt chain of houses. He is a live wire manager who uses plenty of publicity to put his shows over.

Erber Asks Accounting Over His St. Louis Partnership

Suit was filed in the St. Louis Circuit Court, a few days ago, by Joseph Erber, former part-owner and manager of the Erber and Avenue theatres, East St. Louis, against his former partner, Phillip H. Cohen, who now owns the theatres. Erber asks for an accounting of a real estate deal in which he and Cohen were associated. He alleges in his petition that in December, 1919, they took a 99-year lease on property in East St. Louis for $4,500 a year. The lease was executed in Cohen's name, but Erber claims to have had a half interest. He further avers that Cohen last May disposed of the lease for $112,000 but accounted to him for only $500. The East St. Louis theatres are not affected by the suit. Cohen has denied Erber's contentions.

Secretary of State Becker has issued a certificate authorizing the Aubert Photo Play Company to increase its capital stock from $30,000 to $50,000. The company has assets of $45,000 and liabilities of $5,000. The additional stock will be disposed of within a few days. The company is erecting a handsome theatre on the site of the Aubert Airdome, Aubert and Easton avenues.

W. H. Becker and J. Bromley, who purchased the Chippewa Theatre several weeks ago, plan to re-open the Broadway playhouse in about ten days. They contemplate installing some additional equipment and plan to play first class pictures.

Will Hays will attend the grand opening of the Rivoli Theatre, Sixth street near Olive street, November 19, if plans of Barney Rosenthal, St. Louis manager for Universal, are carried through. An invitation has already been extended to Hays by Universal officials in the East. Universal has spent about $25,000 in remodeling and decorating the Rivoli, which formerly was known as the Royal. The house was purchased from Harry Koplar several weeks ago for $50,000. "The Kentucky Derby" probably will be the opening attraction. It would be the premier showing of the picture.

The Missouri Theatre announced a reduction in the price of balcony seats during the past week. During the new schedule seats upstairs will be but 35 cents at night and on Sunday and holiday matinee, instead of 50 cents. The rates for children have been cut to 15 cents at matinee and 25 cents on Sunday, holidays and evenings.

Harry Thornton, of the Gayety Theatre, Springfield, Ill., was a caller of the week.

H. J. Lowry, of the Opera House, Highland, Ill., dropped into Enterprise for some live subjects. He say that business has been very good of late.

C. C. Jones, of Cambria, Ill., was in, lining up programs for his new American Theatre, which opened November 1. The house represents an investment of $25,000 and seats 400. He intends to play first-class pictures.

Teddy Yemm, of the Reed, Yemm & Hays circuit, dropped into town to see the boys. He generally lets Tom Reed do the pilgriming, but decided to take a trip himself this time.

C. M. Luttrell, of the Majestic, Jacksonville, Ill., was a visitor to Fox headquarters.

The Fulco Schaefer Supply Company sold two Power's C. E. high tension lamps to the Missouri Theatre during the past week.

Harry Frazena and J. Spalding, of Taylorville, Ill., came in for some snappy short subjects. Also contracted for a few features.

Mrs. Frank Paul, of the Marvel Theatre, Carlinville, Ill., who was in during the week, reported that business in that vicinity has experienced a healthy revival.

I. W. Rodgers, of Poplar Bluff, Mo., pased through on his way home from the Missouri convention.

C. J. Law, of the New Palace, Pana, Ill., was seen along Picture Row.

"The Storm" will be the opening attraction at the Court Theatre, Paris, Ill., when it passes under the management of O. L. Jarodski, Dunville, Ill., on November 2. The house seats 500. It formerly was owned by E. Kerns.

J. Goldstein has purchased the Wilson Theatre, 1417 Cass avenue, St. Louis, from W. Krawezyh and A. Brolaski. It seats 300 and is situated in a district largely populated by foreign laborers.

The Princess Theatre, Standberry, Mo., has been purchased by I. W. Maple of Bethany, Mo. He owns houses in Bethany, Ridgeway and Albany. No change in the policy of the Princess is contemplated.

John Marlowe will open his new Hippodrome Theatre, Carterville, Ill., on November 15. It seats 900. Dr. J. Burkhardt's new $60,000 theatre at Hurst, Ill., is coming along very nicely.

Mrs. Ford Dies

Mrs. Edith B. Ford, widow of John T. Ford, who owned Ford's Opera House in Washington, D. C., at the time Lincoln was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth, died at her home in Baltimore on Sunday, October 22. She was 91 years old. Mrs. Ford is survived by 8 children, 26 grand children and 15 great-grand children. Two of her sons, Charles E. and John T. Ford, are at present the managers of Ford's Opera House, Baltimore, Md., at which large feature pictures are shown at intervals.

One Cent Admission

The Missouri Penitentiary has perhaps the cheapest high class picture house in the land. Sounds funny, doesn't it? The fact is, the theatre plays first class pictures but charges only 1 cent admission. And if a convict hasn't the price he gets in anyway. W. E. Sloat, secretary of the Missouri Prison Board, operates the house. He was in St. Louis the past week arranging his winter bills. He gets pictures with a home appeal, something to bring out the better things that are in a fellow. Sex appeal and crime films are barred. The show is financed largely through the receipts of a lunchstand and restaurant operated on the prison grounds.

News from the Producers

With Paramount

Lucien Hubbard, recognized as one of the foremost scenario writers and editors in motion pictures, has been engaged as one of a staff of four production advisory editors of production at Paramount's West Coast studio, according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president in charge of production for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The other three members of this staff are Ralph Block, Julia Crawford Ivers and Walter Woods.

For the past year and a half, Mr. Hubbard has been scenario editor at Universal City, where he wrote the scenarios of such pictures as "Wild Honey," "Human Hearts," "Reputation" and "Drifting."

New Producing Unit Is Organized

A deal involving the launching of a new producing unit to make pictures which are to be known as John S. Robertson Productions, was consummated this week between the former Famous Players director and Charles H. Duell, president of Inspiration Pictures Corporation.

While with Paramount Mr. Robertson directed such productions as "Sentimental Tommy," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," starring John Barrymore, and "Footlights," starring Elsie Ferguson, and "A Spanish Jade." He was loaned by Famous to Mary Pickford to produce the new "Tess of the Storm Country" for her, which is now being released by United Artists.

It is expected that not only will Mr. Robertson handle his own unit, but he will also direct some of the stars under contract with Inspiration.

Complete Cast Is Selected

The complete cast for "A Noise in Newboro," the next Metro photoplay in which Viola Dana is to be starred under the direction of Harry Beaumont, has already been selected. Actual production on this motion picture is to begin soon.

Edgar Franklin is the author of the story. Harry Beaumont, director of "The Five Dollar Baby," "June Madness," "Glass Houses," "Seeing's Believing" and other Metro photoplays starring Miss Dana, will direct it.

"Bulldog Drummond" Is Timely Picture

Owing to the increased popularity of the melodrama the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation considers the appearance of the feature, "Bulldog Drummond," among the forthcoming attractions under the Hodkinson trademark, as being particularly opportune. It further carries out the Hodkinson policy, it is said, of presenting varied subjects in order to give the exhibitor variety.

"Bulldog Drummond" in story form is from the pen of "Sapper." Owing to its exceptional possibilities the rights were secured for the stage with the result that three companies have been touring the United States and meeting with widespread success. During this drama's appearance in Chicago critics as well as public acclaimed it as one of the best melodramas seen for sometime.

The Hollandia Film Corporation purchased the film rights and made the production upon the exact locale as called for in the story, namely, Holland and England. It is understood that great stress has been laid upon the atmosphere with the result that, according to the producers, the drama itself has been enhanced in value to a marked degree.

"Bulldog Drummond" features two well known American stars, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley, both of whom have a great following among motion picture fans. This production was ably directed by Oscar Apfel who it is understood, has many film successes to his credit.

"Bulldog Drummond," it is understood, will give the Hodkinson schedule something unique and valuable in melodramatic productions. No expense will be spared, according to reports, in exploiting this feature which is big enough to warrant it.

This Hollandia Film Production will be released through the Hodkinson Corporation at an early date.

"Knighthood" Holds the Public's Fancy

In spite of the fact that it is now in the eighth week of its Broadway run the Cosmopolitan picture, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies at the Criterion Theatre continues to sell out at every performance, according to reports. So many have been turned away that it has been necessary to put on an extra matinee every day.

The success of this stirring romance says Cosmopolitan, seems to be ample answer to the wise ones who declared that costume plays were not wanted by the public. Seldom in the history of Broadway, it is stated, has there been so great an eagerness displayed to see a motion picture.

As for the beautiful star, Marion Davies, who plays the role of Princess Mary Tudor, Cosmopolitan says, she has established herself not only as an actress of dramatic ability but as a delightful comedienne as well. Some of her scenes with Lyn Harding as King Henry VIII are full of delicious and subtle humor.

Changes Titles of Two

Three new titles have been chosen for as many forthcoming Paramount pictures.

William de Mille's recently completed production from an original story by Clara Beranger, in which Bebe Daniels, Lewis Stone, Kathlyn Williams and Harrison Ford have the important roles, has been permanently titled, "The World's Applause." "Notoriety" was the title originally chosen, but when it was found that another company had a prior claim, it was changed temporarily to "Paths of Glory," which in turn has now given way to "The World's Applause."

Mary Miles Minter's latest picture, just completed under the direction of Charles Maigne and adapted from Stephen French Whitman's novel, "Sacrifice," is to be called "Drums of Destiny."

"Racing Hearts" is the title chosen for the new picture Agnes Ayres is just starting under the direction of Paul Powell. This is a story by Byron Morgan, author of the Wallace Reid automobile racing pictures, and Miss Ayres has the role of a race driver who goes in and wins a thrilling speed contest when the regular driver fails to show up.

Positively New

To make it clear to exhibitors and to everybody in the motion picture industry, formal announcement is made from the offices of the Mary Pickford Pictures Corporation setting forth emphatically and definitely the fact that Miss Pickford's personal production of "Tess of the Storm Country" is an entirely new 1922 picturization of Grace Miller White's famous story.

Miss Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country" is not in any sense a re-issue or a revival or a revamped picture, has no connection whatsoever with the original picture made eight years ago, but is a 100 per cent. new Mary Pickford production made during the last few months at her Hollywood studio and on location in California.

Signs Contract for Universals

The growing popularity of Universal-Jewel productions is becoming more evident week by week, sales reports of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company indicate.

An example of this growing popularity is to be seen in a sample sales report, in this instance from W. P. Morgan of the Oklahoma City Exchange, who reports the closing of a contract by W. C. Blackston with the Strand Theatre, Drumright, Okla., for three and one-half solid weeks of Universal-Jewel pictures.

The Strand has contracted for "Foolish Wives," "The Storm," "Human Hearts," "Man to Man," "The Delicious Little Devil," "The Trap," and "Wild Honey," to be run consecutively from October 22 to November 14.

Business Barometer Steadily Rising

The business barometer at the exchange of the Fox Film Corportion has been rising steadily.

To aid the exhibitor in exploiting his theatre program an effective advertising display for "Monte Cristo" and other Fox entertainments has been set up in the lobby of the exchange. It demonstrates to exhibitors how economically and artistically a lobby or window publicity "ballyhoo" can be made. The value and necessity of newspaper advertising is also impressed upon exhibitors. This service is free to exhibitors booking Fox product.

Here's a Chance for Special Exploitation.

THE pictures listed below have been endorsed by the National Committee for Better Films of the National Board of Review, co-operating with the Children's Book Week committee. Get in touch with the women's clubs, your schools and parent-teacher associations at once. They will be glad to cooperate with you in putting these pictures over for Book Week, Nov. 12-18. Make a special drive for school children. Exhibitors who tried it last year found that it paid.

FIRST NATIONAL ATTRACTIONS

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES

Joins Paramount

Rex Beach is the latest famous author to devote his talents to the writing of Paramount pictures for Thomas Meighan.

Following the announcement that Booth Tarkington had been engaged to write an original story for the popular Paramount star, it was made public recently that a story by Mr. Beach will also be placed in production in the near future with Mr. Meighan as the star.

Mr. Meighan is now engaged on George Ade's original story, "Back Home and Broke."

High Praise for Arliss Film

Both public and critics were highly enthusiastic about the George Arliss photoplay, "The Man Who Played God," says United Artists, when it was played recently at the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia. The picture drew excellent audiences all during the run, and the reviewers saw much in the feature for favorable comment, it is reported.

Said the critic for the Public Ledger: "'The Man Who Played God' is excellent, intelligent diversion." "The artistry of George Arliss combines with a theme in which he is at his best to make a picture that will be long remembered," said the reviewer for the Inquirer.

Ray Film Liked by Exhibitors

Charles Ray's initial production for United Artists' Corporation, "A Tailor-Made Man," is having a triumphant march up and down the motion picture world, with many extended engagements and repeats, United Artists' say.

The Broadway Strand Theatre, Detroit, held this feature over for a second week, after playing it to record-breaking crowds. The same thing happened in Hamtramck, Mich.

In Portland, Oregon, "A Tailor-Made Man" met with such success at the Blue Mouse Theatre that the management held it over for two weeks.

Will Issue Special Booklet

In order that exhibitors throughout the country may acquaint their patrons with the importance of the cast which will interpret the leading roles in "Quincy Adams Sawyer," a special booklet will be issued in conjunction with the release of the picture. "Quincy Adams Sawyer" is the latest S-L special to be released by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Among the stars are Barbara La Marr, Lon Chaney, John Bowers, Blanche Sweet, Elmo Lincoln, Louise Fazenda, Joseph Dowling and Hank Mann.

LUNCHEON GIVEN BY JACKIE COOGAN PRODUCTIONS TO PRESS REPRESENTATIVES AT THE KNICKERBOCKER GRILL

Coogan Productions Host to Reviewers

Friday afternoon shortly after one o'clock in the private dining rooms of the Knickerbocker Grill, New York, one of the most representative press gatherings assembled for luncheon prior to witnessing a private press showing of Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist" production. Practically every New York newspaperman, magazine writer, and trade paper present. The luncheon was given by the Jackie Coogan Productions.

After luncheon, the gathering moved up 42nd Street to Wurlitzer Hall where the private showing was to be given. Prior to flashing the feature on the screen, the Coogan folks arranged to show a few hundred feet of an ancient "Twist" production which Sol Lesser, to protect exhibitors, had purchased when he contemplated making the present Coogan Production. It showed in distinct contrast with the films of today and illustrated how vastly the industry has improved.

Interest Aplenty in "One Week of Love"

Despite the fact that the Selznick company has had but little to say about "One Week of Love," the first production to be made under the firm's new policy of superspecials only, there are plenty of indications that the trade has already developed an unusual interest in the picture.

"One Week of Love," co-starring Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle, was completed some time ago but has not yet been released. The first and formal showing of the big production is being made in the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York City, Friday evening, November 3.

Two Scheduled for Paramount Release

For November 5, Paramount announces the release of two of its strongest features of the year—Thomas Meighan in "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow" and the Irvin Willat production, "On the High Seas," with Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt.

The age-old question of whom to marry is solved for Burke Hammond, played by Thomas Meighan, in "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow." The story is said to be altogether unique and is the work of Perley Poore Sheehan and Frank Condon. The latter and Will M. Ritchey collaborated on the adaptation and Alfred Green directed.

In the leading feminine role is Leatrice Joy, who last played opposite Meighan in Cecil B. DeMille's "Manslaughter." The "other woman" is portrayed by June Elvidge.

"On the High Seas," in which Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt are featured, is the first story written for the screen by Edward Sheldon. E. Magnus Ingleton, former scenarist with Thomas H. Ince, wrote the continuity.

Making Film Ready

Thomas H. Ince is cutting and editing "A Man of Action," the comedy from the pen of Bradley King. This production, will follow "The Hottentot," on the First National releasing schedule.

Soon Will Start

Allen Holubar's second production under his contract with Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will soon be under way. It is a picturization of Jeffry de Prend's romantic novel, "The White Frontier." The story is a big out-of-door melodrama and is laid in the Canadian Northwest.

Arrangements have been made with Mr. de Prend, the author, whereby the publishing of "The White Frontier" will be withheld until after the picture has been completed, when the first edition will be put out with scenes from the picture as illustrations.

New Walker Film Is Nearly Completed

More than five hundred persons and two hundred horsemen will be seen in the climaxtic scenes of "Captain Fly-By-Night," Johnnie Walker's starring production now being produced by the R-C Studios in Los Angeles. "Captain Fly-By-Night" will be the first production starring Walker under his recent contract with Mr. P. A. Powers, for Film Booking Offices release.

Johnston McCulley, author of "The Mark of Zorro," wrote this story especially for Walker. William K. Howard is directing. The leading feminine role is played by Shannon Day and the principal supporting players include Francis McDonald, Eddie Gribbon, Victory Bateman, James McElhern, Charles Stevens, Ashley Cooper, Bert Wheeler, Fred Kelsey and others.

Changes Made in Branch Offices

Changes in branch office personnel has been announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. P. G. Morris becomes office manager of the Denver branch, effective October 16, replacing L. E. Hobson, who has been transferred to the sales force of the Los Angeles office.

W. F. Marshall, booker for the Washington, D. C., branch of the Hodkinson Corporation, has been made office manager, replacing H. A. Gillespie, who has been transferred to the home office in the contract department.

Film for Release October 9

October 9 will witness the official release by Associated Exhibitors of "The Woman Who Fooled Herself," the six-part feature in which May Allison and her husband, Robert Ellis, are featured. It is the first production made by Edward A. MacManus for Associated Exhibitors.

Charles A. Logue, well-known as a dramatist, short story writer and director, wrote "The Woman Who Fooled Herself."

Rawlinson Starred in "Scarlet Car"

"The Scarlet Car," a Universal picture adapted from the stories of that name written by Richard Harding Davis has been completed at Universal City. Herbert Rawlings is the star.

"The Scarlet Car" is a notable step in Rawlinson's climb. It is said to present an unusual combination of satisfactory elements; story by the internationally famed author, continuity by George Randolph Chester, directed by Stuart Paton, supporting cast including Barbara Bedford, Una Trevelyn, Josef Swickard, Nick de Ruiz, William Langdon, Harry Carter and other popular film players.

Paton has directed Rawlinson many times before. This production was completed in record time.

"If I Were Queen" Gets First Runs

First run bookings in all parts of the country are the proof offered by the Film Booking Offices of America that "If I Were Queen," their first Ethel Clayton picture, is the type of picture which is now in demand by the public.

"If I Were Queen" has already been given first runs in seven key cities and others are scheduled for the near future. In New York, Charles Rosenweig, manager of the New York F. B. O. branch, reports that the picture will play 100 days on the Loew circuit in the Metropolitan district.

Gets Week Run In a Three-Day Town

"In the Name of the Law," the Emory Johnson special on the F. B. O. program, has the honor of breaking a record in the city of Fremont, Ohio. Fremont is a three-day run town and "In the Name of the Law," in completing a solid week at the Jewel theatre, of which George Geyer is manager, accomplished a feat which has never been equaled by any picture heretofore.

A tie-up with the police and carte blanche permission to exploit the picture was partly responsible for the new record.

Fourteen Productions for Fox Release in November

Fox Film Corporation announces fourteen productions, headed by a giant special, for release during November.

"My Friend the Devil," which Paul H. Sloane adapted from the famous French novel, "Dr. Rameau," by Georges Ohnet, and which was directed by Harry Millarde who staged "Over the Hill," is foremost on the month's list. It is scheduled for general distribution November 19. Reviews of this production which have already appeared in trade publications and newspapers in cities in which private pre-views were given, afforded the special great praise, Fox says.

"Tom Mix in Arabia," featuring the vigorous star of the Fox westerns, will be released November 19. In this story, which was written by Mix and his director, Lynn Reynolds, the Fox favorite performs many novel stunts, according to reports. Claire Adams plays opposite Mix who is supported by an unusually capable cast, it is stated.

John Gilbert will essay the role of a care-free, swash-buckling man of the West who, Fox says, plies his love-affair in a unique and interesting story, "The Love Gambler," written by Lilian Bennet-Thompson and George Hubbard. Joseph Franz directed and Jules Furthman is credited with the scenario.

"Boss of Camp 4" is the November vehicle for Charles Jones. It was written by Arthur P. Haskuss and directed by W. S. Van Dyke. "While Justice Waits" will be Dustin Farnum's latest production. It was written by Charles A. and Don Short. Bernard J. Durning who directed "The Fast Mail" is responsible for the direction.

Shirley Mason, the petite star of the Fox group, will be seen in "Shirley of the Circus," one of the best pictures she ever made, it is said. Rowland V. Lee directed the picture which is from the pen of Robert M. Lee. It will be released November 12.

Lupino Lane will be seen in his third Fox release, "My Hero." It is scheduled for distribution on November 19. The English pantomimist offers many amusing situations, Fox states.

November 5 has been set as the release day for "Lazy Bones," the Clyde Cook special comedy.

Al St. John appears November 19 in "Out of Place," a two-reel special comedy, and the Lee Kids come in "Town Terrors," a reissue edited by Ralph Spence. The Sunshine Comedies for November are "The Ranch Romeo," Nov. 12, and "Cupid's Elephant," Nov. 26.

There are also two Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons on the November program, "The Wishing Duck" and "Bumps and Thumps."

Throngs Jam in to See "Oliver Twist"

Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist" had it's world premiere at the Mark Strand theatre, New York, last Sunday. Long lines of fans waited before the Strand box office long before the show started.

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the theatre called the police for the protection of the huge throng Sunday afternoon. By seven o'clock there was a sell out. Never in the history of the theatre, it is said, have so many people sought admission, and all through the week the condition remained unchanged.

Twenty papers gave highly praiseful reviews to the production.

A two weeks' advance exploitation campaign was carried on for the Coogan vehicle.

The Dickens film opened at the Chicago Theatre, Chicago, last Monday and latest reports indicate that there, as in New York, it has made a big success. These two engagements, with the exception of one in Lexington, Ky., are the only ones to date on the new Coogan film. General release dates are scheduled for November 20.

Robert G. Vignola Praised for Work

Not only in New York, but throughout the country, newspapers critics are united in praising Robert G. Vignola for the excellent job he has made in directing "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

Ashton Stevens, the critic of the Chicago Herald-Examiner, said in his review: "In Robert G. Vignola she (Marion Davies) has found a director who can induce her best effort."

Mae Tinee, the critic of the Chicago Tribune, remarked upon Mr. Vignola's work as follows: "'When Knighthood Was in Flower' is twelve reels long. That you don't realize the fact is sincere tribute to the director."

Robert E. Sherwood, critic of "Life," said: "Robert G. Vignola directed 'When Knighthood Was in Flower,' and his genius for lighting and composition is evident in every scene."

To Show Longfellow Poem

"Back to the classics!" is in a fair way of becoming one of the most prized and potent of the Fox slogans, if one may judge from the increasingly long list of productions of this studio based on the recognized masterpieces of fictional literature.

The latest announcement is concerned with "The Village Blacksmith," the Longfellow poem beloved of schoolroom and library alike. The film which Fox had developed from the poet's theme will be shown Thursday evening, November 2, at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, succeeding "Monte Cristo." The picture has been directed by Jack Ford. Paul H. Sloane is responsible for the scenario.

The cast is, it is stated, on a par with those employed to project such memorable Fox productions as "Les Miserables," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Monte Cristo," "Evangeline," "The Scarlet Letter" and "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

First National Has Four Big Films for November

First National considers November a period of thanksgiving, not only for itself but for the exhibitors all over the world, because in this month, it says, four of the greatest box office pictures of the season will be released as First National Attractions.

The "Big Four" for November are Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist," the National release date of which is Nov. 6; Strongheart, the Wonder Dog, in "Brawn of the North," released Nov. 13; "The Dangerous Age," a John M. Stahl production, with Lewis Stone and an all-star cast, released Nov. 20, and Katherin MacDonald in "The Woman Conquers," released Nov. 27.

"Oliver Twist" is now having its New York pre-release presentation at the Strand Theatre. It is a Sol Lesser production, directed by Frank Lloyd. An unusually strong cast supports Jackie Coogan. In it are Lon Chaney, Gladys Rockwell, George Siegman, Lionel Belmore, Carl Stockdale, Eddie Boland, Lewis Sargent and James Marcus. First National already reports heavy bookings on this big production.

"Brawn of the North," a Larry Trimble-Jane Murfin production, shows the marvelous dog, Strongheart, in another story of the North woods, which, it is said, is as powerful as "The Silent Call."

"The Dangerous Age" is a John M. Stahl production with a matrimonial theme as its basis, and action, adventure and thrills all the way through, First National says. It has an all-star cast. In it are Lewis Stone, Cleo Madison, Ruth Clifford, Edith Roberts, Myrtle Stedman, James Morrison, Helen Lynch, Lincoln Stedman, Edward Burns and Richard Tucker.

In "The Woman Conquers," directed by Tom Forman from the story by Violet Clark, Katherine MacDonald is said to have the strongest play of her screen career. Supporting Miss MacDonald in "The Woman Conquers" are Bryant Washburn, Mitchell Lewis, June Elvidge, Clarissa Selwynne, Boris Karloff and Francis MacDonald.

Besides these four big First National Attractions, a Mack Sennett Comedy, "When Summer Comes," is scheduled for release Nov. 13 and a Buster Keaton comedy, "Day Dreams," for Nov. 27.

Second of Carey Specials Released

An election day story is the timely current release of the Film Booking Offices of America, which announces its second Harry Carey production, "Good Men and True," presented by P. A. Powers, for the second week in November. "Good Men and True" is adapted from a published story by Eugene Manlove Rhodes and gives Carey the role of a nominee for Sheriff in a Western town.

F. B. O. states that this production will be distinctly different from any other Carey picture inasmuch as the star has incorporated an equal number of thrills and laughs. The comedy relief is supplied largely by Tully Marshall, who plays the role of a henpecked husband sent into the West by his spouse to establish a homestead. The leading feminine role is played by Vola Vale and Noah Beery is cast as the "heavy," the opposition candidate for office. Others in the cast are Thomas Jefferson, Charles J. LeMoyne and Helen Gilmore. Val Paul, who is responsible for previous Carey successes, directed the picture.

"Third Alarm" Listed for Early Release

"The Third Alarm," the second Emory Johnson production for release through the Film Booking Offices of America, and a companion picture of "In the Name of the Law," has been put forward on the F. B. O. schedule and tentative plans call for a release of this production early in 1923. "The Third Alarm" is a story built around the life of a fireman in a large American city, with the leading roles played by Ralph Lewis, Johnnie Walker, Ella Hall and Virginia True Boardman.

It is the intention of F. B. O. to release this production only after complete exploitation tie-ups have been prepared. It was first estimated that arrangement for dedicating the picture to fire chiefs and mapping out the campaign which will be carried on in every city with the aid of the local fire departments, would not be complete until late winter, but by high pressure work and with an enlarged force, F. B. O. will now have its campaign ready early in January, and the picture will be issued at that time.

Mix in New Film

Tom Mix has a new picture with the title of "Tom Mix in Arabia," a November 19 release. It is the greatest "stunt" production that this agile star has appeared in so far, Fox says.

Symphony Signs for Hodkinson Film

Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation relative to the fact that the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., one of the largest and most up-to-date theatres on the Pacific Coast, has signed the Hodkinson special, "The Headless Horseman," for an indefinite run beginning November 5.

"The Headless Horseman" is a C. S. Clancy production adapted from the story, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," by Washington Irving.

Will Rogers plays the picturesque role of Ichabold Crane, supported by such well known players as Lois Meredith, Ben Hendricks, Jr., Mary Foy, Charles Graham, and Nancy Chase.

Vitagraph Picture Drawing Crowds

After a record week at the Grand Opera House in Cincinnati, "A Rogue's Romance," Vitagraph, starring Earle Williams and Rodolph Valentino, scored a big repeat for The Gifts Theatre, Vitagraph states. This feature has been booked for week stands in many of the largest theatres, it is reported.

Marentette Returns to Goldwyn

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces the return to that organization of J. L. Marentette, one of the best known motion picture figures in the South. He has been named as resident manager of Goldwyn's branch exchange in Atlanta, Ga. He assumed the duties of his new position October 23.

Title Is Changed

Robert Z. Leonard, who presents and directs Mae Murray's pictures for Metro release, announces that the title of Miss Murray's forthcoming picture, which she has been making at the Metro studio, has been changed from "Coronation" to "Jazzmania."

Mr. Exhibitor:
Ask Your Film Company for the
"THEMATIC MUSIC CUE SHEET"
(Pat. Applied For)
It means more to you than any other accessory. It is the cue sheet that insures a musically perfect picture presentation.

Shirley Mason in New Fox Film

Shirley Mason, of the Fox fold, will be seen in a chapter of life under the cahvas in "Shirley of the Circus," which Fox Film Corporation announces for release November 12. The story is from the pen of Robert M. Lee and was made under the direction of Rowland V. Lee.

The photoplay concerns interesting cross-sections of the early career of a young French circus dancer whom fate brings into the hands of a prominent American artist. The unscrupulous guardian of the girl demands her return to his patronage. A sequence of absorbing incidents follow, it is stated.

Miss Mason is supported by a cast numbering such names as George O. Hara, Crawford Kent, Alan Hale, Lulu Warrington, Maude Wayne and Mathilda Brundage.

"Pride of Palomar" Ready Soon

"The Pride of Palomar," picturized from Peter B. Kyne's story of the same name for Cosmopolitan Productions, is now undergoing the finishing touches preparatory to release in December. The picture, adapted for the screen by Grant Carpenter and John Lynch, was filmed in California under the direction of Frank Borzage. The plot carries with it the atmosphere of the old Spanish settlements in Southern California.

Forrest Stanley portrays the role of the young Spanish-American hero. Stanley is surrounded by a strong cast, including Joseph Dowling, Marjorie Daw, Warner Oland, Alfred Allen, Tote de Crow, George Nichols, James Barrow and Edward Brady.

"Lawful Larceny" Is Hampton's Next

"Lawful Larceny" has been selected by Hope Hampton as her next production to follow her present success "The Light In the Dark." It is Miss Hampton's opinion that the play will lend itself to moving pictures with greater force than it was presented on the stage.

"Lawful Larceny" was first presented to the New York audiences by A. H. Woods at the Republic Theatre the first of this year. It was an instantaneous success.

Final Scenes Made for "Outcast"

Final scenes for Elsie Ferguson's latest Paramount picture, "Outcast," which will be released soon, were filmed at the Delaware Water Gap last week and the picture is now ready for cutting and titling.

Appearing with Miss Ferguson in this picture are David Powell, in the leading male role; Mary MacLaren, Teddy Sampson, William Powell, William David, Charles Wellesley, George Stevens and Frank Dekum.

In the Independent Field

By ROGER FERRI

Newsy Bits

Edgar Lewis will produce two pictures that will be handled by C. C. Burr, of Affiliated Distributors, Inc.

David Segal, of Royal Pictures, Inc., Philadelphia, and his enterprising exploitation director, Tom Bible, were in town this week.

If negotiations now under way materialize the Strand Theatre in New York will stage all the premier showings of the entire Warner Brothers output, starting with "The Beautiful and Damned."

John Lowell, Baby Ivy Ward and Miss Jacqueline Russell, who are playing leading roles in the Blazed Trails Productions, Inc., feature, "Lost in a Big City," for Arrow Film Corporation, came to New York this week to photograph metropolitan scenes.

J. Fred Cubberly, of the new Finkelstein & Rubin Exchange in Minneapolis, writes to the effect that something like 300 small theatres in that territory have closed for all time during the last four months.

J. Charles Davis, Arrow exploitation director, is in Erie, Pa., exploiting "Night Life in Hollywood" and "Streets of New York," the two Arrow specials, which will be shown there within the next three weeks. Dick Well, who is Arrow's publicity and advertising director, is doing splendid work in the metropolitan section exploiting the same two pictures.

Among those who came to New York last week to attend the initial showing of the Al Lichtman picture, "Shadows," a B. P. Schulberg production, were Ben Amsterdam, Lou Korson and Walter Green, of Masterpiece Attractions, Inc., Philadelphia; Syd Samson, of the Lichtman Buffalo exchange; Harry Ascher, of the Boston exchange, and several others.

Gene Marcus, of Twentieth Century Film Corporation of Philadelphia, this week closed with Principal Pictures Corporation for the eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware rights to that firm's two latest specials, "Chicago Sal," the Irving Cummings special, and Elinor Glyn's latest story, "The World's a Stage," with Dorothy Phillips.

Edward Ferguson, director of Buckley-Ferguson Productions, Inc., of Binghamton, N. Y., announced this week that he had signed a contract with American Releasing Corporation for the release of that firm's initial production, "Her Own Story." Plans are now being made for the firm's second picture, which also will be made in Binghamton.

All Star Features, Inc., of San Francisco, are losing no time getting choice first run dates on the initial "Big Six" picture of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned. Loew's State and Pantages in Oakland, Cal., and the Strand in San Francisco have booked his feature.

Quality Film Corporation of Pittsburgh and Lande Film Corporation of Cleveland and Cincinnati, all owned by Harry Lande, have become franchise holders in the Amalgamated Exchanges of America, according to a statement issued this week from the latter's New York offices.

Will Nigh starts production on his second feature for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North next week at the Pilford studios, 44th street, New York, next week. This picture will be ready for release about January 1.

NOVEMBER promises to be the month of "big productions" in this market. The list of November releases is demonstrative of the sincerity and conclusive proof of the ability of independent producers to turn out box-office productions of unlimited possibilities. The November program compares most favorably with the releases of the national distributors. Among some of the more notable productions scheduled for this month are Al Lichtman's B. P. Schulberg special, "Shadows;" Warner Brothers' Harry Rapf picture, "The Beautiful and Damned," with Marie Prevost; Arrow's "Streets of New York" and "Night Life in Hollywood;" L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North's Will Nigh masterpiece, "Notoriety," with an all-star cast; Affiliated Distributors' Johnny Hines feature, "Sure-Fire Flint;" C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's "Only a Shop Girl;" Principal Picture Corporation's Elinor Glyn's latest, "The World's a Stage," with Dorothy Phillips, and the Irving Cummings super-special, "Chicago Sal," with Alice Lake, Milton Sills and an all-star cast, and a number of others about to be completed.

DISCUSSING big productions reminds the writer of the excellent picture B. P. Schulberg and Tom Forman have given Al Lichtman Exchanges in "Shadows," representative of the best characterization ever credited that master character actor of the screen, Lon Chaney. This production is an artistic achievement of rare excellence and indicative of the trend of pictures being released to theatre owners through independent sources. Al Lichtman and his territorial partners have every reason to be proud of this latest production. A delicately dangerous theme is handled so artistically cleverly by director, photographer and players that in the finished product the trade has been given a vehicle of entertainment that ranks among the leaders in the point of artistic presentation and production. The credit for this unusual art picture should go to all who in any way took a part in its making, for a single blunder in any department would have played havoc with the production in general.

PROMINENTLY noticeable is the care and effort put into recent independent pictures by those who have held the directorial reins. What this market has needed more than anything else in the production line was the type of common sense director who took pride in what he turned out; the director who intelligently assumed his task appreciative of the fact that whatever honors a picture attained he naturally would come in for his share of praise.

THE director is not generally given the credit due him. Upon his shoulders rests entirely the success or failure of any production. Despite this fact, however, he has been grossly neglected when bouquets have been passed about by the critical clan of the industry. In "Shadows" we see a production that glorifies the efforts of Mr. Forman. He took a concededly dangerous theme and by clever direction succeeded not only in getting the best out of his players, but also in rounding out a production that artistically is the best thing the independent market has ever had. Tom Forman has done something that will lift the independent to a plane where it will demand the attention of every exhibitor. Because its production destinies are in the capable hands of such keen, careful and shrewd gentlemen as B. P. Schulberg and Tom Forman we expect 1922-23 to be a triumphant year for Al Lichtman, his territorial partners and those who are wise enough to hook-up with this product.

WE are proud of the presence in the field of independent endeavor of such directors as Will Nigh, Dell Henderson, Wallace Worsley, Burton King, Kenneth Webb and others. These are gentlemen upon whose shoulders the future of the independent market depends in a large measure. They have been turning out marketable and profitable product. We are convinced that they will continue working as industriously and carefully as they have in the past. We are looking forward to these gentlemen to absolutely prove to theatre owners that the independent market is a competitive force that can make box offices jingle with a prosperity of which exhibitors have been dreaming for the past three years. We repeat: we are proud of our producers and directors. Producers like Ben Schulberg, Charles Burr, Harry Rapf, Ben Wilson, Whitman Bennett and others are spending unselfishly, giving their directors the proper support and otherwise contributing to the remarkable progress made by independent productions in point of artistic, production and presentation values. The independent market no longer solicits exhibitor patronage—it demands that patronage, for it has and still is proving its right to make such a demand.

2,000 Film Folk Applaud and O. K. Al Lichtman's Latest "Shadows"

About two thousand film folk from New York and nearby cities flocked to the Biltmore Hotel on Friday evening, October 27, and after viewing the second Al Lichtman Preferred picture, "Shadows," with Lon Chaney, enthusiastically demonstrated their approval and satisfaction with applause that lasted fully five minutes. The showing was the most impressive held this year with opinion unanimous that it "was the greatest picture ever made by Tom Forman and a masterly achievement for Lon Chaney." Producer B. P. Schulberg also came in for his share of commendation.

Particularly enthusiastic were exhibitors who attended the showing. These included some of the most representative in New York. Among them were Sam Rothafel, of the Capitol; Joe Plunkett, of the Strand; Hugo Reisenfeld, of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion Theatres; Lou Blumenthal, of the Blumenthal & Haring circuit; Al Jones, of the Frank K. Hall circuit in New York; Mr. Mitchell, booker for Marcus Loew's theatres, and many others. All theatre owners interviewed by the writer following the showing characterized the production as an "artistic achievement worthy of the most superlative commendation possible," as Joe Plunkett personally put it.

Most impressive was the character work of Lon Chaney in a particularly difficult role that met with considerable applause. The more tense moments in the picture registered effectively with the result that the owners of the feature could not but become convinced that they had a special of uncommon merit. Every now and then the quiet that prevailed through most of the showing was broken with rounds of enthusiastic acclamation resultant from some particularly brilliant piece of acting by some member of the all-star cast.

The showing was one of the best held in New York. The picture was shown promptly at 9 o'clock and was over about one hour and 40 minutes later. The projection, while not the best, was the best that could be hoped for in view of the disadvantages under which the picture was shown at the hotel, the projection room being a temporary booth. However, the entire affair moved along without a single hitch.

After the showing Al Lichtman was sought by hundreds of film folk who warmly congratulated him on "Shadows." Among those who were noticed in the audience were D. W. Griffith, Leatrice Joy, appearing in "Java Head" for Paramount; George Melford, the Paramount director; Ben Amsterdam and Lou Korson, of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., of Philadelphia; Harry Ascher, of Al Lichtman Exchange, Boston; Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, New York; Syd Samson, manager of the Grand-North Exchange, Buffalo and Albany; Herman Jans, of Jans Film Exchange, New York; Howard Brubaker, editor of "Success;" Thomas B. Wells, editor of "Harpers;" Clayton Hamilton, former supervising director at the Goldwyn studios; Sessue Hayakawa; Lester Blankfield, husband of Eve Unsell; Rowland Rogers, director of the Photoplay Department of Columbia University; Professor Leon Whipple, of the Department of Journalism, Columbia University; Julia Swayne Gordon, Dr. Stephen Wise and Sam Lefko, of Philadelphia.

Among those who attended the showing were the following: Don Alleu, Maxine Alton, Hans Alin, Harry Asher, A. C. Anderson, Sydney Asher, Adam and Peter Adams, Peggy B. Allen, Ben Amsterdam, J. G. St. Louis Situation Worries Exchanges

ST. LOUIS — (Special) — Independent distributors of this territory are anxiously awaiting the outcome and the effect of the plans to consolidate the Missouri and New Grand Central Theatres. There apparently has developed a last minute hitch in the negotiations. The long awaited formal announcement that the deal has been closed has not been forthcoming.

Exhibitors of this territory, and especially the owners of neighborhood houses, apparently have an unwritten law that a picture must be no good if it doesn't show on Grand boulevard. Because of the peculiar situation prevailing in this territory, with Paramount controlling the Missouri and Skouras Brothers, owners of the Associated First National franchise, holding the New Grand Central, it is obvious that the first-run possibilities of outside pictures is very limited.

The independents are fearful that the contemplated consolidation would aggravate the present situation, further removing their chances of breaking into the Grand boulevard houses.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—(Special)—Audrey Munson in Equity's special, "Heedless Moths," opened a week's first run engagement at the Colonial Theatre here on Sunday night.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—(Special)—Edward Fay topped his all-star bill at the Fay Theatre this week with "Sure Fire Flint," featuring both Johnny Hines and Doris Kenyon. The latter appeared as star of W. A. Brady's "Up the Ladder" at the Shubert-Majestic, which explains for the co-star feature. The picture opened to a good house, with the local dailies giving unusual praise to it.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—(Special)—Independent attractions are getting a big play this week at the first run downtown houses. Weiss Brothers' "After Six Days," the Bible spectacle, continues for a second week at English's Opera House, a legit house. "Heedless Moths" is playing at the Colonial. Jack Hoxie is topping the bill at the Regent in "Sparks of Flint" and at the Isis in "The Crow's Nest." "Rich Men's Wives" is drawing good crowds to the Apollo. The latter picture was given a rousing sendoff, and if business continues as it opened Sunday, the Lichtman feature should set a record. It is being elaborately exploited locally.

CLEVELAND — (Special) — "Rich Men's Wives," with House Peters and Claire Windsor, opened for a four-day run at the Knickerbocker Theatre this week on Sunday.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(Special)—Tom Moore of the Rialto went after "Rags to Riches" in bang-off fashion, grabbing quarter-page advertisements in the Sunday papers. He filled the rest of the bill with novelties and a good musical program, and on the opening day played to capacity at every show with no letup in this big attendance on the following three days.

MILLEN, GA.—(Special)—Following a record business, Manager C. H. Simpson of the Princess, where Richard Talmadge did a turnaway business in "The Cub Reporter," said that "if this star keeps up his good work Douglas Fairbanks won't be in it."

MINNEAPOLIS — (Special) — Reports from the smaller houses in this territory indicate that Equity's "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" is doing a good business.

CHICAGO—(Special)—"The Isle of Doubt," with Wyndham Standing, did a wonderful business at the La Salle Theatre here, catering to neighborhood patronage.

PLATTSMOUTH, Neb.—(Special)—"I Am the Law," the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., Northwestern, is continuing its good showing in this State. At the Cloidt & Moore Parmlee Theatre here recently it did capacity business.

GUTHRIE, OKLA. — (Special) — "Ten Nights in a Barroom," which has had a remarkable career, did not do so well for Ned Pedigo at the Pollard Theatre, for the picture here failed to draw despite the advance publicity given the picture.

"I Am the Law" Opens; Gotham Booking Plan

Despite its belated release, "I Am the Law," the Edwin Carewe directed Affiliated Distributors, Inc., great Northwestern feature, is in great demand among exhibitors in New York and New Jersey. Early bookings announced this week by Bobby North of the Apollo Exchange, which is distributing the picture in the metropolitan district, indicate a big gross rental for this production, which was given its premier showing this week at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, New York, where it played to splendid audiences. Mr. North expects this picture to tack up a top gross record for his exchange. The publicity given the picture is helping considerably.

Among the more important first run bookings already arranged by Apollo Exchange are the following: Loew's State, Newark; B. S. Moss' Flatbush, Broadway, Franklin, Regent, Coliseum, Hamilton and Jefferson in New York; B. F. Keith's Fordham, Riviera, Prospect, Greenpoint and Eighty-first Street Theatre in New York; B. F. Keith's Parthenon in Brooklyn; F. F. Proctor's 125th Street in New York; Belvedere in Brooklyn; Proctor's Yonkers Theatre in Yonkers; State Theatre and Ritz in Jersey City, and Strand Theatre in oboken.

Negotiations now under way indicate that Warner Brothers' next special, "The Beautiful and Damned," will be given its premier showing at the Strand Theatre.

"More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation first "Big Six" release, is playing over the Moss-Keith-Proctor houses to good business.

The fact that the new association of independent bookers who have combined into one booking organization has started to function is attracting much interest among exchanges in New York. Just how the arrangement will affect the bookings remains to be seen. The first independent exchange to declare war on the "syndicate" bookers was Warner Brothers' Exchange, which, while handling "School Days," turned down the latter's proposition and booked the picture independently.

Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation has several offers from Broadway houses anxious to stage the premier metropolitan showing of the Al Lichtman special, "Shadows." Joe Plunkett of the Strand and Sam Rothafel of the Capitol both attended the special trade showing of the B. P. Schulberg picture, which Tom Forman directed, at the Hotel Biltmore last Friday night.

Commonwealth Pictures Corporation had the unusual distinction of playing part host to exhibitors in the metropolitan territory twice within ten days. Two weeks ago Sam Zierler in collaboration with C. C. Burr gave a special showing at the Biltmore of Johnny Hines' feature, "Sure-Fire Flint" and "Secrets of Paris," and a week later "Shadows" was shown.

The Arrow Film Exchange has started exploitation on its two new Arrow features, "Streets of New York," the Burton King production, and "Night Life of Hollywood."

The New York Board of Censors this week passed the Al Lichtman special, "Shadows," with Lon Chaney without a single cut.

"Madonna in Chains" Ready

The first release of Amalgamated Exchanges of America, "The Madonna in Chains," was completed last week and will be ready for release late this month. Those in the cast include Martha Mansfield, E. K. Lincoln, Joseph Striker, Mrs. Rodolph Valentino and others. Mrs. Valentino left for the Coast immediately after the picture was completed.

C. B. C. Tieing Up Xmas Shopping with Its Latest Production

Following the announcement a week or two ago of a tremendous campaign tying up local merchants on the exploitation of "Only a Shopgirl," the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation received many inquiries as to just what lines could be followed out in such a campaign. That these are many and varied is proved this week by the announcement of only one way in which the promised co-operation of big stores in many of the cities is to be utilized for the good not only of the C. B. C. and the feature but for the community as well.

This is to take the lines of a "Do Your Christmas Shopping Early" campaign and the wheels have already been set in motion and definite practicable tie-ups being made.

A detailed campaign along these lines, planned by Esther Lindner, head of publicity and exploitation for C. B. C. has already gone, setting forth ideas and suggestions that are actually practicable and will serve as a basis of guide for all exchanges handling the Six Box Office Winners—with suggestions for getting stores and newspapers behind the movement, placards, co-operative moves with local Chambers of Commerce, and other opportunities. The majority of territorial organizations handling the features have already reported that at least one—and several more local merchants have received the idea enthusiastically and promised their fullest co-operation.

This line "Do Your Christmas Shopping Early" is being used also by C. B. C. and the exchanges in advertising the six features—and will be their own slogan also to exhibitors for the next month.

To carry out this idea one of the exploitation novelties in connection with "Only a Shopgirl" is a pocket shopping list of celluloid, such as women carry in their pocket-books on their shopping tours—made of celluloid which can be written on and then erased or washed off and used again.

D. C. Goodman Will Make Four Equitys

Daniel Carson Goodman, author and producer of the latest "Special" production, "What's Wrong With the Women?" released by Equity Pictures Corporation, was among the arrivals when the Olympic reached port on Tuesday last. Dr. Goodman has been in England and France for the past six weeks, enjoying a short vacation, and at the same time, getting extensive first hand information and atmosphere for his next contribution to the screen.

This coming production will be the second of a series of five pictures that Equity Pictures intends to release during the current year, all from the pen and hand of Daniel Carson Goodman. The remarkable success achieved by "What's Wrong With the Women?" his first offering, has given Dr. Goodman the incentive to surpass his last picture, and has convinced Equity Pictures that special productions, containing a powerful story, an excellent cast supervised by a director who considers detail and continuity above all else, will always find a ready market in the independent field.

At the present time, no definite information can be given to the trade regarding the name of the new picture or its type of story.

Joe Horowitz Passes Away

DETROIT (Special)—Joe Horowitz, one of the best known and best liked film men in Michigan, passed away at his home here on Thursday afternoon, Oct. 26, following a brief illness. His death came as a shock to his many friends. Mr. Horowitz, affectionately known to his friends as "Joe," had recently re-established a local distributing firm.

Apparently David Mundstuck, who has organized Exclusive Pictures, Inc., here, intends operating on an elaborate basis, for he has submitted bids for some of the bigger pictures now available for his territory. Among the product for which he is negotiating are Affiliated Distributors, Inc., product and "Notoriety," Will Nigh's first L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North production.

Business generally at the independent exchanges is improving with the Standard Film Service Exchange leading the procession. Standard, incidentally, is releasing the bulk of independent product in this section, for, in addition to operating as the Standard Exchange, the Harry Charnas contingent also have the Federated and Al Lichtman franchises for this territory.

"What's Wrong With The Women?", the Equity special, is seemingly popular with exhibitors in this territory, for bookings are heavy on this feature.

Warner Brothers Exchange here, reorganized, is now working smoothly, and hardly a visitor in this section, visiting the Film Building, misses dropping in. The first release in this territory will be "Rags To Riches," with Wesley Barry.

Joins Lichtman

Leon D. Netter this week joined the Al Lichtman Corporation and togcther with Henry Ginsberg will have charge of foreign and domestic sales of the company's product. Netter's new duties will keep him on the road a considerable part of the time. Before joining Lichtman, Mr. Netter was New York manager for Educational. He was associated with Sol Lesser in a State rights business for eight years on the Coast and in New York.

Big Star and Director Invasion Proof Independents 'Have Arrived'—Lesser

"The independent producer and distributor has at last arrived."

Emphatic in his claim that the independent had finally attained what he had aspired to reach years ago, Irving Lesser, eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, which will this month release two specials, the Irving Cummings feature, "Chicago Sal" with Alice Lake, Milton Sills and an all-star cast, and Elinor Glyn's "The World's a Stage" with Dorothy Phillips, issued a statement this week commenting on trade conditions as his special representatives and he had found them, following an exhaustive study and investigation that spread over a period of three months.

Mr. Lesser's statement is the first of its sort given out and covers the independent market from every angle. Mr. Lesser is one of the best known distributors in the business. Associated with him in Principal Pictures Corporation, which maintains distributing quarters in Los Angeles and in New York, a studio on the Coast, are Sol Lesser, who is president, and Michael Rosenberg, who is in charge of production. This firm intends operating in the independent market on a lavish scale and are lining up some of the foremost exchanges in the country to handle their product, a complete announcement of which will be made next week. The first two releases will be "Chicago Sal" and "The World's a Stage."

Mr. Lesser's statement in full follows:

"Competition has brought into this industry a group of hard working business men and producers who have gained for the independents that exhibitor confidence and patronage for which the trade had been fighting for a great number of years. The independent market has reached its goal, and it is now a contending factor that national companies can not and indeed are not overlooking.

"Today independent producers are seeking established stars. Conditions have been reversed. Years ago it was the national distributor who sought new talent from independents; today we find a much changed situation. Independent producers are seeking players with established box-office prices; they are seeking names appreciative of the demand of exhibitors for some popular player's prestige. And price or salary, or whatever else may enter into the question, furnish no obstacle, for independents are seemingly desirous of getting the proper material.

"Take our case, for example; we have signed Dorothy Phillips, who for several years has been starring in pictures released through national distributing companies. When Elinor Glyn's story was purchased at a price that would dazzle the trade because of its enormity, we looked around for a suitable star to feature. We had before us some notable facts concerning the wants of exhibitors, and we realized the fact that to get a player who was well known price was no object. We landed Miss Phillips and induced her to sign a contract. But we are not the only independent producers who are doing this; there are others. But I cite our case merely to emphasize the sincerity of independents to give the theatre owners what they want.

"But the star is not the only thing. The story is of vital importance. And independents are turning out pictures based on popular stories written by well-known authors. Production value is also being carefully considered from every angle and, to substantiate this, we have but to refer to some of the current big independent releases.

"Pictures of quality are not common in the independent market. Personally, speaking for Principal Pictures Corporation, I will say that this organization will concentrate all efforts on turning out pictures that meet with exhibitor approval. We have allied ourselves with the foremost exchanges of the country and through these we will release our product. Michael Rosenberg is on the Coast supervising our production activities, which will be doubled by the first of the year when we will inaugurate our program of releasing quality productions at definite intervals.

"The crisis through which the motion picture in general passed during the past two years has indeed worked wonders for the independents. It completely reversed the attitude of exhibitors toward independent producers and their product. Prior to the reconstruction period that followed the signing of the armistice at the close of the World War, exhibitors, when visited by salesmen for a so-called independent exchange, figured that he was selling some product that the supposedly 'big distributing companies' had turned down. This proved an obstacle that handicapped the trade from the very outset. The exhibitor was prejudiced.

"Then came the change. It was slow, but effective. The irresponsibles were driven out of business, for they could not survive the strain resultant from the industrial depression that prevailed throughout the country. Exchangemen reinforced themselves, and soon producers found it to their advantage to produce for the so-called independent exchanges. The producers spared nothing in getting the proper material, with the result that productions that marveled the industry in general soon were being turned out.

"This situation prompted the exhibitor to sit up and take notice. Our pictures are in demand and salesmen working out of these leading exchanges are cordially received by exhibitors who have come to realize the importance of our productions. Exchangemen have written in saying that exhibitors want big pictures and are paying accordingly for them. In many cases independent productions have been sold at greater prices than those paid for nationally distributed features. We have won exhibitor confidence and deservedly so, too."

Exhibitors Seek Personal Appearances That Entertain

Stars contemplating making personal appearances, and there never was such a big demand for them among exhibitors, should bear in mind that the public is demanding something entertaining; that is, the theatregoers who attend such performances are best satisfied by being surprised. And experience, reports from exhibitors show, indicates that a novelty act, such as the enactment of some scene from the picture, or singing or even a little dancing furnish the best entertainment. The public seemingly is tired out of the stereotyped "studio talks and experience." They read the fan papers and from them seemingly get all the studio information they want to digest.

Margery Wilson returned to New York this week following a tour of New England. While in New England she appeared in conjunction with her own production, "Insinuation." She booked the picture herself. In fact, she attended to all the details. She is in New York making distribution arrangements for the picture, as she is anxious to be back on the Coast for the holidays. After the latter she contemplates resuming her personal appearances.

The Johnny Hines engagement in Boston, Mass., at the Olympia Theatre recently in conjunction with the world premiere showing of "Sure Fire Flint," was a record breaker, and Sam Moscow, manager of the Moscow Exchange there, who is handling the New England distribution of the feature, is besieged with offers from exhibitors who want to hook Johnny for a personal appearance. Hines was featured at the Victoria in Philadelphia last week. The C. C. Burr feature, "Sure Fire Flint," also is showing there. The Monday business was a turn-away affair, with several new records set.

Immediately after she has completed work on the picture in which she is now appearing, and which will be distributed independent through the independent exchanges associated with Amalgamated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., Mrs. Rodolph Valentino (Jean Acker) will resume her personal appearances. She may appear in conjunction with the showings of the first Amalgamated production, although nothing definite is known now.

Peggy O'Day and Francis Ford will both be in the East shortly for the purpose of jointly appearing in person in conjunction with the exhibition of their features. Mr. Ford is one of the best known and best liked producer-director-actors in the business. He still enjoys a wonderful following and exchanges releasing O'Day and Ford pictures should not hesitate in making arrangements for the appearances of these stars in their territories. They can be reached care of Independent Editor, Moving Picture World, 516 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Mary Anderson, star of Ivan Abramson's "Wildness of Youth," completed one of the best money-making weeks ever experienced by the management of the Strand, Newark, N. J. Miss Anderson appeared in person and gave a splendid performance. Her magnetic personality, plus an entertaining chat and a clever exploitation campaign, kept the spacious Strand Theatre crowded at every show. She will appear at other showings of the picture in the Metropolitan section.

A certain Eastern exhibitor this past week communicated a record-breaking offer to Lon Chaney to make a personal appearance at his house, but previous engagements prevented that star from accepting the proposition.

Edward Earle and others who appeared in "Streets of New York," the new Arrow special which Burton King produced, will personally be present at the initial showing of that feature at the State Theatre, Jersey City, on Monday.

There is a probability that Sheldon Lewis, who is at present working on Arrow's new James Oliver Curwood picture, "Jacqueline," and Virginia Pearson, who is appearing in the first Amalgamated Exchange production being made at the New Rochelle studio, will combine their efforts for the purpose of filling in several picture house engagements.

Jackie Coogan, star of "Oliver Twist," will personally appear at several important engagements of that picture, according to announcement made this week by Harry Wilson.

Buffalo Live News of the Independents

BUFFALO. — (Special). — "What's Wrong With the Women?" will be the first attraction which Harry Marsey, of Niagara Pictures Corporation, will present at his series of Sunday picture shows at the Criterion Theatre, which he has leased for Sundays only during the winter. Mr. Marsey announces that he is about to close a deal whereby Niagara will get the western New York distribution rights on a super-special. Niagara is now handling the Second National product and has just obtained J. B. Warner in "Below the Dead Line" and Fritzie Ridgeway in "The Branded Man." Mr. Marsey now has "Uncle Tom's Cabin" out as a road show making the towns. Charles Husband, formerly manager of the Family Theatre in Albion, and Ralph Mau, formerly with MacMy and Paramount, are now members of the Niagara sales staff.

Harry L. Berkowitz, manager of the new Graphic Exchange in the Warner Building, is getting along famously with his new office and is booking many of his pictures in local houses. Among the theatres that have signed up to date are the Maxine, Capitol, Rivoli, Plaza, Variety, all the General Theatre Corporation houses and many others. Mr. Berkowitz is being assisted at the exchange by his brother, Jack, who was with Elk in New York for the past five years. Pop Berliner, formerly with Universal, Hallmark, Merit and other companies, is a new salesman for Graphic. Just now Mr. Berkowitz is planning a big drive on Chic Sales in "His Nibs." He is also handling the Richard Talmadge features. In commenting on his success in Buffalo, Mr. Berkowitz says that he is enthusiastic over the way he is being received in spite of the fact that he is unacquainted in the territory.

Syd Samson, of Grand & Northb, announces the acquisition of "Only a Shop Girl" and "Shadows" for distribution in this end of the State. Syd says that seldom has any picture brought so many requests for screening from exhibitors as "Shadows."

Arrow Lands Two New Features

Announcement was made this week that Arrow Film Corporation had acquired two new features. One of them is "The Little Red Schoolhouse," based on Hal Reid's play. John G. Adolphi will direct this feature. He directed Georges Carpentier in "The Wonder Man." The other is "High Speed Lee," a society drama made by Atlantic Productions, featuring Reed Howes. Miss Rosalind Fuller plays opposite him.

Producers Security Gets Carleton Film

Lloyd Carleton this week closed negotiations with Ricord Gradwell, of Producers' Security Corporation, for the release by the latter firm of his latest production, the title of which has not been disclosed. Mr. Carleton arrived here from the coast last week. Just how the picture will be distributed has not been yet announced, however.

Warners Tie-up with Broadway Legit Producer Whose Plays They Purchase

On his return to New York from the coast some time late this month or late in December, Harry M. Warner, head of Warner Brothers, will make an announcement relative to ten pictures which his firm will release through their territorial partners. It is known that before Mr. Warner left for the coast he was in conference with a well-known legitimate stage producer and that prior to his departure he had signed a contract with that magnate whereby his firm will adapt his stage successes to the screen. These plays include some of the greatest successes of the past two years and were sought by several national producers. The amount involved has not been made known, but it goes deep into the six figures as well as giving the Broadway producer a cut-in on the picture versions.

Mr. Warner is on the coast to reinforce Warner Brothers' interest there in addition to making provisions for the production of these new pictures. A special despatch from the coast brought the information that Mr. Warner is dickering with several directors who will be added to the already long list making pictures for Warner Brothers. Harry Rapf, Jack and Sam Warner are all on the coast working on forthcoming Warner releases. The completed print of the second Warner picture, "The Beautiful and Damned," was slated to arrive in New York this week and will be released this month. The story for this picture was adapted by Olga Prinzlau from F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel and was directed by William A. Seiter.

In expediting the print East, the Warner's are said to be complying with the urgent requests of the exchanges that have contracted to handle the entire series of seven productions being released this season by the Warner Brothers. It is declared that the exchangemen have received many advance bookings on the feature, and from present indications the production is expected to surpass the popularity of the current Warner attraction, "Rags to Riches," featuring Wesley Barry.

The cast supporting Miss Prevost includes Harry Meyers, Louise Fazenda, Tully Marshall, Emmett King, Cleo Ridgeley, Kathleen Key, Parker McConnell, Clarence Burton, Walter Long, George Kuwa and Charles McHugh.

F. B. O. Handles Equity in K. C.

KANSAS CITY — (Special) — Film Booking Offices' Exchange here will handle the distribution of three Clara Kimball Young Equity pictures. These include "Charge It," "What No Man Knows" and "The Worldly Madonna," the last picture that star made for Equity.

Joe Brandt of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York was here this week seeking to negotiate a tie-up with local distributors on the handling of that firm's six melodramatic pictures, the first two of which, "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned" and "Only a Shop Girl," have been completed.

Richards & Flynn are extensively advertising the Arrow output which they will distribute in this territory. They will release seven Jack Hoxie Westerns, as well as the William Fairbanks Westerns. Both series were made by Ben Wilson.

National Film Releasing Company, of which F. F. Nine is manager, has acquired the local rights to "Young America," and a series of fourteen five-reel George Larkin Western pictures and Jack Livingston features.

Enterprise Distributing Corporation's Kansas City exchange reports big business on "Flesh and Blood," starring Lon Chaney. This firm is also advertising Tully Marshall and Jane Grey in "Let Katie Do It," a Western, as a "D. W. Griffith supervised Western sensation."

The Richard Talmadge pictures are doing big business, according to reports from exhibitors who are clamoring for features wherein this star is featured.

Production Started on Next Burr-Hines Starring Film

With the premier showing of "Sure-Fire Flint" a thing of the past, and its success virtually assured, Johnny Hines has already plunged into production on his third feature comedy-drama for his producer C. C. Burr. The latest Hines vehicle temporarily titled "Luck" was written for Johnny Hines by Jackson Gregory whose screen stories are known to possess the many and varied elements that play such an important part in successful feature length pictures.

The male principals of the cast have already been engaged and to-date include Edmund Breese, who appeared to advantage with Johnny Hines in both "Burn 'em Up Barnes" and "Sure-Fire Flint," Charlie Murray, the veteran Mack Sennett star now associated with C. C. Burr in the latter's "All-Star" comedies, J. Barney Sherry, who like Breese worked in the two previous Johnny Hines features and Joe King who has been actively engaged creating various character roles for the larger production units. With such an assemblage of screen talent producer Burr feels that "Luck" will be given the same excellent interpretation that featured "Sure-Fire Flint."

With "That Woman," the first Capt. F. C. Mims' production, completed and distributing arrangements completed, but unannounced, plans are being made by that producer for the making of a second feature, wherein Catharine Calvert, star of the initial feature, will be starred. Charles Horan will in all probability direct the second picture, the story for which is said to have been purchased. Harry Hoyt made the first picture.

Jack Harvey, formerly producer of the Ernest Truex comedies and who for a time was contemplating independent production, has permanently retired from the picture business. Harvey got in on the ground floor in the radio craze of several months and is said to have cleaned up enough to keep him from worrying for the rest of his life. He is now dabbling in real estate and insurance and meeting with great success.

Billy West, the comedian, who was at the height of popularity several years ago, is back on the map again. This time he has signed a contract to produce a series of twenty-four two-reel comedies for Smart Films, Inc. Will Morrissey, well known on stage and screen, will direct. The comedies will be made at Glendale, N. Y. Morrissey for the past two years has been staging his own musical productions. His last production was "Hollywood Follies," which played in Chicago. Later he condensed this revue and put it on at Reisenweber's in New York. Morrissey will also write the gags for the comedies.

Some time ago it was reported in this department that there was a strong probability that owing to the added producing activities of Warner Brothers the latter would obtain a studio in the East. There is a strong report to the effect that this will be done upon the return of Harry W. Warner from the Coast. This firm last week closed an important production deal, and with the Coast studio jammed with four units working simultaneously under the supervision of Harry Rapf and Sam and Jack Warner, the only way in which the Warners could hope to turn these contemplated new specials would be to procure another studio. And if the Warners procure another studio it will be located near New York.

In all probability the next production that Burton King will make for State Pictures Corporation of New Jersey will be "Plastered Saints." However, there will be no casting done on this feature until early in November. King last week engaged Joe Farnham to write new titles for his latest feature, "Shylock of Wall Street," a picture for which several independent companies are angling. The other Burton King feature, "Streets of New York," will be given a premiere showing in Jersey City next Monday. Arrow Film Corporation is handling that production.

The home office of Arrow Film Corporation is in receipt of a number of stills on "Lost in a Big City" which Blazed Trail Productions is now producing at their studio in Gloversville, New York. These stills seem to indicate that the organization which gave the screen "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" has struck upon another photo-drama as rich in heart interest as was their first great creation. John Lowell is again seen in the leading role and his support is headed by Baby Ivy Ward, the screen's most popular child player.

Neufeld Heads Philly Changes

PHILADELPHIA — (Special) — Oscar Neufeld, of the De Luxe Film Exchange, was unanimously elected President of the Film Board of Trade of Philadelphia, at its recent meeting held in this city. Independent exchangemen of this territory were given the unusual honor of being placed in three executive offices, for Gene Marcus of the Twentieth Century Film Company was elected Vice-President with Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., Treasurer. John Flynn, of F. B. O., was elected Recording Secretary. Mr. Neufeld succeeds Feliz Mendelsohn as President.

Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece on his return last Saturday from New York where he viewed the second Preferred Pictures, which will be released through the Al Lichtman Exchange, issued a statement assuring exhibitors in this territory that he had secured a "picture that he wouldn't trade for the best that was produced" in "Shadows," with Lon Chaney and an all-star cast. Beside Mr. Amsterdam, his partner, Lou Korson, and Exploitation Director Walter Greene, also attended the New York trade showing of "Shadows."

There is a strong report current in this section that after the first of the year Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufeld of De Luxe Film Exchange will change the name of their exchange to Progress Pictures Exchange, this step being planned in compliance with teh local distributors of Arrow product, which will next year assume the name of Progress Pictures Exchanges.

Bob Lynch of the independent Metro Exchange has started his advertising campaign on Amalgamated pictures, for which he was recently given a franchise in this territory. This is the franchise that David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., claims he contracted for in July.

De Luxe Film Exchange have finally decided to release the Sacred Film, Inc., Bible pictures as single-reelers, instead of combining the first seven episodes into one big feature, as was originally planned.

Lou Berman of Independent Film Corporation, releasing Warner Brothers' pictures, has plastered the countryside with 24-sheets advertising the seven Warner pictures. Lou's first release is "Your Best Friend," which he purposely held over in order not to conflict with "The Good Provider," which in most territories was released simultaneously with the Warner feature. The picture's release was purposely postponed at the the request of exhibitors here.

Philadelphia independent exchanges are receiving every co-operation from members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, which is encouraging the booking of quality independent pictures.

"Wildness of Youth," the Graphic production starring Mary Anderson, being released in this territory by Graphic Exchange, showed at David Starkman's Wood Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., to a fairly good business.

Burton King's "Streets of New York" Gets Triple Run Showing

JERSEY CITY—(Special)—Burton King's screen adaptation of the melodramatic success of other days, "The Streets of New York," was "dogged" on theatregoers of this State Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, playing three houses, the Strand in Hoboken, and State and Ritz in Jersey City. Intensive exploitation attracted much attention to the picture, which was co-featured at each house with six acts of vaudeville. The presentation was held under the auspices of Arrow Film Corporation, which is releasing the production on the independent market. While no records were broken at any of the theatres, which are controlled by Frank K. Hall, an officer of State Pictures Corporation, producer of "Streets of New York," it did a capacity business at every show.

The picture was enthusiastically received by patrons who responded in large numbers to the clever exploitation that preceded the presentation which closed every performance at all houses. When the final count-up was made on Wednesday night it was shown that the greatest gross was turned in at the million-dollar State Theatre, where Sophie Tucker headlined and was given equally effective billing with the picture. The Strand in Hoboken and Ritz also did a wonderful business on the production.

While business at each house was capacity, the drawing power of the Burton King picture, which was generally conceded to be a tribute to the directorial ability of that producer, was not fully tested because of the presence of six headline B. F. Keith acts at each of the three theatres. For instance, Sophie Tucker, one of the greatest "single" draws in the country, topped the State bill, while at the Strand in Hoboken Ernest Ball, the song writer, who is one of the best Jersey bets, was featured. At the Ritz Rome and Gaut and Black, White & Useless, two good acts, were given as prominent billing as "The Streets of New York." Nevertheless, the exploitation, in charge of Dick Weil, advertising and publicity managr of Arrow Film Corporation, was effective and business-getting.

Two hand organs were sent through the streets decorated with canvas banners announcing the showings at the three houses. A stuffed bear and a stuffed fox were used as street displays, mounted on little toy carts and drawn through the streets by fantastically dressed boys. In the case of the bear a card was attached reading, Bear in Mind the Fact That a Bear of a Picture is Coming to the Strand, State, Ritz. Be Sure to See "The Streets of New York." While in the case of the fox the card read: "Be Foxy. Buy Your Entertainment Carefully. Be Sure to See 'The Streets of New York,' the Greatest Melodrama of Them All, at the Strand, State, Ritz."

Manila pay envelopes were imprinted as follows: "Are You on the 'Cent' of a Good Picture? Then See The Streets of New York. (Look Inside.)" A penny was placed inside of each of these envelopes and same were distributed through the streets. The billing of the production appeared on the obverse side. As may be readily imagined, these throw-aways in themselves were sufficient to stir up a vast amount of public interest.

Two men, dressed as farmers, led through the streets a donkey and a goat with a saddle cloth on each animal appropriately lettered. In the case of the goat the reading matter was: "This is No Kid! The Streets of New York Is a Wonderful Picture. See It at the State, Ritz, Strand."

While the donkey bore the following message: "Everybody Except Me Is Going to See The Streets of New York, And You Know What I Am. See It at the State, Ritz, Strand."

A splendid lobby display was installed which reproduced in faithful detail the back of a row of New York tenement houses with the wash-lines filled with different articles of men's and women's attire, which were cut from bright colored materials. This display was made additionally effective by the installation of an electric fan which, hidden in one corner, caused the clothing to flutter merrily in the breeze.

An unusual advertising wagon, specially created for the attraction, was driven through the streets and created a veritable furore wherever it appeared. An automobile painted bright yellow and red and modeled somewhat along the lines of an airplane, twenty-five feet in length over all and equipped with a brazen-tongued fire-bell, was a forceful reminder that "The Streets of New York" was due to reach Jersey in the very near future. When, in conjunction with this automobile, the envelopes described above were distributed therefrom, the results can be imagined better than described.

These were the most prominent features of the campaign, which also included an increased advertising appropriation and the use of half-page display ads in the various local newspapers. Also there were distributed 10,000 diamond-shaped hangers, which were placed over door knobs and hung from automobile handles and similar points of vantage. A "perambulator" upon either side of which was mounted a 24-sheet, was also used, being driven through the most popular and populous sections of the city.

Ray Johnson Closes Sale

W. Ray Johnston, Vice-President of Arrow Film Corporation, last week went to Boston where he closed a deal involving the New England territorial rights to his firm's latest picture, Burton King's "The Streets of New York," co-starring Edward Earle and Barbara Castleton. The territory was purchased by Messrs. Pattem, McConville and Heffron who comprise the Independent Films, Inc.

E. R. Chalmers Visits America

E. R. Chalmers of Selected Super Films, Ltd., of Sydney, New South Wales, and Wellington, New Zealand, has returned to Australia following a three-month visit to the United States. While in this country he purchased an Amalgamated Exchange franchise and the Mae Murray productions, together with a number of other pictures including "Women Men Marry."

Conditions in Minnesota Are Not Improved

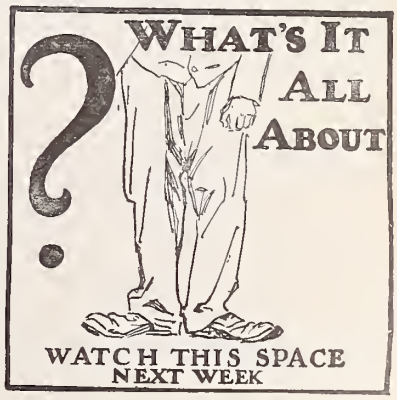
MINNEAPOLIS — (Special)—While reports from most of the country indicate a general improvement in business, conditions in this section have not improved. According to statistics compiled by J. Fred Cubberly, manager of the F. & R. Film Company here, something like 300 theatres in the smaller towns of Minnesota, North and South Dakota have closed for all time. He attributes the closing to "good roads, automobiles and consequent lack of patronage to the fellow who ran in a small town with poor equipment."

Joe Brandt of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation was in Minneapolis last week. He gave out an interview to the effect that it is within the province of the exhibitor to encourage independent production of high class pictures "by leaving open time." "Unfortunately," he added, "there are not enough who do this." Mr. Brandt is touring the country, and from here went to Omaha.

C. C. Burr's "Sure-Fire Flint," which is being released here through the F. & R. Film Company, is popular and bookings are in big demand among first run exhibitors. The picture plays the Eau Claire Theatre in Eau Claire, Wis., November 15, 16 and 17, Manager Herman Schwan having booked it immediately after a special showing.

May Star Bellamy

LOS ANGELES — (Special) — Madge Bellamy, who is one of the principal players in "Are You a Failure?" the new Preferred Picture which Tom Forman is directing, may be starred in a series of pictures.



Al Lichtman Takes Hand in Attack on Quality of Films

The first reply of the motion picture industry to the attack made upon it by the Waukesha Committee of Fifty last week has been made by Al Lichtman, president of the company bearing his name, who has wired that body of farmers and clergymen that he will arrange for a screening of "Shadows" if they so desire to show them what the recognized producing faction of the industry can make in the way of substantial, worthwhile productions.

The committee which purports to represent farmers, small town film patrons and hundreds of churches in the Middle West held a mass meeting at Waukesha, Ill., last week, at which the present kinds of motion pictures were condemned and resolutions forwarded to New York producers and Will H. Hays. Producers were urged to turn their attention to the consideration of sensible themes and the manufacture of pictures that would help the national economic situation.

When Lichtman was advised of this action, he at once dispatched a telegram to the committee. At the same time, he wrote Will H. Hays and advised him of what he had done. In the Hays letter, he said he would gladly offer the picture to the Hays association to arrange the Waukesha screening and also make it available before any audience that was interested in the advance of the motion picture as a means of educational influence and a disseminator of good.

Edward Dillon Joins Independent Ranks

Edward Dillon, whose name has been for several years with Goldwyn and Famous Players, is the latest screen celebrity to cast his lot with the independent wing of the picture industry, as was exclusively reported in Moving Picture World six weeks ago.

With "Women Men Marry," Mr. Dillon makes his bow in the State rights field. This picture, which is a study in social and matrimonial problems, is the result of a year's preparation and active studio work.

The long cast is headed by E. K. Lincoln in the role of a modern knight errant, while the leading female character is assumed by Miss Florence Dixon, who is considered as being one of the most beautiful women ever engaged in screen work.

Other leading members of the cast include Julia Swayne Gordon, Hedda Hopper who, in private life is the wife of the distinguished comedian, DeWolf Hopper. Cecil Chadwick, who made a decided impression in the stage version of "Three Live Ghosts," essays the leading character part. Charles Hammond, who will be remembered for his portrayal in David Belasco's "Gold Diggers," is also prominent in the list of players seen in "Women Men Marry." Mrs. Margaret Seddon, Richard Carlyle and Maude Turner Gordon have all been highly commended by the critics of the trade press for their excellent work.

The story tells of the efforts made to marry a falsely educated young American girl into the British nobility.

Six Features Will Be Handled by George Wiley

Selling activity for the Hyperion Pictures Corporation's series of six productions for the independent market, is maintaining the rapid pace set since the first of the series, "Finger Prints" was completed and shown recently.

This week Hyperion closed for the series of six with the Imperial Pictures Company, of Philadelphia. Imperial has bought the rights on "Finger Prints" and the other five pictures to follow it, for the territory of Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. Negotiations are pending with all the rest of the remaining unsold territory.

George H. Wiley, of Hyperion, is starting out shortly on a business trip in the interests of the series, which will take him to all the important key cities in the East and Middle West. Reports and communications received by him indicate, he states, that the independent market never was better or more eagerly interested in a series such as he is now handling, than at present.

Sennett Books "Main Street" Before Feature Is Finished

What is probably an unparalled incident in the annals of booking feature productions is furnished in the statement that Mack Sennett has booked the Warner Brothers feature, "Main Street," for the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles. According to Harry M. Warner, actual production of the picture will not be started until Sam and Jack Warner complete "Little Church Around the Corner," which is being directed by William A. Seiter. The booking of "Main Street" by Mr. Sennett at this early date is said to be due to not only the popularity of the Sinclair Lewis novel has enjoyed with the reading public, but also to the fact that it contains unlimited avenues for publicity and exploitation.

First Run Showings on "Secrets of Paris" a Boost for Picture

Bookings for first-run showings on the C. C. Burr-Whitman Bennett special, "Secrets of Paris," the all-star cast production, are being consummated in surprisingly large numbers, according to a statement issued this week by the distributors of that feature. These showings, according to another letter received from Lester Scott, Jr., sales manager of Mastodon Films, Inc., who is now touring the country in the interests of this feature.

Weber-North Set Aside Big Sum for Exploitation of "Notoriety"

L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, whose operations in the independent production and distribution field, already has attracted considerable attention throughout the country, have emphasized their confidence in their latest Will Nigh special, "Notoriety," by augmenting their organization with three exploitation men. This is the first step taken in the direction of increased exploitation effort. This firm recently announced a Will Nigh production program embracing four pictures.

One man will be assigned to the New England States and the South, another to the Middle West and a third to the West Coast. Each one of them made their reputation in the territory that they will cover, and are veterans in the publicity profession. Their names will be announced when they will officially begin on "Notoriety," which is expected next week.

A wealth of exploitation and publicity material is in command of these three experts and they will be given full leeway as to expense and time in putting over "Notoriety" in every key city for the State right buyer and exhibitor. They will be at the complete disposal of the exchangeman whenever he calls on their services. They will have the support and direction of the advertising and exploitation staff of the Home Office of Weber & North, where a sure-fire failure-proof publicity campaign has already been mapped out.

First run bookings are already at hand for the men to cover. Ben Schwartz of the Apollo Exchange has engaged Charles Cohen, a special publicity man for New York alone. Ben Amsterdam of the Federated, Boston; James Alexander of the Columbia Film Service, Pittsburgh; George Montgomery of Supreme, Los Angeles, and the Grand-North exchanges of Buffalo and Albany, are lining up their first runs.

"Dr. Jack" is the greatest comedy ever made.

But it is more than a comedy.

It not only arouses tidal waves of laughter but it sounds the depths of the human soul in the intensity of its pathos. The genius that conceived and created the picture realized that laughter is the greatest when it follows upon emotion; that pathos is sublime when it is preceded by laughter.

HAROLD LLOYD in "DR. JACK"

"Dr. Jack" is a triumph for Harold Lloyd; for Hal Roach; for the unique and wonderful staff that collaborated in its making. It is no less a triumph for the entire motion picture industry, for it shows the greatness of the motion picture.

HAROLD LLOYD in "DR. JACK"

There can be only one "greatest."

The public has determined, by its laughter and its dollars, its enthusiasm and its praise, the greatest box-office star before the public today.

Phenomenal and unprecedented runs upon his recent pictures, ranging from three to nineteen weeks in the largest cities, with doubled and tripled time in the smaller, with attendance record after attendance record smashed with bewildering frequency, prove that there is but one greatest star—Harold Lloyd.

He, the greatest star, is now presented in his latest and greatest picture—a feature—
"Dr. Jack."

Fred Hathaway Hooks Town Merchants to Anniversary Week for Oneonta Theatre

FRED HATHAWAY, who has contributed an unusually large number of sound exploitation schemes during his stay with the Alhambra theatre, Utica, N. Y., has taken over the general exploitation of the Schine chain of ten theatres in central New York state.

He made his debut with a smashing stunt in Oneonta in which he was very materially aided by C. J. Rose, manager of the Strand theatre; indeed Mr. Hathaway declares that widespread popularity of the local manager is the prime essential to the successful working of the scheme, since it is largely a capitalization of that popularity.

Some Familiar Angles

In some of its angles the scheme has a familiar ring, but the combination is new. It is partly the dollar day idea, with a dash of the Farmers' Matinee as well as the special week stunt. He called it "The Strand and Merchants' Anniversary Week." The Strand has the anniversary and the merchants had a big week.

Sixty-eight of the merchants in Oneonta were brought into the scope of the scheme and agreed to pro rate the cost of decoration of the streets as well as to decorate their own fronts.

Special printing was done for shields proclaiming the week, and for pennants along the same lines. Because this was a general affair and not merely a theatre stunt, these shields and pennants were placed all over town, on telegraph and telephone poles, lamp posts, trees and fences. It was a town event, and the town was plastered.

Advertising was taken out into the country to get in the Ford patronage, and to this end special bargains were offered in most of the stores to make a shopping carnival. You could tell the co-operating stores by their decorated fronts, but they were not difficult to discover, for practically all of the shops were in the stunt from the Citizens National Bank to the Oneonta Bottling Works.

The affair opened with a tag day when everyone was presented with a tag, serially numbered to make it look interesting. The newspapers took up the idea for a week ahead and all through the run of the celebration, and on Saturday the town looked as though the circus had come to town, for they all drove in for the "Balloon day."

Prizes From the Air

Each of the stores contributed one or more prizes, none of them being of smaller value than three dollars. These were represented by baggage tags attached to gas balloons, the tags being printed up "return this tag to————and receive————," the blanks being filled in with the name of the merchant and the prize he offered.

These were turned loose and their captors rushed off to the stores for their prizes. If you ever threw out some ticket balloons, you can imagine what happened when nearly a hundred tagged balloons were let go, each representing a gift.

Makes Real Business

The theatre did practically capacity the entire week, and even the bank reported new accounts as a result of the stunts, while the retail merchants were delighted. From every angle it was a moneymaker, yet it cost comparatively little to pull off. It worked so well that Mr. Hathaway will repeat it in other towns on the circuit.

Crying for It

Dan Roche, Chicago Paramounteer, encloses a letter from one of his exhibitors in an Iowa town which reads in part: "One of our newspapers here is anxious to put over a double truck on one of our coming attractions," and asking for a suggestion, which, of course, Dan at once put over.

Dan sends the letter to the home office with the remark that "it certainly marks a milestone in our efforts."

It assuredly is, but newspapers are getting wise to the fact that it means money to them to work in with the theatres, and here is one which even urges the management to get busy.

Aerial Advertising

Something new along the lines of display work was the aerial tractor planned by Harry Needles, of the Princess Theatre, Hartford.

He hired an aviator to trail a banner, 30 by 7 feet, in the rear of his boat. The stunt was worked, but they will have to hire another aviator next time, as the trailer, which was dragged about 250 feet behind the tail, acted as a drag and made steering a matter of extreme nicety.

Having invested the banner with interest through this stunt, the manager put the sign in front of his house with a card stating that this was the same banner which had been floated over the city. People had to read about "Hurricane's Gal" when they looked at the banner, and the newspaper stories made them look at the banner.

A SPLENDID DISPLAY ON THE OLD HOMESTEAD FROM W. E. DRUMBAR, OF KNOXVILLE

This is the lobby of the Riviera and the corn box office. It cost only $35 to erect and was in part responsible for the smashing business done on this picture. Mr. Drumbar lists thirty-eight items used in its construction from a stuffed 'possum to two blackbirds. The local paper gave seven days of big publicity for the privilege of inviting men and women over sixty to be its guests —and the guests did not come alone. The family paid

Press Book Scheme Is a Space Winner

Judging from the reports already in, one of the press book schemes on "Remembrance" is going to prove a hog for space.

This is the stunt which appeals to the remembrances of the old timers. Some local paper is hooked to a Remembrance Contest, in which two or more questions are stated each day as "Do you remember when the first street car ran over the tracks on Broadway?" A small cash prize to the best responses to the set and smaller ticket prizes to others, kept the interest at fever heat for about a week.

This looks like one of the best ideas since Max Doolittle invented the Big Moment Contest down in Des Moines. If you get the picture, lay for this idea and plant the scheme on the paper ten days ahead. If you don't play Goldwyn's, wait for an appropriate title.

Jazzed Icicles

Snow lobbies are coming up to their winter layoff, but Harry Azine, of the Lyric Theatre, Duluth, found a new angle. He was playing Buster Keaton in "The Frozen North," and he draped his marquise with icicles. The difference was that his icicles were red and blue and green and purple, and the house looked like a dye factory after a fire in zero weather.

Naturally it got attention, which was precisely what Azine was looking for. He also used an Eskimo in a parka and panama hat, with a woman's parasol and a palm leaf fan. Old stuff, but it seemed to tickle Duluth.

A Big Smash

Most managers are well content with a broken house record, but A. J. Moreau, of the Palace Theatre, Arctic, R. I., claims that he broke all records for his section with "Blood and Sand." That covers a lot more ground.

He used the "no bull" stunt, which is especially appropriate for a bullfight picture and a special "Blood and Sand" edition of the local paper, using the regular newspaper head.

Hyman Made Exploit on Safety Campaign

Eddie Hyman played "The Man Who Played God" the week New York was pulling off a police safety week campaign and he went to it with hands, feet and toe-nails.

A local minister addressed several public school assemblies on safety—and the picture, and there was a little matter of 200 banners carried in a parade of Brooklyn school children, not to mention a tie-up to the leading Brooklyn paper. The newspaper feature—a "Help Others" column, proved so successful that the paper is going to run it along for a time as a regular feature.

Eddie does comparatively little exploitation, but when he does get busy he does something.

Goodwill Stuff

Sid Lawrence, a former First National exploitation man, was promoted to the management of the Isis Theatre, Grand Rapids.

Just as he came into the new job a local store was celebrating its fiftieth anniversary and making a lot of noise about it. Lawrence promptly ran an advertisement congratulating the store and tying in the First National attractions, which not only enabled him to ride on the big noise, but which paves the way for later store tie-ups.

This was the stunt which first gained the late Frank Montgomery a foothold in Jacksonville. He ran a page of appreciation of the local stock star, and they knew from his appreciation of her that he must know enough about good acting to be able to provide it on his screen. That was ten years back, but the stunt is still good. Those old-time tried stunts still need a lot of beating.

A STRIKING WINDOW SHEET FROM THE NEW GARRICK THEATRE, DULUTH, ON THE "MASQUERADER"

The house prints its own sheets, as recently told, and made the First National design the basis for an idea more striking, because of its shape, than most of the paper gotten out with this block. The sheet is three feet long by fourteen inches wide much longer than the average paper of this width and therefore better planned to get the attention of the passer-by. It is used for window and wall work

Made Personal Reply

Using the plan book scheme of advertising "While Satan Sleeps" with quotations, Verne Johnson, of the Jefferson theatre, St. Augustine, put the trimmings on.

Ticket prizes were offered for the first correct identification of each quotation, a new one being published daily for a week. Mr. Johnson wrote a personal letter to each contentant, thanking the writer for his interest and framing the letter in such a way as to show that it really was a dictated and not a form letter. He feels that the personal contact thus established will work permanent good.

Meanwhile he increased business fifty per cent. at a cost of $7.50.

Now It's the Men

They whittle exploitation to a pretty sharp point when Guy Bates Post's brief case and monocle can hold the centre of a window display. That is what they did for "The Masquerader" in Des Moines, when it played the Des Moines Theatre. And it pulled a crowd to a window display.

Next we shall be having one of the whiskers of the original lions used in "Nero" and a safety blade used by Wes Barry for his first shave, with perhaps a half-used tube of tooth paste from Anita Stewart and a spare tire from Constance Talmadge's car.

If it works, it's good, but it is liable to be overworked.

Local Tag Day Was Theatre Exploit

Because the Saturday preceding the opening of "Nice People" at the Belvedere theatre,Tuscaloosa, Ala., C. B. Grimes offered to print up the tags if he could put a "Nice People" legend on the back. He supplied 3,000 tags, most of which were sold for the benefit of a children's betterment idea, and everyone in town was a walking advertisement. The cost of the tags was small.

Another stunt was the publication in the newspaper, as news, of the snappy captions from the film, each tagged with the initials of some person, the names of Mr. Grimes' friends being selected. This gave a local touch to the stunt. He used a trellis lobby with cutout letters for the title and a lot of Japanese lanterns.

Mr. Grimes writes that he has obtained the use of a five window store front right next the post office for a few passes weekly. He can concentrate on one play or sell five titles, and the owner likes the idea because it makes the store look less bare and increases his chances of getting a rental. This is a new angle on vacant stores. Spring that in your real estate men.

White's $3 Lobby

Oscar White built a lobby for Tom Mix for three dollars. He had him in "The Fighting Streak" at the Rex theatre, Sumter, S. C., and made up a cutout which was stood beside a portable forge and an anvil. The cutout held a hammer and tongs and was apparently beating out a horseshoe. A red light bulb under the coke in the forge gave a very realistic glow. This was flanked by other cutouts, one showing him in western togs and the other in a boiled shirt outfit.

Most of the stuff was borrowed.

Kidded the Papers

Making the fact that one of the dual heroes of "The Masquerader" is a newspaperman the ostensible reason, the Rialto Theatre, San Antonio, gave a special showing to all newspaper men.

It made it easier to put over the masked ushers and the masked perambulator later on. Newspaper men are only human.

THINGS ARE COMING PRETTY FOR THE FAST MAIL OUT IN ST. PAUL. LOOK AT THE STUNTS

An automobile engine and a calliope wagon were both used by the Tower Theatre to put over the Fox big melodramatic release. That engine is the best we have seen to date and is the best disguise in which a Ford has yet appeared. It would appear to be a special construction to judge by the wheel base and seems to be a permanent device, adapted to the showing of the film

Naming Toy Puppies Sold Coogan Feature

Snuggle Pups are a toy supposedly representing J. Coogan's favorite pet. They are sold in the stores at the same counter with the Teddy Bears and other stuffed devices. Sometimes they go to work.

They were put to work by George J. Schade when he played "Trouble" at his Sandusky Theatre. He borrowed a couple of dozen and put them in an improvised cage suggestive of the kennels used at the bench shows. Then he told the children to guess the name of Jackie's favorite. Some 500 guesses were sent in and about 450 of them called the pup "Trouble," and since he had offered no prize for the guess, and could do as he pleased, Schade admitted to the pleased youngsters that they had guessed right the very first time, and made 450 of his young friends more friendly than ever.

He planned the stunt to get the kiddies in, but the idea took surprisingly well with their elders.

Got Splendid Front From Convent Idea

The convent scenes which end the story of "The Eternal Flame" gave Abe Levy, of th Strand Theatre, Waco, Texas, an idea for a front of unusual merit, though it was scarcely characteristic of the general spirit of the Norma Talmadge production.

With compo board and a few ornamental electroliers in the old mission style, he achieved a front of real distinction.

The side arches are used for entrance and exit, but the centre is built into a recess which houses a cutout from the First National paper, showing the central figures in the branding scene. Hidden lights played on this cutout and gave it an attention value which the picture does not suggest.

The structure involves considerable building, but it can be repainted for use later with other titles, and the cost can be pro rated to bring it down to a reasonable figure.

Here's Carroll Again

L. W. Carroll is a better jumper than a flea. Some years ago he used to send in a lot of useful stuff from Manchester, N. H. Next we heard he was over in Bangor, where Maine prohibition did not prohibit. He hopped to the Rialto, New Haven, and when that house burned switched to Berlin, N. H., from where he writes that he is just taking hold of stunts.

One idea was to use a fire engine bell in his lobby for "A Midnight Bell." When the city dumped a load of sand in front of the house, for the use of the pavers, he promptly moved the bell out to the sand pile and carded it: "Who was the ghost that rang 'The Midnight Bell'? Come in and find out." For "Her Gilded Cage" he used a local millinery creation with the statement that the hat would be shipped Miss Swanson with the request that she wear it in some future production.

His newspaper advertising is mostly all type, but he writes that the newspaper is putting in a casting box, and he hopes soon to be able to use mats and get out some real ads. He still uses the ever handy V. P. programs and these show up very well.

For a recent ad he used Jimquin's broadcasting copy on "Monte Cristo." He still knows where to get real stuff.

Found New Placement for Talmadge Flame

Most of the theatres playing Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame" have used the large candles for window displays, inviting curiosity as to the hours, minutes and seconds the flame will burn.

The Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, found something new.

THE NIAGARA FALLS IDEA

They placed the three foot candles in the lobby with a large cutout moth at the back, which shielded against the drafts and carried on the idea which someone seems to think is typical of the play. In any event it made a striking lobby decoration.

Point to the Card on "Sherlock Holmes"

Putting over the idea of a private presentation, the State Theatre, Pittsburgh, printed the admission tickets with a wider margin on the left than on the right. Into this margin was thrust a needle, and the card opened with the familiar quotation, "Quick, Watson—the needle."

This was a pointed appeal which resulted in the showing of the card to others, where the usual ticket might not have been passed around.

Building up the stunt of giving Norma Talmadge a ride for "Smilin' Through," the Capitol Theatre, Reading, used an open carriage with the wheels decorated with paper roses and electric bulbs. At night these latter were fed with current from a storage battery which greatly enhanced the display.

New York Exploits Helped Remembrance

Usually the New York theatres ride on the newspaper and poster advertising and let it go at that, but for the engagement of "Remembrance," at the Capitol Theatre, a number of good stunts were let loose which will help out-of-town managers.

One good seller was a tie-up with a phonograph store showing the familiar figures of Pop and his grandson in cutout with the words, "Old songs for 'Remembrance'" and a list of records. On the same lines there was a set of chimes on the theatre roof, and the campanologist of Old Trinity Church played a concert of old songs for one hour each afternoon and evening. Your trap drummer can do it on his xylophone if you have no chimes.

An auto hanger was used, printed with the things the autoist should remember, little details like gas and oil batteries and such, to make certain the car could carry him to the Capitol.

A telephone hanger was printed up with a finger. Holes were punched on either side and the strong hanger was run through these to lie across the finger on the face of the card, enough string being allowed to slip over the mouthpiece. The text opened with "Tie this string around your finger; don't forget to see," etc.

Old Pop Grout's personal card was left at thousands of offices, and an insurance agent got out 30,000 folders at his own expense, based on the subtitle to the effect that an insurance policy was the best love letter a man could send his wife.

The United Cigar Stores' hook-up was used all through the middle section of the town, and the guests of a home for the aged were made into a theatre party, especial attention being paid one old man 103 years old. You don't have to get them that old. Any home for the aged will do.

Housewives Mats

Now it is the special matinee for housewives that they may listen to "The Song of Life." It was worked by the Arcade Theatre, Paducah, Ky., and the advance work suggested that the hubbies stay home and keep house while the Mrs. saw the show and got the lowdown on the drudgery of her existence.

It helped business and probably later on will help business in the divorce court.

Picked Norma's Twin in Advance of Stunt

When John Daley planned to use a window ballyhoo on "The Eternal Flame" when it played the Orpheum Theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind., he figured that he could do more than just that. He had to use the girl selected, because he needed a trained dancer. That did not stop him from staging a resemblance contest, picking the predestined winner and then announcing that the winner would display herself in the window of a florist's shop.

This gave him a double stunt, and not only that, but it gave a much more powerful kick to the window idea.

That's the real idea of exploiting. Don't stop with the first thing that flashes into your head. Work up the stunt until you feel reasonably certain that you are getting out of it all you can possibly obtain.

Wall Paper Stunts for a Wall Flower

Some weeks ago we told how Eddie Collins, of the Rialto Theatre, Dennison, Texas, used wall paper for his throwaways on Goldwyn's "The Wallflower."

This encouraged Eddie to send in his lobby. It will not reproduce because the photographer did not gut under the canopy, but he used a strip of compoboard, covered with wall paper and with five actual chairs tied on. The center chair was occupied by a dummy and the card signs told that she was the wallflower. It obviated painting and gave a much better display. Eddie also covered his still frames with wall paper mats, and got a very attractive lobby piece from that, though this is less original than his minstrel first part design.

When it comes to exploitation, Eddie does not need much help.

Glad to Correct

Before he played "Manslaughter," C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial theatre, Columbia, S. C., stated over his signature that this was one of the two best pictures he had played since the first of the year.

The day after the opening he published a correction stating that it was the best picture of the year.

With two musical comedies, a minstrel show and "Foolish Wives" for opposition, Mr. Irvin did the biggest business of the year.

Max Is Better

Max Doolittle, the Minneapolis Paramounteer, has been close to a date with an undertaker through a serious attack of pneumonia, but Mrs. Doolittle writes that Max is now so much better that she is making him some new shirts. If you ever got a flash of Max in those shirts of his you will realize that he has something to live for.

Seriously, we are glad to be able to tell of his recovery, for Max is a fine fountain of new ideas.

A Color Trademark for "Eternal Flame"

Making red the color of "The Eternal Flame" the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, used it from curb to curtain. It put over the Norma Talmadge play to unusual success.

The newest idea is the use of red flannel for a drape for the under side of the marquise. Red flannel, in words, suggests the humble and unseen undergarments, but in fact, F. P. Schwie got a gorgeous effect at a smaller cost than for silk. All of the lobby and marquise lights were in red and a string of red lamps led down to the corner. Red mediums were used over locomotive headlights on the roof until the authorities interfered on the grounds that the lights were confusing to lake navigators, but the same objections were not offered to two spots across the street, which were trained on the front, and red railroad flares were used for the roof.

Twenty-one jewelry stores co-operated in a display of Norma pearls, and other hook-ups were with a hairdresser, a druggist, a music store and one of the big department stores gave a corner window.

Inside the house the lights were also red and the color scheme was also carried out in the prologue.

Color campaigns are not new, but this is one of the most complete to be recorded, and one of the most effective. It also demonstrates that a color does not have to be named in the title to get the idea over.

Prize Offer Made for Home Painting

First National franchise holders certainly do seem to love the kiddies. They ought to. The kid parade is as much a First National trade-mark as the official emblem. It is to be expected with Coogan and Barry and Chaplin all on the First National list, but now and then some new angle is injected into the inevitable kiddie parade.

The newest comes from York, Pa., where prizes were offered for the best home-made signs for "Penrod." The kids had to read the advertising and then write their own copy. Some of it was pretty rich and all of it was good.

The Orpheum paraded the youngsters through the streets for nearly an hour before they let them into the show. All the kids got in free if they had carried a banner and the best of the signs drew down additional rewards.

It's a good one timer. Give it a run some time.

Chased His Buyers

When school opened, W. K. Richards, of the New Royal Theatre, Findlay, O., changed his advertising from the amusement column to the pages on which were run the advertisements of the stores offering school supplies, on the general proposition that he could advertise his wares better where the mothers and children were sure to see it.

This might be a good stunt to work around Christmas time. Get your ads on the store pages and, if possible, work some scheme to get right in the store advertising through a hook-up.

Richards, who is a First National franchise holder, worked the stunt for "Pay Day," and put that over better than he thought he could.

Coming Down

Generally Stanley Newton Chambers, of the Miller Theatre, Wichita, is a high flyer when it comes to advertising, but in his exploitation for "Skin Deep" he came down a bit.

There was an aerial circus in town, and he contracted with the stunster to do his stuff while the plane was being flown less than 300 feet above the ground, because the bottom of the plane was lettered for his attraction. The stunt man was dressed in a convict suit to hook to the play. The stunt cost $55 and was run three days.

The last day was Sunday, when 18,000 persons saw the flying. The picture opened Monday. You can guess the rest. It surely did.

Pedestrian Book Was Given a Ride

The book perambulator used on "The Masquerader" in Pasadena was shipped to Denver, for use at the Colorado Theatre.

Something happened to the wheels during shipment, and the book would not perambulate, so they put it on an auto truck and gave it a ride about town, covering more ground than the one-man power could compass, and getting much the same effect. A little thing like sore feet was not permitted to discourage the management. There were lots of other wheels handy though it should have been a simple matter to obtain a set of truck castors.

Let Trade Papers Write His Big Ads

Roy Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., pulled something really new for a Big Month advertisement. It was anniversary month at the Noble and Smart had been given the pick of the peaches for his program for the month. He knew they were good, so he sat down and wrote the editors of the trade and fan publications asking them what they thought of his bill.

Most of them responded, and Smart played up their endorsements with a bold "Here's what men who've seen them say!"

New York press notices carry little conviction, but the personal testimony of men supposed to be steeped in pictures carried real weight, and Smart turned out the most convincing advertisement the South has ever read. It was an achievement to be proud of, so he took three columns down the page and put it over in a neat typographical display that matched the subject matter.

He had something real to work with, for we do not believe that he could have done much better in his selection. They were all sure fires and worth the fuss he made about them.

Interested 2,000

Because Milton Sills' make-up in the early part of "Skin Deep" is thoroughly disguising, W. K. Hollander, of Balban and Katz, Chicago, used the picture as the basis of a guessing scheme in which the honor of naming the player correctly was the only prize. This was done before the advertising for "Skin Deep" was run, and some 2,000 replies were received, of which about 300 correctly named the player.

It just goes to show that you do not always have to have a prize to make a contest interesting. Of course, sometimes you do, but this will help to vary the schemes and gives a new angle.

Boy Scouts Again

Stealing First National's stuff, the Tower theatre, St. Paul, used a parade of Boy Scouts to put over "Remembrance," the band giving a half hour concert in front of the house at the end of the parade.

Cards showing a very red rose were also used, and though we believe that Shakespeare has Ophelia say that it is pansies for remembrance, but you can't print pansies in one color, and you can get roses. They also used the telephone card and a form letter; the latter somewhat weakened because the filling in was done on a pica type machine while the letter was printed in the smaller elite; very clearly showing it to be a fill in. It is possible to duplicate the face of any machine in type, and an elite could have been rented for this job at a cost small enough to make it worth while.

Color Scheme Good for "Blood and Sand"

Red and yellow lobbies on "Blood and Sand" have been the rule, but Arthur Swanke, of the Mission and Rialto theatres, El Dorado, Ark., changed from the conventional stripes to a checkerboard effect in the same colors and got an ever better flash. He carried the color scheme to his lighting, both in the lobby and the house, and used colored bunting inside as well as out. As a result he played to the largest business in the history of the house for the opening and to only 81 persons less the second day of a two day run.

He used cutout letters in the same colors for star and title, but they sink into the background in the photograph and do not show as clearly as they did in the actual display, where they made a splendid flash. The effect of the bunting drapery back of the bannered front is also lost because red and yellow photograph so ineffectively.

Borrowed a Boat

As one of the angles of a big campaign on "Oathbound," the Province Theatre, Winnipeg, borrowed a model of one of the fleet of the Canadian Pacific Railway for a lobby display. These models are invariably attention getters, and are easier to come by than you might suppose. Try the steamship agencies even in inland cities and you may be able to arrange for the loan of a model.

The Province seems to specialize in window dressings in cigar and candy stores and used these tie-ups for two Fox pictures, working the same idea on "Arabian Love."

Got Mailing List

Because Jackie Coogan is now a member of the Junior Naval Reserves, the Olympia Theatre, Boston, hitched the young reservists to "Trouble" and offered the regulation uniform to those who presented books filled with names and addresses. They obtained the books from the theatre and got the names from people they encountered on the street; a new twist to the personal notification stunt in which passes are given children for personally notifying ten adults of the coming of a strong feature. It gave the foundation for a live mailing list and is particularly good from this angle. In view of the reward, the books were ruled for a longer list of names, of course.

gives bigness to the entire layout, particularly when it is compared with the more conventional work of the other houses. It gets over the star names and title to the fullest, and gives the eight point the value of a ten. It requires good art work, for a crude sketch is worse than none at all, but where it can be well done, the line portrait often outweighs the half tone. You can blank off the name and still recognize the portrait, and the absence of black mass makes the enclosure as sunny as a greenhouse on a bright day. The Ohio usually does turn out good work, but this is one of its best efforts.

Ignores Plan Book for Poor Original

A. M. Botsford, of Paramount publicity, sends in a display from a Montreal paper for "Blood and Sand" at the Capitol Theatre, and offers in evidence a display of precisely the same size from the plan book. It is a fine argument for the press book ads. In an effort to achieve the unusual, the Capitol has committed a crime. It took stills and pasted them to a background, then lettered in the star and title, notched for a small type mortise and sent the thing to the engraver. You can tell the cuts from the background because the cuts are a little lighter. You can make out the title by reading slowly and carefully, but somehow you get the idea it's a poor picture because the advertising is so poor. Compare the work with that on the right, where there are clear whites, clean cut line drawings, a well displayed star and title and selling talk fully as good as that in the mortise. And this could have been had for the asking! The Capitol no doubt meant well, but you cannot get halftones against a black ground in newspaper work, and the management should have known that fact. It is an atrocious thing. We are not strong for the sketches of Lila Lee and Nita Naldi on the plan book drawing. Miss Naldi looks like a Japanese and Miss Lee is too good to be true, but these could have been routed out and house talk put in there, with the sketch of Valentino to put the idea over. At least, the Capitol did not have to incur extra expense to hide its advertising display.

new over on the story for he dismisses it with "the same old stuff" more politely told, trusting to the popularity of the star. The more interesting feature is the art work, which is very well done, save for the hand lettering, and perhaps here the hand lettering is better indicated than type. It is so large and clear that it has almost a type value and type would spoil the effect of the drawing, though when drawing is too good for type, too individual to be spoiled by metal letters, then it ceases to be a real aid to advertisement. This is an oddity rather than an advertisement, but it indicates a style of work which could be made very useful.

The Eastman was supposed to set the pace to all others from every angle, but the advertising department seems to have slipped badly. The kodak advertising is as good as any national advertising put out. Perhaps the press agent can get some ideas from that department. Wide Layout Helps to Sell "Nice People"

Generally the advertisement wider than it is long is better proportioned for real display. In the narrow space only the briefest title may be given proper playing up, and even then the lines which run from side to side form a series of checks where a little margin conveys the suggestion of spaciousness and easy reading. Six elevens seems to be a favorite space with the Temple Theatre, Toledo, and they have made very good use of it for "Nice People," though the title is crowded a little through the use of an over-heavy line for De Mille. Setting this in an eighteen point or the equivalent in a plainly drawn hand letter would have taken the strain off the main title and at the same time would have given a stronger display for the producer's name, since producer and title fight each other in their close proximity, and each loses. This is about the last thing an advertiser learns. He is always late in realizing that it is not the size of the line so much as its isolation which makes for display. The main cut seems to have come from the Paramount press book, and it is worked nicely into the space decided upon. We do not altogether like that reverse band for the players, because the combination of black ground and fancy lettering does not make for clearness. To hold them apart, a better device would have been black bands and the names in type against the white. This would still have given display value to the top line and would have made things a little easier for the title. The lower part of the display is better planned than the upper. The press book is followed for the selling talk and the signature is nicely placed. The Temple is fortunate in having an artist who knows the greater value of white space and who is not so conceited as to imagine that his own work must be better than that of a highly paid staff man. Thousands of dollars are wasted each year in the larger houses in a generally unavailing effort to show up the men employed by the production companies to aid the exhibitors. About once in a thousand times the local artist does produce something better for his town than the work of the more highly paid men in headquarters, but as a rule he weakens the display and often unsells the picture he is paid to put over. Managers seem to feel that they cannot give their artists an argument, and they tamely submit to being bulldozed by them where they would fire a press agent or a ticket seller who dared to argue. The Temple pencil wielder knows what he can do and what he cannot, and is sufficiently intelligent to accept aid when it is proffered. He is a rarity.

Hitting Up Halftone Gets Poor Effect

In the reproduction the effect of the portrait of Wallace Reid will be lost in this display from the Century Theatre, Baltimore. It is a three eights and evidently the artist has set in a half tone of Reid taken from a press book or fan magazine. The reproduction has not been well made and a checker effect is produced, due to lack of a careful matching of the stipples. Unless very skillfully done, the reproduction of a half tone by the half tone process will yield either this result or give a wave line. Either looks pretty poor. Evidently the artist does not read this department, or if he does, he has overlooked the comment on half tones. This looks as though it was an enlarged reproduction. If this is the case, a 120 half tone, reproduced in line to double the size would have yielded a 60 screen half tone that would be the same as the regulation newspaper half tone. He would have gotten precisely what he was after, and at about half the cost, since usually half tone is double the line cost. More than that, he would have avoided the checkered effect which suggests that Wally is badly freckled. Even reproduction in the same size through the line process will give a better effect. If you can't get a photograph to work from, use the line process and get the best you can. Just to the left of the "Paramount Picture" circle is a line to the effect that the scenarist is a graduate of a local school. The lines are not played up, and might well have gone into the space now devoted to the prologue. There is also a loss of value on the selling lines closer to the top, which are set in unleaded six point. Even leading out would have helped, but it would have been better still to have set in eight point, even at the cost of shooting the line just above in order to make room. Then this line could have been stretched across the space, top or bottom by pulling in Reid's head a little. The display is well placed and the banks nicely disposed, though too small.

Switched An Ad. Idea For a Better Display

One of the cheering things of the week has been the receipt from Los Angeles of an engraver's proof for the California advertisement and a newspaper clipping entirely different. It was for the second week of Remembrance and Hubbard Robinson, the artist, and Tom Reed, the agent, had prepared a layout in Robinson's new style, which recognizes the fact that Reed needs some space for his display. It was just the house signature with a lettered "second big week," the title and the line sketch of Pop and the kiddie. It would have been a good display, with plenty of room for the type. It would have been better than the generality of Los Angeles ads. But Chaplin came to see the play and liked it and said so. Reed shot the plate into the melting pot and wrote out this display. It was worth all the pictures

THE REVISED ANNOUNCEMENT

Robinson could draw between now and the Fourth of July and the script was so legible that it had almost the full value of the type and the added attraction of the unusual. Once the reader caught the name of Chaplin, his attention was arrested and he read through the brief announcement, and he felt that if Chaplin liked it, it followed that he would—since he liked Chaplin. It paid to junk the carefully prepared plate, but it must have shocked the other Los Angeles advertisers, who seem to feel that they are headed straight for the inferno if they do not kill every fractional square inch of white space with floppy drawing. They can do it—even in Los Angeles. Perhaps some advertising Billy Sunday has hit the town—or perhaps it is merely that Robinson and Reed have seen the light and are following down the path. At any rate it is pleasant to find a Los Angeles advertiser with advertising sense. In time he will lead the other houses into line. Meanwhile he is getting the cream of the publicity without having to pay extra money for it.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. We went the limit on this picture; enlarged our orchestra and tacked a dime on to regular admission; gave it the same presentation we did with "Way Down East." Advertised with window cards, liberal newspaper space, slides, billboards, special banner in front of theatre and a dozen kids carrying signs around town for a couple of days before opening. In face of strong competition it was a cleanup and pronounced by patrons to be best show in a year. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: capacity. Big Ben Theatre, Ilion, New York.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. Will please the masses. Five reels of comedy with no padding. Use it as your feature and run short drama and either a news reel or scenic with it. Patronage: neighborhood. Admission: twenty-two cents. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

F. B. O.

GLORY OF CLEMENTINA. Candidly, this is the biggest piece of cheese anybody ever passed over on their gullible and unsuspecting public If you fellows in the sticks want something they will walk out on—even on a Sunday night—this's that! Advertising: twenty-four, ones, 11x14s, etc. Patronage: best small town. Attendance: Sunday night. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. Fine picture but not a knockout, although I heard nothing but good comments on same. The ending is worked out very cleverly. Advertising: 40 window cards, photos, slide, one sheets, two newspapers. Patronage. all classes. Attendance: good. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

First National

COURAGE. It don't take much courage to show yourself after this picture. If your people like drama, give them "Courage," for it will please almost any audience. Several comments: "Better than the 'Old Nest.'" Needs exploitation to get the crowd. Advertising: posters, slide and press. Patronage. small town. Attendance: fair. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

CURTAIN. Katherine MacDonald may be pretty, but she is no actress, in my opinion. It takes something besides looks to get people in your theatre. Advertising: two ones, three, set 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good, account of being Saturday. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre. Punta Gorda, Florida.

45 MINUTES FROM BROADWAY. Picture good but charged too much for it in proportion to small town house. Advertising: six, three, six ones. Attendance: fair. Vincent J. Votalats, Myrtle Hall, Thornton, Rhode Island.

GO AND GET IT. A big, sensational picture. A good program picture. Not one that the price could be raised on. Keep people guessing, but do not say much about it. Advertising: regular, sixes, threes and ones. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

HURRICANE'S GAL. A dandy picture with lots of action. Exhibition value too high for exhibitor to make money. Advertising: extra. Patronage: better class. Attendance: fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

INFIDEL. This picture, with Katherine MacDonald, enjoyed very good business and took well with the audiences. Patronage: general. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MAN-WOMAN-MARRIAGE. Fair picture. Advertise it if you book it. Audience did not kick much. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, heralds, handbills. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good, two nights. R. P. Cecil, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

MOLLY O'. Very good. Good business. Advertising: like a circus. Attendance: very good. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

NOMADS OF THE NORTH. One of the best Northwoods' pictures we have had. They don't ask a fortune for it, but it's there just the same. The bear and dog are great, and for a wonder they have good support. Go after business with it. Advertising. regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

ROSARY. Excellent picture. Should be shown in connection with Catholic church, and you can clean up. Advertising: special. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

SALVATION NELL. Very good attraction; well liked by those that saw same but drew poor crowd. Advertising: newspapers, ones, threes. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

SMILIN' THROUGH. It every sense of the word truly a wonderful picture; one that will please 100 per cent. Advertising possibilities splendid. By far Norma Talmadge's greatest picture. Second day's business as good as first. Advertising: newspapers, photos, slides, billboard, heralds. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SMILIN' THROUGH. Head and shoulders above any of the star's and director's previous efforts. Will stand behind anything that is said of it. We played it against "Foolish Wives," and our overflow was about all the other chap got. Advertising: ordinary. Patronage: small town. Attendance: all records broken. H. S. Mitchell, Opera House, Windsor, Nova Scotia, Canada.

SONG OF LIFE. A fine picture. Everyone who saw it well pleased. Many favorable comments. Good business. Advertising: lobby, newspapers, billboards. Patronage: general. Attendance. good. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

THUNDERBOLT. An awful good picture but nobody there to see it. I show just as good a picture on Wednesday as on Saturday, but the people won't turn out on a Wednesday night. Lost money. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York

TROUBLE. Jackie Coogan's best picture to date and it proved to be quite a puller as I went after it strong. I had to, in view of the rental paid. Show this if you can get it at a reasonable price. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful. Saranac Lake, New York.

Fox

CHILDREN OF THE NIGHT. Not much of a program picture, although it pleased some. Attendance: poor. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

HONOR FIRST. First of 1922-23 productions starring John Gilbert. Excellent program picture. Advertising: usual allotment of posters. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

IRON TO GOLD. This picture pleased 90 per cent. of my patrons. Dustin Farnum is well liked here. Advertising. two ones, three, set 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

JUST TONY. The best thing by 100 per cent. that Mix ever made. This you may truly call a special. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones. Fred J. Jones, Rialto Theatre, Nelson, Nebraska.

JUST TONY. Mix does not get the crowd that I used to get although this picture is good and quite different than his others; horse is the real star. Advertising: photos, slide, ones, two newspapers. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

LIGHT OF THE DESERT. Very good program picture. Advertising: big. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

LITTLE MISS SMILES. One of the best Fox pictures ever shown in this town. If your patrons like pathetic stuff go big on this one. All who saw it praised it highly. Advertising: regular, billboard and programs. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

MONTE CRISTO. Just a wonder picture! Pulling power immense. Satisfied patrons 100 per cent. Advertising: posters and paper. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

PLAY SQUARE. Five reels featuring Johnny Walker and Edna Murphy. Fairly good program picture with very little excitement. First time I've shown these stars, but they seemed to please about 75 per cent. of the audience. Photography poor in some places, good as a whole, though. Film in fair condition. Advertising: ones and threes. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

QUEEN OF SHEBA. This is a very excellent production, but fell flat for me. Not a small-town picture; too spectacular. Advertising: ones, threes, photos, newspaper. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. P. S. Nielsen, Rex Theatre, La Moure, North Dakota.

SHACKLES OF GOLD. William Farnum is a star of the first magnitude, but somehow the pictures Fox has given him are not suitable. Either put him on a horse and make it Western stuff or else jump to such material as "Tale of Two Cities," his masterpiece. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

SKY HIGH. This is a good Tom Mix picture with good stunts and some fine scenes of Grand Canyon. Pleased nearly all. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

TO A FINISH. First time we had Buck Jones in our theatre and, believe me, he surely made friends. He surely is good in Western picture. Advertising: same as ever. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

TRAILIN'. Same old stuff—Mix mixes 'em up for the audience. This gets off to a poor start, but regains "consciousness" in the last reel and a half. Eva Novak, costarring, does well. Advertising: threes, ones, 11x14s, slide, program. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

TRAILIN'. Just as good as Mix ever made. Will please Mix fans and others alike, and will stand all the advertising you care to give it. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

VIRGIN PARADISE. Not one complaint and over fifty personally congratulated us on this one. Book it, if you haven't already; advertise it as Pearl White's best work. A fight that lasts nearly a reel. Patronage: transient. Attendance: large, matinee and night. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Straight from the Shoulder means to be the dependable tip department in which you can voice your ideas on films you've run for the benefit of others, and where safe booking wisdom is to be found.

These things can only continue through unbroken faith between all of us.

The department has taken all contributors on faith, believing that only those honestly entitled to report would do so.

We have had this faith abused, and in turn have abused your faith in the absolute integrity of these reports — BUT NOT KNOWINGLY.

On the next page is a full explanation of a very sad occurrence. We don't want any more of these reports except from you folk who have the right to send them. No "imagined" reports desired. If we track down any in future something will happen STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER. VAN.

Goldwyn

ACE OF HEARTS. A real good story, pretty well done all the way. Lon Chaney puts over a wonderful part which only adds to his many triumphs as a great character actor. The story, while not any too pleasant, is interesting and convincing and is worthy of running. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. Ben L. Morris, Elk Grand Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE. A picture worth booking. Pleased all. A good comedy drama. Advertising: one sheets. Patronage: industrial. Attendance: good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

BRANDING IRON. Fine picture; pleased my audience. Immensely fine plot, well acted. Book it. Money getter. Advertising: two sixes, five ones, threes, photos, handbills. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fine. E. E. Stearns, Dew Tell Theatre, South Dayton, New York.

POVERTY OF RICHESS. A Reginald Barker production: fair picture for a high class audience. Part of our audience walked out on it. No one asked for their money back as we had a good comedy to help it over. Advertising: usual photos, newspaper, slides and weekly program. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: darn small. Big Ben Theatre, Ilion, New York.

OLD NEST. While neighboring towns were playing "Over the Hill," "Connecticut Yankee" and "Queen of Sheba" I showed this, paying a rental of about one-third of what I was quoted for the three mentioned, and drew one of my largest crowds. Such pictures as this are a credit to your programs, even if used a little late. Advertising: slides, posters and press. Patronage: general. Attendance: good, two nights. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

DESERT GOLD. Another Zane Grey knockout. A little old but did not cost a fortune to get it. Hodkinson sure treats you right. Advertising: ones, threes and six. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. John Cleva, Jr., Glenalum Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

Metro

BROADWAY ROSE. A real picture. Better than "Fascination." Book this one and boost it. Advertising: twenty-fours, sixes, threes, ones, photos. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

FOUR HORSEMEN. Elaborate offering. If you can get it reasonable enough, play it. Valentino at his best. Advertising: frames. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

KISSES. Pleasing comedy. The star, Alice Lake, is becoming a great favorite with our audiences. Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

PEACOCK ALLEY. Advertising alone will get them in on this one; the picture will make them stay. Business good, two days' run. Picture pleased 100 per cent. Advertising: heralds, billboard, slides, photos. Patronage. neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

PRISONER OF ZENDA. A very good production, but not as good as "Four Horsemen." A good bet for a first class audience. Advertising: all kinds. Patronage: first class. Attendance: good. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

RIGHT THAT FAILED. If I hadn't showed them "Leather Pushers" or Mayo in "Afraid to Fight" they might have thought they were seeing something. If your people don't know Lytell—lay off, for he means nothing out in the tall grass. Patronage: best small town. Attendance: fair. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. A good, thrilling picture. All that could be wished for. Advertising: good. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. A star combination that packed the house. Well played and much appreciated. Advertising. newspaper, cards, posters and attractive lobby. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. Although not a great picture, it will get the money due to the stars, Gloria Swanson and Valentino. Advertising: usual. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. J. A. Emory, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

BLOOD AND SAND. Fine in every particular. Valentino gained in popularity on this one. Even the men praised him. The picture did not do what we expected it to do in face of very heavy advertising; don't know why. Some were afraid of the picture, morally, having tried to secure the book ahead of time from the library, only to find that they considered it a little too lurid for our folks. Patronage: rural town. Attendance: fair only. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

CITY OF SILENT MEN. Very good and gave very good satisfaction. Patrons generally pleased. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. A. L. Hepp, Idyl Hour Theatre, Greeley, Nebraska.

EYES OF THE MUMMY. A man, to my mind, is a rummy who will play "Eyes of the Mummy.' While this one is better than any other of her (Pola Negri's) efforts, if they could be called efforts, it is anything but good. When we have her we try to keep the fact a profound secret. Only one man in this town cares for her and we are looking up his record. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

FOOL'S PARADISE. In all my experience I have never shown a picture that has the universal appeal that this picture has. It will satisfy the most critical "once-in-a-while." Story, cast, direction, photography 100 per cent. The third (last) night brought people into my theatre who had never been in the house. Patronage: small town. Attendance. good. Emmett Nolan, Star Theatre, Yates Center, Kansas.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. This picture did not draw at all. At a loss to know why. It is clever, has a star who is usually good, but the production has nothing outstanding to advertise or to commend it. Just an average program offering with a good star. Will probably go much better in the larger towns but would not consider it again at any price for this house. Advertising, two newspapers, lobby. Patronage, rural town. Attendance, very poor. Arthur B. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

OVER THE BORDER. Betty Compson, Tom Moore—outdoor picture. Northwest Mounted story, plenty of snow scenes. Good program picture for short run at regular admission; not strong enough to advance prices on. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

PAYING THE PIPER. A wonderful production with a good moral and lesson for those who make life a carnival of pleasure; for, sooner or later, they must pay the piper. Advertising, one three, two ones, and slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, very good. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, North Carolina.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM. Nothing extra. Would take where 90 per cent. children attend, in connection with school. Print had numerous misframes. Price just $7.50 too high. Patronage, regular. Attendance, fair. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

RIGHT TO LOVE. Mae Murray star in seven reels of good photography, and good story. Took well with my patrons. Advertising, bills, sheets, photos. Patronage, town. Attendance, fair. H. C. Waffle, Lyric Theatre, McIntosh, South Dakota.

SATURDAY NIGHT. Could not see anything very big but the price. But they will tell you it's a Paramount and they seem to get by with this. Would hint small town exhibitors lay off this unless they get it at right price. Sam Brooks, Liberty Theatre, Hailey, Idaho.

SATURDAY NIGHT. A very well produced film play that pleased about 70 per cent. This can be played at a fairly moderate rental but from my experience it won't stand up under a high rental exhibit. Advertising, heralds, ones and threes. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Mr. Clouse Retracts

Mr. Harold S. Clouse, St. Paul, Minnesota, began sending reports to this department last December. Being sent on our regular blanks, we took them to be proper material and have been publishing them. They purported to come from Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota. VITAGRAPH, INC., Minneapolis exchange, took exception to a report on their "Wild Irish Rose," as they had not booked this film to the theatre mentioned, and Mr. Clatworthy was kind enough to run down facts. The result was the signed statement which we publish, apologizing to exhibitors and all companies affected by these reports. Mr. Clouse's statement follows:

"To Whom It May Concern: I, Harold S. Clouse, who has reported various times in the Moving Picture World, a New York publication, in the Straight from the Shoulder reports on various motion picture productions, and having said in these reports that I showed such productions in the Hollywood Theatre at Highwood, Minnesota, and among these reports there having been one in the issue of July 29 of the Moving Picture World, as follows: 'MY WILD IRISH ROSE.' Did pretty good on this. Think it will please the majority. I will not boost this as excellent, though. Advertising: newspaper. Patronage: general. Attendance: fairly good.'

"I do hereby assert and declare that I have never operated any motion picture in any such town as Highwood, Minnesota, nor in any other point, city or district, in the State of Minnesota or any other State.

"The report as reprinted above on 'MY WILD IRISH ROSE' is absolutely false and was submitted by me to the Moving Picture World without any basis of fact whatsoever.

"I hereby retract said report and apologize most humbly to all those concerned. Yours very truly, Harold S. Clouse. Witnesses: W. E. Montgomery, A. S. Clatworthy.

To Mr. Clatworthy we all owe thanks for running down this matter. We want no more reports except from those entitled to give them. You will please discount the reports described above. We are sorry.

THREE WORD BRAND. Best Hart picture. Everyone pleased. Unlike most Hart pictures, this one had a plot. Advertising: ones, sixes, photos, news, dodgers, etc. Patronage: country town. Attendance: good. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

WORLD'S CHAMPION. Fair picture: fair drawing power but not a special. Advertising: one, three, six, photos, throwaways. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE? This one pleased them all. The print was in excellent condition. Meighan gains in popularity here with every picture in which he stars. Advertising: three sheets. Patronage: rural. Attendance. poor. D. B. Rankin, Cooperative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

Pathe

WHEN WE WERE TWENTY-ONE. A good one in every way. Advertising: one sheets. Patronage: industrials. Attendance: good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

Selznick

REPORTED MISSING. If it hurts your patrons to laugh, advise them to stay away. The best comedy of the season. Wonderful climax. Good photography. Advertising: goggles, ones, threes, sixes, 11x14, 22x28. Patronage: everybody. Attendance: good for a rainy day. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

REPORTED MISSING. Sold to me as a special and it flopped terribly in my town. Just a good program picture and it did not pull for me. Advertising: newspaper, lobby, window cards, heralds, street advertising. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

SHADOWS OF THE SEA. Hardly up to the standard of former Conway Tearle pictures, but passable. What you might call ordinary. Tearle's a good drawing card for me. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

United Artists

TAILOR MADE MAN. Best Ray picture and one of the very best of the year. This picture will please the very highest class audience 100 per cent. Advertising: doubled. Patronage: average. Attendance: average. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

THREE MUSKETEERS. A wonderful picture: went over big here. Played it to one of the best crowds ever in my house. Doug gives them their money's worth, at any price. I played it on percentage and made money. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones, window cards, slide, newspapers, heralds, mailing list. Patronage: small town. Attendance: the whole town. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

Universal

CONFLICT. Brings 'em right out of their seats. Well liked by everyone. Spectacular; entertaining. Advertising: lobby. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. L. A. Hoover, Allens Theatre, Farmington, New Mexico.

THE STORM. One of Universal's very good pictures. Wonderful fire and storm scenes, well photographed. Drew a capacity business. Advertising: heralds, newspaper, window cards, lobby. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. William Brill, Rialto Theatre, Akron, Ohio.

THE STORM. Very fine but a little too long. Barker's direction, House Peter's acting, excellent. Contains some good stuff. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

TOP OF THE MORNING. Breezy little picture, but no business. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

TRIMMED. An average Gibson that pleased a fair crowd. Advertising: six and ones. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. S. S. Pace, Jettie Theatre, Texline, Texas.

TRIMMED. This, with Hoot Gibson, is a peach of a picture. Lots of good comedy in it. You can play this one up and not be afraid of it. Will please 100 per cent. Business good first day, fell off second day. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Vitagraph

HEART OF MARYLAND. Everybody praised this picture. It was a pleasure to hear the comments. Advertising: newspaper, program, posters. Patronage: family. Attendance: very good. Arthur G. Pearson, Auditorium Theatre, Melrose, Massachusetts.

Comedies

THE BOAT (First National). Like all Keaton comedies it is good and will please any audience. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

NON-STOP KID (Pathe). A good Lloyd reissue, received quite a few laughs. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SOOTHING SYRUP (Scattergood). Instead of calling these "Scattergood" comedies they should have been called "Scatterbrain." Only exhibitors with pear shaped heads and no chins would book such stuff. K. H. Underwood, Rivola Theatre, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

PAIR OF KINGS (Vitagraph). Can't say much for this comedy; for a Semon it's not up with his former comedies. The stuff he pulls off in this one is old, the same as he has been pulling off before. Semon better wake up. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Good Mid-Week

"Played 'ONE GLORIOUS DAY;' picture that will please, with EDUCATIONAL COMEDY and PATHE REVIEW; which I think made a splendid mid-week program." C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.
WHAT DID YOU PLAY THAT PULLED 'EM AND HELD 'EM?

Serials

ROBINSON CRUSOE (Universal). Just finished this and must say that it is the finest lot of twaddle I have seen for a long time. No wonder they gave prizes to put this over. After the second chapter it never hits the book again. Advertising: everything from soup to nuts. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

ROBINSON CRUSOE (Universal). One of best serials we ever ran by far, and kept them coming all the time. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

TARZAN OF APES AND ROMANCE OF TARZAN (First Natl). Got these very reasonable and made money. Good drawing power and pleased. The film, too old and in poor condition, however, passed. Could be reissued and would make good. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). Splendid serial. Four episodes used and gaining each week. I have watched Miss Roland since she made "The Red Circle" in 1913 and her work always pleases. "Timber Queen" has wonderful scenery: it is clean. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

State Rights

I AM THE LAW (Affil. Dist). Positively one of the best pictures we ever played from a box office standpoint and it pleased too. Cost a lot of money, but worth it. John D. Jones, Crystal Theatre, San Angelo, Texas.

PARTNERS OF THE SUNSET (Western Features). If there were more pictures like this made every house, no matter how select, could use Westerns. Here is one that is a credit to the industry for it has everything a picture should have. As a Western it's a distinct novelty and your people will like it. Mine did, and they took pains to tell me so. Advertising: slides, posters and press. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair (rain). Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

STREAM OF LIFE (Plymouth). A high priced picture well received by small crowd. Not a good puller. Advertising: three ones, three, heralds, photos. Patronage: local. Attendance: small. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Pink Gods

(Bebe Daniels—Paramount—7,062 feet)

M. P. W.—At the end the story works up to a climax that holds the full interest, but there are stretches before this is reached that seem somewhat too long drawn out and lacking action.

F. D.—Treats of a fairly unusual subject and may please some folks.

N.—It holds the interest—because you don't know what's coming.

T. R.—Is one of the most compelling photo-dramas that has recently been shown.

E. H.—A trifle long drawn out, especially in the obvious climax, but a well told story.

Face to Face

(Featured Cast — Playgoers Pictures—4,587 feet)

M. P. W.—It should appeal to a discriminating class of patrons.

E. H.—Sufficient matter to intrigue the mind to keep it focused on the screen from start to finish.

N.—It's rather meagre stuff with which to weave a five-reel story.

T. R.—Pleasingly produced and affords first rate entertainment for those who are interested in stories with a dash of mystery.

F. D.—An ordinary picture as far as its entertainment value is concerned and a poor one when compared with present day productions.

Little Wildcat

(Alice Calhoun—Vitagraph—5,000 feet)

M. P. W.—With Alice Calhoun, Vitagraph's picture, "Little Wildcat," seems assured of success. Without her, the appeal of this production is not so dependable, as the material is somewhat remiss in the quality of originality.

F. D.—The most prominent and outstanding feature is the marked improvement in the acting of the star.

N.—Its characterization is far more important than its plot.

T. R.—Admirers of Miss Calhoun will probably wish she had been given better material.

E. H.—"The Little Wildcat" starts out well, then sags in the middle and again picks up speed toward the end.

The Old Homestead

(James Cruze Production—Famous Players—

M. P. W.—A gripping, appealing drama. . . . One of the outstanding features of a season already rich in notable productions.

N.—When the list of the best pictures of 1922 is compiled, this magnificent production must needs be placed way up near the top.

E. H.—For a business picture, for a prestige picture, and for wholesale entertainment for everybody, the market affords no better buy if another as good.

F. D.—This is going to prove a real box-office attraction.

T. R.—There are tremendous advertising possibilities in this picture and, better yet, the film lives up to every one of them.

Do and Dare

(Tom Mix—Fox—4,744 feet)

M. P. W.—Thrills, beauty and fun splendidly combined in Fox Western with Tom Mix.

F. D.—There's one big disappointment due Tom Mix's admirers in "Do or Dare" when they find out that this picture isn't what it starts out to be.

N.—For two or three reels he is in there fighting and executing thrills in dare-devilish fashion. . . . Then the picture sags while he turns his attention to the comedy.

T. R.—Tom Mix proves his versatility and this production could be used to good advantage on a program as a "surprise" picture for Mix enthusiasts.

E. H.—Not the best of Mr. Mix's latest contributions to the screen.

The Snowshoe Trail

(Jane Novak and Roy Stewart—F. B. O.—5,382 feet)

M. P. W.—A great deal of suspense is involved which is bound to make it interesting to the average audience.

F. D.—Strictly an old school melodrama.

E. H.—Will hold its spectators' attention throughout the six reels.

N.—Though the material is not especially new, it has been well handled.

T. R.—Three reels are necessary for the author to reach the beginning of the love story, which it soon develops is the only line of continuous action.

The Valley of Silent Men

(Alma Rubens—Paramount—Cosmopolitan—6,491 feet)

M. P. W.—Stirring and effective melodrama.

F. D.—Fine mystery and great scenic background for Borzage's latest.

T. R.—A valuable box-office asset.

N.—With Hearst newspaper publicity, a popular author, a fine cast and a tried and true theme, what more can the exhibitor ask for?

E. H.—Scores most forcefully by sheer beauty of scenic background. . . . The attraction is substantial screen material.

"Shadows"

An Al Lichtman Special That Stands Out As Artistic Achievement of Rare Excellence

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Getting over such subtlety and delicacy as the entertainingly human plot on which this latest Preferred Pictures, Inc., production, "Shadows" requires, constitutes a task rarely undertaken by any producer; yet Tom Forman, with the financial and moral support of B. P. Schulberg, undertook it and accomplished the feat with such astonishingly wonderful results that should establish this super special as one of the truly few beautiful and magnificent pictures of the current season. Certainly it is an artistic achievement of rare excellence.

Artistry and box office requirements are not always synonymous, for the solely artistic offering usually develops itself into a single class attraction. Not so with "Shadows," however, for in a careful study of this brilliant offering, the keen showman—the exhibitor who is quick to grasp the possibilities of the certain elements that contribute in the making of a money-getting proposition—this production embraces certain features which, properly capitalized, should register it as a magnet of unusual power.

What the showman requires most of all in satisfying his audiences is what may be pardonably referred to as "meat"—that is, something on which to "cook" a campaign destined to so interpret the various phases of the picture in question that it will neither exaggerate nor misrepresent to the extent that the public enters the theatre expecting the superlatively impossible. With "Shadows" one can go the limit in promises of fine acting—notable characterizations that make impressively permanent showings that will not die out with the flitter of the last flicker; a lavish production reinforced with spectacularly realistic settings emphasized with thrillers that force you to take a firm grip on your seat, a story that will appeal mostly to the lover of the classics and interest those who delight in seeing the sensational and melodramatic.

The genius of the director is apparent throughout the entire picture. He undertook his difficult task with a sincerity that is seemingly felt as the story is cleverly unfolded. Such stories as "Shadows" are few and far between. They are admittedly "tough," but careful study with a consideration for the wants of no particular class, but those of the public in general, with a conglomeration of emotions that appeal with a unanimity proven by past experiment, with a utilization of common sense tactics that rendered even the most punctuated moments entertainingly and with a human interpretation of sequences that contribute materially to the smoothness of the picture, this production will stand out as something out of the ordinary—the type of picture they have hoped some producers would give them, because of the opportunities offered.

That the message so cleverly communicated gets over is a tribute to Tom Forman and substantiates the contention embodied in advance notices that Lon Chaney in the role of Yen Sin is seen at his best. Directorially, "Shadows" cannot miss. But as a study of human characters—the type of people met every day in the week in the quiet, but suspicious fishing hamlets along our eastern Coast—"Shadows" will make an especially strong appeal. Lon Chaney as "the heathen" assumes a role that tempts overacting; but he subdues this temptation to the extent that this Chinaman grips you with a human chain that is unbreakable. This role clinches the claim of friends of Chaney that he is the greatest character man on the screen, for his is as fine an example of realistic acting and makeup as this writer has seen reflected on the silver sheet.

The story, adapted from Wilbur Daniel Steele's famous story, "Ching, Ching, Chinaman," is so well told that the eighty-three minutes consumed in relating it cinematographically fly by unnoticed. It opens with a bang-off scene of a terrific storm at sea and concludes with a heart-ripping situation that brings tears from the watery optics. Interwoven is a love story that is as clean and sweet as the proud tulip so princely guarded in a civic centre. One distinction that cannot be taken away from this production is the fact that it is out of the ordinary in story value. Artistically, it is one of the truly great achievements of the motion picture industry.

The cast is a clever one in every particular. While Lon Chaney's work stands out conspicuously, one cannot overlook the splendid interpretation of the young minister by Harrison Ford nor the charm that Miss Marguerite De La Motte injects into the role of Sympathy Gibbs. John Sainpolis makes a "heavy" who is humanly true to life and not the hoakum, made-to-order "villyan" sort. Walter Long as Walter Gibbs has little to do, but he does that well. Buddy Messenger, Priscilla Bonner and Frances Raymond all satisfy.

Photographically, "Shadows" is consistent with the high class tone of the production in general. Its settings are typical of the locale of the story, while the lighting is flawless and particularly effective during the splendidly staged storm scene.

Directed by Tom Forman.
Photography by Harry Perry.
Length, 7,040 Feet.

The Story

Dan Gibbs, unofficial "admiral" of a fishing fleet, is lost in a storm. His death is accepted as a blessing for Sympathy, his wife, who is loved by Nate Snow, the village "big light." An aged Chinaman, Yen Sin, is rescued, but refuses to take part in the prayer for the departed souls. He settles in the village and sets up as a laundryman. About the same time, John Malden, a young minister, comes to town. He meets Sympathy and the two fall in love, and in due time are married. Malden is called away to a conference, during his absence a baby being born. However, his happiness is short lived, for he is horrified by receipt of a letter telling of the rescue of Dan Gibbs. In the letter containing this information the writer says he will "get out" if Malden will "loan him $500." John rushes home, confides in his friend, Nate, from whom he borrows the money. Yen Sin, calling for the laundry, overhears part of the discussion. Conscience stricken, Malden in time confesses, Nate standing by the minister. It is Yen Sin, however, who unwittingly precipitates a climax. He falls ill, sends for the minister, but it is Nate who comes first and he righteously calls upon the Chinaman to "repent and believe." Malden arrives and so does Sympathy with the baby. It is here the Chinese laundryman-philosopher turns the table and forces a startling confession from Nate.

"Oliver Twist"

Sol Lesser Presents Jackie Coogan in Effective Screen Version of Dickens' Well-Known Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Never has little Jackie Coogan given a more appealing performance than in his newest picture, "Oliver Twist," a First National release. He demonstrates that he is a versatile little actor, for his work is entirely different from his characterizations in his earlier productions like "The Kid" and "Peck's Bad Boy." Always wistful, in those productions he was mischievous and up to childish pranks, but in "Oliver Twist" there are none of these; he has a straight role, that of a very real, very lovable and infinitely pathetic little boy. He makes you feel that he is the kind of boy the great author, Charles Dickens, had in mind when he created the character, that of a little child, the innocent pawn of fate, buffeted about by cross-currents of intrigue actuated by unscrupulous schemers, but finally saved by his own innocence and the intervention of a more favorable turn of the wheel of destiny.

In adapting the story to the needs of the youthful star certain liberties have been taken with the novel. For instance, the production is made more effective by not attempting to show Oliver after he has "grown up," but by bringing about the explanations and happy ending when he is still a wee little boy. The spirit of the Dickens' story is well maintained throughout, the characters being faithfully drawn.

The picture is presented more in a narrative form, stress being laid on faithful character development and the straight forward picturization of the trials and tribulations and final happiness which came to Oliver, rather than in building up big punch scenes or melodramatic thrills; though the scene where Bill Sikes kills Nancy and later falls off a roof and hangs himself is highly dramatic. Director Lloyd deserves credit for the manner in which he has handled the production, in the sets, the selection of types and the preservation of the atmosphere of this novel which is one of the most widely read classics in literature.

Jackie Coogan is ideal as Oliver Twist, and shows that he is a sterling little actor. your heart will go out to him in the pathetic scenes; you will enjoy his imitation of Fagin and rejoice with him when he finds happiness. The supporting cast is excellent; Lon Chaney is fine as Fagin, though this role has been somewhat subordinated; his make-up and acting are exceptional. George Seigmann is fine as Bill Sikes and is the physical embodiment of the role; Gladys Brockwell is appealing as Nancy, and so on down the list, which includes Lionel Belmore, Lewis Sargent, Carl Stockdale and others, all eminently suited to their roles.

It is a production that should appeal to the large number of patrons to whom Jackie Coogan has endeared himself, and one which should also be welcomed by the multitude who know and love the Dickens novel. Sol Lesser has again demonstrated that he made no mistake in making a star of little Jackie Coogan.

The Story

The Earl of Leeford, estranged from his wife, leaves a will providing that a large portion of his estate is to go to a son by another woman providing he grows up without dishonor. This son, Oliver, is born and reared in a poor-house, where he is treated unkindly. Apprenticed to an undertaker, he does not fare much better. Escaping, the poor little chap walks to London. En route, he meets the Artful Dodger, who takes him to Fagin, who makes a specialty of teaching children to be pickpockets. Monks, Oliver's half brother, locates him and pays Fagin and Bill Sikes to make a criminal of him. Fate intervenes and Oliver falls into the hands of a kindly old gentleman, Mr. Brownlow. Fagin finds him again and Sikes takes him to help in burglarizing a house. Again fate intervenes, Oliver is shot but is cared for by kindly people and again taken to Brownlow. The heart of Sikes' wife, Nancy, goes out to poor little Oliver, and she gives Brownlow information which enables him to learn that Oliver is the son of his old friend. Sikes kills Nancy, Fagin is captured by the police and his gang broken up, Monks confesses, and all ends well for Oliver.

The Goldwyn production, "The Sin Flood," is a picture that is a credit to the screen. It deals with a powerful and absorbing theme, dealing with several men of various types and one woman, who are caught in a trap by a flood and believe they only have a few hours to live. Facing death they all reform and profess love and fellowship for each other. When the flood subsides and life starts again on its old plane, all except the young boy and the girl he has neglected revert to their old selfish method of living.

There is intense drama that holds your attention throughout, and there is wonderful character drawing. In addition, there is a very effective flood scene, with a bursting dam and water sweeping down the valley. It is a production that will make you think, and is one of which Goldwyn and Director Frank Lloyd may well be proud.

"Streets of New York"

Burton King's Directorial Hand Makes Old Story Stand Out as Good Arrow Attraction

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

"The Streets of New York" does no injustice to the melodrama of the same name that years ago, when the ten, twent' and thirts's thrived, did a land-office business. It is brought to the screen with all the thrills and hoakum that threw the gods of nigger heaven out of their seats yelling at the hero until hoarse, and hissing and booing the tall, lean villain until a breeze as if from the sea gripped the entire auditorium. The story on which this production is based, is not new to the present generation of theatregoers. But the directorial genius of Burton King brought it to a height where it can be ranked as good entertainment and an unusual series of cosmopolitan characters, each one of whom scores a distinct hit with the outstanding work being done by Leslie King, whose mastery in the characterization of a wholly disagreeably villainous role is so interestingly realistic and wholesome that he is easily a factor no exhibitor should overlook when exploiting this production.

That Burton King is a keen showman is evidenced by the manner in which he has put his picture together. For instance, that introduction, a sort of tour of New York, is something with which exhibitors can play; no matter where this picture is shown New York means something. There are those who look upon New York as a fairyland; there are those who view it skeptically and cynically, but, on the whole, it is the wonder city of the world in which everybody, the successful and unsuccessful, are interested. Burton King was appreciative of this fact and he starts his picture—cleverly so—with an interestingly descriptive visit through the better known and more romantic sections of the big burg.

Despite the antiquity of the theme, for it is one with which theatregoers—and we have in mind those who sat about us at the State Theatre in Jersey City, N. J., where the picture was reviewed—are so familiar that they jump at the correct solution several reels in advance of the end, "The Streets of New York" bubbles over with human interests, dwells on a topic that is dear to all classes—the struggles of a poverty-stricken mother. But aside from the directorial value of the production and the excellent work of Leslie King, the one big box office bet is the storm that closes the picture. In many respects this storm is better than that which Burton King produced for Houdini's "The Man From Beyond." For instance, that cyclonic scene where a wind shatters a shack to pieces, tossing it about ten feet in the air and into the rapids constitutes a thriller that actually throws you out of your seat. This stunt is artistically handled and staged with a realism that makes one forget the shortcomings of the story. And it is in the introduction of this sensational climax, so expertly produced by King, that will probably send your patrons out of the theatre boosting the picture in general.

Edward Earle as Paul Fairweather is good, as is also his leading woman, Barbara Castleton. Dorothy Mackaill, however, as Lucy is comically interesting and holds every scene wherein she appears. She does her best work in "The Streets of New York." Miss Kate Blanke as the mother—Mrs. Fairweather—is just as motherly and sympathetic as she can be. Anders Randolf as the banker is satisfactory, but despite the commendable portrayals of all these, the work of Leslie King, we repeat, stands out like a brilliant electric light in a dark cellar.

Directed by Burton King.
Length, Seven Reels.

The Story

Paul Fairweather, whose father had been robbed of $100,000 by Gideon Bloodgood, is crippled as the result of an accident for which Lucy Bloodgood is responsible. Badger, a crook, who knew of Bloodgood's misappropriation of the Fairweather money, runs across Paul, identifies him and uses him to get money from the banker. However, he gives Paul $1,000, enabling him to undergo an operation. Jealousy creeps into the plot when Badger learns of Paul's love for Lucy and a meeting is arranged in a shack near the falls. There in the hope that he would do away with Paul and Bloodgood, Badger discloses the robbery of years past, but the situation reverses and he loses out, with everything ending happily.

"The Man Who Saw Tomorrow"

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Color and romance are in great abundance in this Thomas Meighan feature. In its rapid shifting of scene and action, "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow" is more like a vaudeville entertainment than drama.

The construction is unusual. Owing to the character of the story which visualizes imaginary happenings, the scene flits back and forth from the present to the future and from one version of the hero's future to another. It plays upon the fancies of the spectators. Much of the action is entertaining and spectacular but disconnected. This fact, however, will not spoil the performance for the many fans who prefer highly colored romance to standardized drama, even if at times it does seem like a fairy tale.

Naturally in a vehicle of this type, the star's role is picturesque rather than dramatic. Thomas Meighan has a certain appeal no matter what he plays, and has the pleasing faculty of being interesting at all times. As Burke Hammond, explorer of the South Sea Islands, enchanted by the daughter of a contraband trader, but bound to the powers of New York society, he has an adventurous, versatile role. Leatrice Joy's enthusiasm is a charming contribution. Theodore Roberts, June Elvidge, Eva Novak and Albert Roscoe are also deserving of praise.

Popular appeal is heightened by the settings, a fleeting panorama of South Sea atmosphere, ship scenes and the conventional beauty of New York homes. The photography at times lacks that crystal perfection which makes a picture completely enjoyable.

He gets separated from her father and her, however, and is taken back on Lady Helen's yacht. Lady Helen has decided she wants to marry Burke, and Burke, who has political ambitions, is wavering. "Another Man's Shoes"

Universal Attraction Stars Herbert Rawlinson to Advantage in Double Role

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"Another Man's Shoes" is a feature of average interest, with a melodramatic story about the maneuvers of a Bolshevistic society. The treatment is humorous and thrilling by turns, with comedy as the dominating motive.

Herbert Rawlinson plays a double role and this feature of the performance is handled more convincingly than usual because there are so few double exposures. The interest is almost entirely concentrated in one of the characters. The fact that the two persons resemble each other so closely has more of a legitimate bearing upon the plot than usual and is not constantly thrust upon the spectator as a phenomenal exhibition.

Because his life is in danger, a man pays his cousin a huge sum of money to take his place for one month. The bargain is made without any reference to the net of foreign intrigue which surrounds him, and the complications resulting are amusing. A clever supporting cast includes Barbara Bedford, Joseph Swickard and Harry Carter. The star has a dashing role which he puts over to the admiration of his many friends.

The Story

Stuart Grange, a wealthy young business man in fear of assassination at the hands of a foreign secret society, induces a cousin, who bears a remarkable resemblance to him, to assume his identity. That same night the girl leader of the band climbs in through his bedroom window and attempts to shoot him. Granger's double wins over his would-be assassin and bit by bit learns what it is all about. But the death band is determined to kill him even though the girl leader says that he is her sweetheart. A month goes by and the real Granger returns to his mansion only to be trapped by the murderers and killed. The doubling cousin tells of his assumption of Granger's identity and the girl becomes his wife.

Wonderful little Jackie Coogan demonstrates in "Oliver Twist," a Sol Lesser production for First National, that he is a clever and versatile actor. The role is entirely different from those in his previous productions. He seems the very embodiment of Dickens' celebrated character, wistful, pathetic and appealing.

It is a production which should appeal to Jackie Coogan fans and to lovers of the works of Charles Dickens, for Director Frank Lloyd has caught the spirit of the original and produced a picture that is rich in excellent characterization and interpreted by an exceedingly fine cast who bring to life the familiar figures of this widely-read literary classic. It is a production which should be a big box-office success and is doing excellent business at the Strand, New York, during the current week and will also be the attraction there for the forthcoming week.—C. "Enter Madame"

Clara Kimball Young Feature for Metro Is a Clever and Subtle High-Class Comedy Drama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Clara Kimball Young's latest production for Metro, "Enter Madame," is an adaptation of a successful stage play of the past season. It is characterized by clever and unusually subtle comedy and concerns the domestic troubles of a wealthy man who is married to an exceedingly tempermental opera singer. The humor is finely brought out particularly in a scene where the wife invites her husband to bring to dinner the woman who has been chosen to succeed her, and by deft touches turns every situation to her own advantage, thus winning back her husband.

It is a production which will appeal more strongly to high class audiences as the humor is subtle and sophisticated. It is also a picture with which an appropriate musical accompaniment will help considerably in bringing out the "atmosphere" and spirit of the play. The main character, Madame, is one which appeals to you because of her cleverness rather than through sympathy for her.

Wallace Worsley has made a good job in bringing out the spirit of the play and the production is adequate in all respects. Clara Kimball Young is a good type for the tempermental Latin opera singer and does some of the best work of her career. Elliott Dexter is well cast as the husband. In fact all of the roles are well handled.

"The Town That Forgot God"

Strong Heart Interest and Tremendous Flood Scenes in Fox Picture Introducing Wonderful Boy Actor

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

There are two big points of box-office appeal in the Fox production "The Town That Forgot God," which has just opened for an indefinite engagement on Broadway. It is strong in heart interest and there are tremendously effective and spectacular flood scenes. Coupled with this is the unusual title which will cause discussion and the fact that the Fox forces vouch for its being a true story and not fiction.

Harry Millarde, who gave to the screen the wonderful "mother" story "Over the Hill," is also responsible for the direction of the picture. It is of the same general type, but instead of a mother it has for its hero a poor defenseless little boy who on the death of his mother is left to the mercy of the townspeople who are intensely wrapped up in self, narrow, "small" and stingy and who apparently know nothing of unselfishness, brotherly love or the finer things of life.

No footage has been wasted in getting down to the meat of the story, in introducing the vital characters, the romance of the boy's mother and his own early days are given only sufficient space to develop the character and atmosphere and bring out the contrast with what follows. From the time the little lad's trouble commences his hardships and greater mental sufferings are brought out in detail. It is intensely pathetic and will tug at the heart strings.

The picture teaches a lesson in simple faith and trust in a higher power. This point is stressed, the mother teaching her son that it was these virtues that were responsible for the glory of Washington and Lincoln. The development of the story leads to a situation in which, like Sodom and Gomorroh of Biblical days, the town is destroyed, because of its unrighteousness. The wickedness of the town is not brought out strongly, however, there is no crime, blasphemy, or intense wickedness shown, the only evidence being in the selfish treatment of the little boy.

The story leads up to a situation which in these matter-of-fact days many will be prone to question and which will not carry conviction to all despite the assurance that it is a true story. For the big scene, the storm and flood has the effect of making this a modern miracle picture. Apparently by divine intervention, the elements are loosed in all their fury just as the boy is to be turned over to the sheriff for a crime he did not commit; the storm ceases suddenly in answer to the boy's prayer for compassion on those who have persecuted him and the falling timbers leave the rafters forming a distinct cross which is slightly outlined in light.

Director Millarde has outdone himself in the flood and storm scenes. They are tremendously effective and in many respects the finest of the kind ever screened. Rain comes down in sheets, water rushes through the streets of the town, houses sway, household effects are swept away, parts of buildings fall, and the flood sweeps into the houses inundating them.

This picture serves to introduce a truly wonderful boy actor, Bunny Grauer. He appears to be a chap of about twelve and his performance is exceptionally fine. He scores throughout and the scene where he begs them not to sell his mother's chair is a very fine bit of emotional work. Excellent and effective also is the scene where he believes he sees the spirit of his dead mother. The entire cast is satisfactory; Warren Krech gives a fine performance as the boy's only friend and Jane Thomas is good as the boy's mother.

The Story

Eben, a carpenter, and Harry, a surveyor, both love Betty the school teacher. She accepts Harry and a son is born to them. Eben, crazed by grief, becomes mentally unbalanced and wanders away. Harry dies and Betty again teaches school. Jealous because her boy is brighter than the others and loves to study, the squire has her fired. Grief kills her, and none of the townspeople want to adopt the boy. The squire does so, however, when he learns that the furniture goes with the child. He is ill-treated not so much physically but mentally and made the victim of petty persecutions and selfishness which cause even more pain to his sensitive nature. Finally, wrongly accused of theft he is locked in a room by the squire. Then the terrific storm and flood comes. The boy escapes and finds refuge in a barn with Eben who has returned and befriended him. The town is destroyed but Eben and the boy wander to a happier place where faith and brotherly love reign. An epilogue, twenty-five years later, shows the boy as a successful business man, happily married, still guided by the principles he learned in youth and donating schools and churches to the town, now rebuilt, which treated him so cruelly in his childhood.

"Broad Daylight"

Universal Crook Drama Features the Splendid Performance of Lois Wilson.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Entertaining but frequently unconvincing material has been used here in composing a crook drama that does not follow the more familiar patterns. There are splendid moments of suspense and situations that keep one intensely interested.

Universal has fortified the picture's appeal by giving the featured role to Lois Wilson. It is a big opportunity for her—perhaps the best she has had—and she proves beautifully adequate in steering the picture into the class of the uncommon. As Nora Fay, daughter of a crook and wife of a ne'er-do-well, she faces a number of critical situations, and acts with spirit and unusual strength. Her performance gives the picture a certain substantial quality in addition to the appeal which her personal attractiveness makes.

"Broad Daylight" is a far-fetched title. A paragraph at the close of the picture attempts to explain its application to the story, but succeeds only in emphasizing the distance between the title and the actual trend of the action. Similarly insecure is the handling of some of the scenes of minor importance, but the dramatic punch is not lacking, and, because of some exceptionally well handled situations, the appeal of the production can be relied upon. Jack Mulhall is one of the pleasing contributors to the interest. The rest of the cast, too, is well chosen.

The Cast

Nora Fay.....Lois Wilson
Joel Morgan.....Jack Mulhall
Peter Fay.....Ralph Lewis
Detective Marks.....Wilton Taylor
The "Scarab".....Robert M. Walker

There is tremendous heart interest in "The Town That Forgot God," the newest Fox special which has just started an indefinite run on Broadway. Harry Millarde, who directed "Over the Hill," is also responsible for this production which tells the pathetic story of a little orphan boy who is ill-treated by selfish, narrow-minded persons in a small town. It is a story built on the theme of the power and ultimate reward of faith.

Not only is it a picture that will tug at the heart-strings, but has one of the most stupendous and thrilling storm and flood scenes ever seen on the screen, with water rushing through the streets, buildings swaying, and houses wrecked and inundated. It will stir the most hardened theatre-goer.—C. S. S.

The design is to make the father of the boy pay a huge sum to keep from getting undesirable publicity. After she has married him she discovers that he is not Randolph's son, but a friend. Furthermore she discovers that he is exceedingly likable. But a quarrel instigated by the Scarab separates them, and for three years she does not see him. When they meet it is in her own husband's home, where her father, just out of prison, has come to commit a robbery. The Scarab attempts to doublecross her father again and is killed. The police are summoned, Nora's husband enters, and the situation becomes dramatic. In the end her father dies, her own name is cleared, and an understanding between Nora and her husband is re-established.

"The Cowboy and the Lady"

Reviewed by C. W. McCarthy

Devotees of photoplays who enjoy stories of the West, with rough men and beautiful women playing the leading parts and with love and murder and such things constituting the theme, will have their desires satisfied in "The Cowboy and the Lady." In the first place, two popular screen players, Tom Moore and Mary Miles Minter, have the stellar roles. In the second place, the picture is based on a play by Clyde Fitch and therefore constructed with due care for suspense, thrills and a satisfactory ending.

Mary Miles Minter appears as a wife whose life is made cheerless by the derelictions of a no-account husband. The role of a tenderfoot ranch owner is played by Tom Moore, who proves again that he can dress, fight or make love with equal skill. There is a thrilling rescue from the waters of a mountain stream, a fight in which the versatile Moore soundly thrashes the bad man of the play, and added to all of this is a western ballroom scene, a murder, a courtroom scene and what nearly becomes a lynching. But in the end everyone is happy except the villain, which is, of course, as it should be.

"Beware of the Law"

Jawitz Pictures Presents Marjory Payne in Picture on Prohibition Theme

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Without approaching any unusual mark of distinction, "Beware of the Law" progresses in fairly entertaining style, has some appealing situations and shows discretion in the handling of the theme. It is another story about bootlegging, but this angle has not been chiefly emphasized. The human interest motive dominates. In this way the picture has avoided some of the trite methods of playing for thrills which are typical of the recent offerings on the subject of liquor smuggling. There are several effective comedy moments and now and then an original touch that livens the interest. The scene showing the automobile pitching over the cliff is managed with splendid realism.

Marjorie Payne, the star, and Ann Deering delineate the contrasting sisters with a quiet skill. One of them is the familiar self-sacrificing heroine, while the part of the yearning flapper gives more of an opportunity for characterization. The part which both play in the conflict between the traffic and the prohibition agent is the basis for the drama.

Unknown to Rose, her father is making daily visits to the rum-runners' secret storehouse. When they discover that much of their goods is missing, they determine to "get" him and dispose of him, as they have of several others in their way. McRae recovers from his wound in time to be of service in saving the girls' father, and Ann who has doublecrossed Jules, repents and goes back to him. McRae, of course, has fallen in love with Rose.

"Arabia"

Fox Production for Tom Mix a Fantastic Invention with Plenty of Action

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Action is abundant in this latest vehicle for Tom Mix. "Arabia" is a fantastic invention that pays tribute to a wild imagination rather than to an understanding of drama. It is distinctly representative of the star's recent offerings. It has color, speed and humor, but the story is lacking in realism. There are certain audiences which enjoy just the sort of relaxation which this picture affords and to them the lack of seriousness would be a point of appeal.

Desert scenes, sheik atmosphere and mock intrigue furnish the interest after one reel of tumult on a Western ranch. A freak of circumstances takes the hero to Arabia, where to help out a friend, he impersonates one of the rulers. The desert scenes, with the exception of one or two striking shots, are typical of what has recently been seen on the screen, and the action, although speedy, is somewhat obvious at times.

The riding is one of the best features. There are splendid horses and they have been handled skillfully so as to get the most dashing effect. Tom Mix does his most effective work in the latter scenes, and here the interiors and exteriors of the castle prove a spectacular background for his stunts.

The Cast

Billy Evans.....Tom Mix
Janice Terhune.....Claire Adams

The Story

Billy Evans is surprised one day by Ibrahim Bulamar, who arrives in wild haste at Billy's ranch. Ibrahim is fleeing from two detectives whom his father in Arabia have sent after him. He bargains with Billy to take his car, swap clothes and promises to adjust everything later after he has been secretly married to his own little girl from the Follies. The scheme lands Billy in no end of difficulties, takes him to Arabia where he meets the girl he loves and saves her from the Sultan. Ibrahim arrives in time to save both of them from a terrible fate.

Exploitation Angles: Most Mix pictures are easy to sell, This should be a cinch with Mix in Arabia in the present craze for Sheik pictures. It will be effective to treat the idea of Mix in a burnous in semi-kidding style to match the general idea of the production, but play it hard to get it over to the limit.

"The Broadway M adonna"

F. B. O. Release, a Highly Sophisticated Drama Rich in Audience Appeal

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"The Broadway Madonna" is rich in audience appeal. It is unusually attractive to the eye and has a story that gets a firm hold on the interest from the start. A charming new actress, Dorothy Revier, makes the scenes definitely alluring.

Action starts with a cabaret scene that is a masterpiece in its soft and brilliant lighting effects. The photographer and director have worked with an assured knowledge of what is appealing. Miss Revier's dance number is the stellar feature here, a graceful introduction to a picture with revelry and spectacle as one of its chief attractions.

The plot has to do with blackmailing in high society. A doctor with designs upon the bank-roll of a wealthy judge is secretly married to a beautiful woman whom he employs to win the judge's son, and then demand payment for keeping the affair out of the papers. On the night of the masked ball, the judge is murdered and this causes a strange turn in events.

Harry Revier's directing has brought out the full spectacular value of the big scenes. He seems to understand the relation between the emotional and pictorial arts and gets some unusually successful effects. The costume ball is one of the most distinguished accomplishments and Miss Revier's performance has been artistically handled. The ending is not as might be expected, and may not suit all that are sentimentally-inclined, but it is an entirely consistent one.

The Story

Doctor Kramer, secretly married to Vivian Collins, a favorite in a Broadway cabaret, forces her to take part in his blackmailing schemes. The latest of these victims is Tom Bradshaw, in love with Vivian and anxious to marry her. The Doctor knows that Bradshaw's father will object and buy off Vivian. His scheme is slow in working so he takes advantage of the chance to rob Bradshaw's safe on the night of a masked ball when he wears the same costume as Tom. Bradshaw finds him and in the struggle he kills Bradshaw. The son is blamed, but to shield him Kramer's wife says she is guilty and goes to prison. A girl detective who has been watching the Doctor's moves solves the riddle and he is convicted, while Tom falls in love with his new benefactress.

"The Purple Dawn"

Bessie Love Scores As Chinese Girl In Charles R. Seeling Feature

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

"The Purple Dawn" constitutes a feature that is well put together and with features that combine to furnish worth-while entertainment. However, it is Bessie Love's triumphant characterization of a beautiful Chinese girl that wins most attention. The story deals with the adventure of a young sailor who is unwittingly involved in a smuggling scheme that almost results in his undoing at the hands of the Tongmen.

It is Bessie Love's latest picture with the star taking advantage of every opportunity. While the ending is anything but happy for her, she is bound to add to her army of admirers, for she is sympathetic. However, a retake of the ending making it more to the liking of the feminine taste for happy conclusions will improve the picture considerably, although as it stands now it is artistic. However, in the humble opinion of the reviewer, the commercial value of the picture can be greatly improved with this slight and inexpensive alteration which certainly will not in any way mar the story. If anything, it should strengthen it all around.

The cast is a brilliant one with Edward Peil as the tong leader shining. Bert Sprotte as the sea captain, Priscilla Bonner, William Aldrich and the others all satisfy. The direction is good throughout. It is a good box office picture, which, when given a happy ending, should be good for showing at any house.

The Cast

The Chinese girl.....Bessie Love
Tong leader.....Edward Piel
Sea Captain.....Bert Sprotte
Bob.....William E. Aldrich
His sweetheart.....Priscilla Bonner

The Story

Bob, a young sailor, is unwittingly embroglioed in a smuggling scheme. His "booty" is stolen by a tong leader, a rival to the gang for which the stuff was smuggled. He is brutally beaten, but escapes and secures a position in a village store where he falls in love with a pretty country lass. Back in the city he left a Chinese girl who loves him. The tong chief locates Bob and he is brought back to the city, where he is severely beaten by the sea captain, who believes he has stolen the smuggled goods. The girl is kidnapped. Bob is threatened with death, but is saved by the Chinese girl, who brings Bob and his sweetheart together, while she, realizing the impossibility of her love, commits sulcide.

"Lonesome Corners"

A New Angle to an Old Plot Presented by Playgoers Featuring Edgar Jones

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Offering a somewhat new angle of story interest, "Lonesome Corners" concerns the solution of a social problem with the North woods for a setting. Fundamentally, the theme is old. It is the story of the society man who marries an uncultured girl of the country, but the author has undertaken a different means of adjusting the difficulties and here the chief interest lies.

Edgar Jones, director of the picture, plays the important role of the friend in need. Worried over the future happiness of the bridal couple he steals the young wife and carries her off to a secret place where for one year he gives her a strict schooling in how to be a lady. Then he returns her to the husband.

The picture depends almost entirely on novelty for its appeal. At times it seems too improbable to be generally accepted. By some mysterious means the husband, no matter where he is, receives monthly notes informing him of his wife's welfare. These notes are often amusing. The way of showing the passing of time, however, seems unconvincing with awkward breaks in the intervals. Edgar Jones gives the most impressive performance, and Edna May Sperl is a pretty type who should be appealing to many.

The Cast

Grant Hamilton.....Edgar Jones
Henry Warburton.....Henry Van Bausen
Nola.....Edna May Sperl

An Edgar Jones Prodnction.
Length, 4,622 feet.

The Story

Upon visiting Henry Warburton and his bride, Hamilton finds that Nola is too uneducated to please Henry. He foresees a serious clash and determines to use his wits in helping prevent it. He steals Nola one night and takes her to a secret cabin where with the aid of Henry's old governess teaches her the manners of a lady. Henry is enraged but is helpless. He receives monthly notes from Hamilton with mysterious messages about his wife's welfare. At the end of a year Hamilton returns Nola, the perfect lady, to her husband. She is so changed that Henry feels that he has lost something really worth while, but she soon proves that the year has only increased her charm, and that she has lost nothing.

"A 44-Calibre Mystery"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

The first of a series of Harry Carey Western re-issues. It was originally in three reels and has been cut down to two, with new sub-titles but retaining the same main title. It is a satisfactory short Western and the action has been speeded up in re-cutting. There is a good fight and an element of mystery in the murder of a deputy. Harry Carey as the sheriff finally solves the mystery after he discovers that the man has been killed with a 44-calibre pistol, while the man who thought he did the deed only has a 38-calibre pistol.—C. "The Spirit of '23"

(C. B. C.-Comedy—Two Reels)

This is one of the best of the Hallroom Boys comedies which are distributed on the state right market by C. B. C. It is snappy and filled with rapid-fire stuff which will get laughs. Particularly is this true when they meet a girl whose father is an amateur magician. They attend a seance and stay all night in the house, meetings with all sorts of comedy experiences with spooks, skeletons, etc. Finally they manage to escape only to be captured by a man with a court summons who has waited all night outside to catch them. Hallroom Boys fans will be highly pleased with this offering. In the first of the picture Percy pulls some of the stunt stuff at the top of a cliff, which is similar to his stunts in previous films, and which should register well.—C. S. S.

Pathe List for November 12 Includes Maloney and Pollard in Two-Reelers

A couple of two-reel productions of widely different appeal top the list of Pathe releases for week of November 12. They are "Hook, Line and Sinker," starring Snub Pollard, and "The Drifter," another of the Range Rider series of westerns starring Leo Maloney. The Pollard comedy gets a lot of fun out of a free-for-all fishing contest, with everybody, including the fish, working against the hero, who finally triumphs. The Leo Maloney offering presents the star as the down-and-out champion of a mother and daughter who are victimized by a crooked real estate dealer who is also an assayer of precious metals. He soons finds himself in the midst of spirited action and hand-to-hand encounters and in the end rehabilitates himself.

The serial, "Speed," starring Charles Hutchinson, reaches its fourth episode in which Lucy finds herself sinking in quicksands. "Speed," in seeking to rescue her, is imprisoned under a tree felled by a bolt of lightning.

The current Hal Roach comedy is "Washed Ashore," which shows Paul Parrott in a laughable adventure with the "South Sea Island Whooplesnips." A mutiny, a romance and several other interesting things happen to the hero.

"Bees in His Bonnet" is the Harold Lloyd reissue for the week, in which the star is master of ceremonies at a fashion show, with mannekins in curtained booths. Snub Pollard and Bebe Daniels nearly drive him crazy, but his chance for revenge comes.

"The Crowded Street," a pictorial based on William Cullen Bryant's poem, is a feature of Pathe Review 181, which contains several other interesting subjects.

One Century Comedy Stars Lee Moran While Another Has Dog and Monkey Cast

Century Film Company, releasing through Universal, announces that since the success of "Mutts," a dog comedy, exhibitors have been asking for another comedy of this kind; and in response Al Herman has produced "Just Dogs," with a cast composed exclusively of dogs, with the exception of little Joe, a monkey. Joe is leading man, Pal is an aerial policeman, Camisole is the Slicker, Peaches the father and Mary is the flapper.

The antics of these four-footed players are said to be unusually clever, warranting special exploitation and appropriate press sheets have been prepared by Universal. The story shows Pal as a hobo. Joe tries to waken him by performing tricks. He then cooks breakfast, milks a goat and catches a fish. They start out and Pal meets a flapper, whose wealthy father makes him an aerial policeman who saves the store from thugs. Pal marries the flapper, a black dog acting as minister.

Another attractive Century comedy is "American Plan," starring Lee Moran. The comedy and tragedy of life in a boarding house are travestied, Moran appearing as the landlady's pet. He uses a trick Ford which performs some unusual stunts, and, of course, the star meets with all kinds of humorous experiences.

The cast of this comedy includes Blanche Payson as the landlady and Betty May as Moran's sweetheart.

Educational Furnishes Snappy Cuts Suitable for Showman's Ad Lay-outs

An advance in the exploitation of short subjects is shown in the helps furnished by Educational Film Exchanges, on two-reel comedies of the new season's series.

Press sheets on all two-reel comedies, including the Christie Comedies, Hamilton Comedies and Mermaid Comedies, show comic sketches which are provided through the Educational exchanges in electrotype or mat form for use in local newspaper advertising.

These cuts are made without lettering, so that they can be kept as small as possible. Whatever the size or style of an exhibitor's advertising layout, one of these small cuts can be placed in it, and the exhibitor can have the printer set his announcement around the cut. Catch lines providing material for such announcements are shown on the same page of the press sheet.

Illustrated herewith are four of these cuts, prepared for the subjects named below.

New Snooky Films

John Rounan, owner of Snooky "The Humanzee," announces a new series of six two-reel comedies featuring this chimpanzee film favorite. Snooky will be ably supported being assisted by Tom and Jerry,, other well known monkey actors, and the entire zoo owned by John Rounan Productions, Inc.

The first production of the new series will be "A Jungle Romeo." In this Snooky will play nine different character parts. This film was produced by the Jungle Film Company. One of the important parts in this production will be taken by a lion.

Offers New Series of "Out of Inkwell"

The second series of Max Fleisher's single reel, "Out of the Inkwell" comedies, is announced for distribution on the state right market by M. J. Winkler, of 220 West Forty-second street, New York, who controls the rights for the United States and Canada. This series comprises thirteen comedies, and are declared to be unusually clever, humorous and entertaining. According to the New York Times: "In the field of animated comedies there has been nothing better than Fleisher's 'Out of the Inkwell' drawings."

These subjects will be released one each month and have been shown by such theatres as the Rivoli and Rialto, New York, and the entire Fox and Loew circuits.

A Comic Scene

Pathe News, in its current issue No. 86, pictures two popular national characters doing an impromptu comedy act upon the occasion of the luncheon given to General Pershing at New Orleans by the American Legion. The noted men whom the camera portrays in a comic situation are General Pershing and Judge Landis.

Directed by Smith

"The Dumb Waiters" is the title of the sixth of the new Hallroom Boys' Comedies, which has just been received at the New York offices of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for distribution to the state right market.

This comedy, which was directed by Noel Mason Smith, features Sid Smith and George Williams. According to Producer Harry Cohn, this comedy proved one of the most successful of the Hallrooms ever previewed on the Coast.

Estabrook Promoted

Howard Estabrook, who joined the Film Booking Offices of America this spring, has been placed in charge of sales promotion of a number of F. B. O. features and short subjects and has also been made manager of the newly formed Educational Entertainment Service.

Fox Offers An Attractive Autumn List of Al St. John and Sunshine Comedies

Among the attractive offerings of Fox Film Corporation for Fall release are two series of comedies, the Al St. John specials and several new Sunshine comedies, all of which are announced as exceptional laugh-getters.

The first four of the Al St. John comedies have been completed. The first one, "All Wet," has already been released and is being well received. In addition to many funny gags, it also has a real story and is interspersed with thrills. The second is "The City Chap." It is described as a distinct novelty for St. John, who discards his usual portrayal of a bucolic youth and appears as a city chap; it is a combination of slap-stick and satire.

"Out of Place" is the third one, and is set for November 19 release, in which the star appears among the chickens of a cabaret, instead of a farm, and demonstrates that he is a good dancer. No release date has been set for the fourth, "False Alarm," which will probably reach exhibitors about January 1.

The series of Sunshine comedies for release during the next six months includes "The Haunted House," October 29; "The Ranch Romeo," November 12; "Cupid's Elephant," November 26; "The Fresh Heir," December 10; "A Poor Fish," December 24, and a comedy yet unnamed for January 7th release.

It is claimed that these comedies top anything the Fox Company has made in the versatility of the subjects, productions and stories with genuine entertainment and laughs. Beside the old favorite there are also many new faces in the casts. Fox Sunshine comedies have proven popular not only throughout the United States but in foreign countries as well.

"Hodge Podge"

(Educational—Novelty—One Reel)

This latest addition to Educational's program is well named and a sub-title "Some Sense and Some Nonsense" correctly described in the first two issues which were shown for review. If you are looking for a real novelty, something entirely different from anything you have shown, we can recommend these. There is such an unusual combination of material that it is hard to describe the contents, but each consists of unusual scenics which are highly entertaining and instructive, humorous animated cartoon work, clever trick photography.

The first issue shows a combination of trick photography and cartoon work, the difficulty of a cameraman in filming Niagara, then follows a truly beautiful scenic of Niagara Falls in winter with the surrounding scenery coated with ice. Another section cleverly satarized the making of an automobile; this is animated cartoon work.

The second issue starts with a novel combination of silhouette cartoon work and motion pictures and shows winter sports in Switzerland. Then there is a section of titled film depicting a news reel which has some unique camera work. Another section is a burlesque of a news reel done with animated cartoons. There is also an interesting motion picture section showing how sea elephants are captured and shipped to the zoos. The reel ends with a clever and humorous cartoon section which is a burlesque on military maneuvers which will get many laughs. Altogether, these two issues are highly enjoyable.—C. S. S.

"A Model Messenger"

(Universal-Comedy—One Reel)

In this number of the serial of single reel comedies starring Lewis Sargent he is commissioned to deliver a life-size model of a lady and thinking to make the boys envious he goes joy riding where they can see him. Of course he gets in bad with his girl and also with the boss; he has to work that night as a punishment and gets into more trouble when the girl finds him helping another girl to elope, but all is finally straightened out satisfactorily. There is considerable good humor in this reel and it should prove particularly pleasing to the children. —C. S. S.

"The Drifter"

Pathe Western—Two Reels

This latest of the Leo Maloney series is up to the standard of the others. In other words, it is exceptionally good entertainment in compact form. "The Drifter" is an adventurer who suddenly discovers gold on his claim, and in having it assayed, comes across a crooked land shark who victimizes widows and orphans in his dealings. The plot gives the hero a chance for chivalrous action and now and then a bit of effective comedy. There is a clever twist at the end where the land shark meets the boomerang of his own misdeeds.—M. "The Fire Fighter"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

Bootlegging and the village fire department are resources for some excellent comedy in this latest of the Pop Tuttle series. There is almost inexhaustible amusement with everything from a chuckle to a roar. Although the small town fire department has been burlesqued countless times on the screen, there is so much novelty in this, and it is so well done, that it is still rich in entertainment value. Nosey Nichols, the official bootlegger, discovers that his still is on fire. The delays before Pop Tuttle and his fire squad, headed by Tillie, the strong woman, finally get to the scene of need, provoke a great deal of irresistible comedy.—M. K.

"Sun Maid" Girl Now with Mermaid

Violet Oliver, known as the "Sun Maid" girl of California, will henceforth be known as the Mermaid girl, as she makes her screen debut in the Mermaid comedy, "High Power," which Jack White has completed for Educational.

Miss Oliver is one of the most photographed girls in the world. Selected by the raisin growers of California as the prettiest and most typical girl she has visited every state but one and in important cities was the subject of photographic contests held by leading newspapers, prizes being offered for the best photographs of her. Her likeness appears on every package of "Sun Maid" raisins, and her face is known all over the world.

"Mud and Sand"

(Metro—Comedy—2,500 Feet)

Here is a crackerjack comedy that should please almost every audience. It is a burlesque on a highly successful feature "Blood and Sand" and those who have seen that feature will enjoy it immensely because of the clever manner in which the scenes, sets and situations have been handled. It is a true burlesque and the director deserves credit for the remarkable fidelity with which he has followed the original productions, twisting the principal scenes with good comedy effect.

The comedy is broad with considerable knock-about stuff and those who have not seen the feature should enjoy it on its own merit, for it contains many hearty laughs and a lot of bits that will keep you chuckling. Stan Laurel, the star, does excellent work throughout as Rhubarb Vaselino, the toreador, whose experience as a bull fighter furnishes the theme for the picture. The remainder of the cast is entirely satisfactory. It is a Metro production.—C. S. S.

"The Haunted House"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this, Fox has an ingenious comedy that keeps up a rapid pace of successful slapstick. It shows a versatile imagination, and even if all the efforts are not distinguished, it will be generally popular because of the constant variety of action. A deserted hotel is re-populated by an enterprising couple and better times are in sight until the manufacture of spooks start. This is Desparate Dan's method of scaring the guests so that he can make a big haul. Miss Van Pyre, an attractive lady in black, adds a decorative touch to the scenes of skirmish. The comedy is a Sunshine and provides good entertainment.—M. K.

"Hook, Line and Sinker"

Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels

There is a wealth of good comedy material in this Snub Pollard subject, and it has been utilized with full appreciation. It has enough laughs to make it well worth while on any program. The well-known trying adventure of waiting for the fish to bite has been burlesqued to the farthest degree, and all the bad luck that besets the hopeful fisherman in this case proves amazingly funny. All kinds of fish, human and otherwise, conspire to get him into a state of emotional upheaval. But in spite of the powers against him, he comes off triumphant, winning public adulation and the first prize.—M. K.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Apprentice and Union

I have often been astonished that up to this time unions have taken such slight interest in a matter of paramount importance to them, no matter how viewed, viz: the apprenticing of projectionists.

I have hopes of getting at least one real apprenticeship law passed in the not distant future. I became deeply interested in clearing up the situation prevailing in a certain state last summer. After conferences with state officials I submitted a draft of suggested laws and rules, most of which the said officials approved after some time consumed in study of them. The matter is now in process of working out.

It has resolved itself largely into a question of what can be legitimately handled through "rules" promulgated by the Department of State Police, and what can be gotten through a Legislature composed of politicians, who know little or nothing about such matters, and perhaps care less, not realizing the damage which may be done through incompetency in a matter like the reproduction of motion pictures, upon which such a very large percentage of the people of today depend for their theatrical entertainment.

I have suggested a real apprenticeship, although I only dared suggest a one-year term, whereas it should have been two. I have proposed that no license shall be issued to project pictures before paying audiences unless the applicant shall have served an actual, bonafide apprenticeship of one year, and shall have passed a thorough examination, if a resident of the state, or shall have produced proof that he has done that which the officials consider a fair equivalent and be able to pass examination, if he be from another state. It is, of course, provided that those projecting motion pictures within the state at the time of adoption of the rule or law be excepted, though they shall be re-examined.

Exhibitors Should Welcome It

Exhibitors of sound business judgment should not and will not oppose this. On the contrary they should and will heartily welcome it, because they are, in the last analysis, the worst sufferers of all through incompetency in the projection room.

I know of nothing more foolish than to suppose that incompetency is cheap because it is cheap in purchase price—wage. INCOMPETENCY IS ALWAYS EXPENSIVE TO THE EXHIBITOR, no matter how cheap it may be in purchase price; also the lower the purchase price—wage—the more expensive it is likely to be, because low wage sets up no incentive to excell. It kills all ambition.

Incompetency in the projection room cuts many ways. It is nothing short of amazing that so many exhibitors who seem otherwise good business men, fail to realize that the man they get "cheap" because he lacks intelligence, knowledge and skill to earn more (and that is usually the ONLY reason for a man working cheaply), is really one of the most expensive things in all their establishments.

Not only does his incompetency cost heavily in added operating expense, but also (and more important) in loss of box office revenue by reason of decrease in attractiveness of the "show."

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

Tne lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Ave., New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

It is impossible to set the latter forth in convincing detail, because the exhibitor who cannot or does not realize that punk projection lowers the attractiveness of his show, hence decreases his box office income, is not a man one can ever hope to convince by argument. In the matter of operating expense, however, the matter is more easy.

Not Uncommon

It is not at all an uncommon thing to find motor generator set delivering something like 45 per cent. efficiency, instead of between sixty and seventy per cent., within two months of its installation, due entirely to lack of knowledge and intelligent care on the part of the projectionist. It is not at all an uncommon thing to find an expensive motor generator set which should have been in excellent condition after five or six years use, practically ruined in a year or two through lack of intelligent care, the use of unsuitable oils and lack of knowledge in the matter of damage done by slowly disintegrating cement floor surface.

It is no unusual thing to find expensive projectors shot to pieces for similar reasons, in a time which should have shown almost no wear at all.

It is no exaggeration to say that incompetency in projection rooms is costing hundreds upon hundreds upon hundreds of theatres anywhere from ONE TO FIFTY DOLLARS A DAY by reason of the fact that through such incompetency the attractiveness of the show suffers.

I do not propose to say that the serving of an apprenticeship will entirely cure all this. As a matter of fact it will not, BUT surely not even the most dense will question the proposition that the serving of an apprenticeship of reasonable time (even most ordinary trades require from two to three years) will increase the competency of men entering the projection field, and increase it very greatly too.

Position of Unions

It seems to me that, just as a plain matter of the commonest kind of common sense, the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Machine Operators of the United States and Canada (Whew! Some name, if you awsk me) should itself inaugurate and demand an apprenticeship requirement. In my judgment there should be a clause in every union contract reading something like this:

There shall be no man employed within the jurisdiction of this union, except those now members of this union, who has not served a bonafide apprenticeship of one year, if a resident of territory within the jurisdiction of this union, or who shall produce proof that he has projected pictures in theatres for at least two years if from other territory.

Mind you that is very crude, and designed only to outline the mere idea. The wording could be vastly improved, and when the one year apprenticeship has been well established it should be extended to two years.

Of course it is to be expected that some of the unthinking exhibitors and managers will object, claiming that such action will tend to restrict the supply of available men and thus increase wages.

Granted this may to some extent be true, what of it? The good Lord knows there is urgent need for exactly that same thing. One reason why we have so much incompetency is that exhibitors do not make competency worth while, or evince much willingness to encourage it by making it a financial object. Such a policy is of the "penny wise and pound foolish" variety. It is saving at the spigot and wasting at the bung hole.

In my opinion the unions simply stand in their own light by failing or refusing to work for an apprenticeship requirement. The stock objection is that there are already too many projectionists, which objection is perhaps well founded, but does the union for a moment suppose that failure to have an apprenticeship requirement limits the supply?

Think Again—

If so, then the union needs to think again. Quite the contrary, the no-apprenticeship increases the supply. The wants-to-be just simply gets a job in some small theatre outside the jurisdiction of the union, or "goes to school." He then obtains a "license" from an examining board which knows little about projection, and appears on the scene with a wide and somewhat derisive grin, an abundance of gall and a splendid stock of incompetency, sets himself up as a menace to unions and union conditions unless he be admitted to "the fold." Does any one dispute this?

Were the apprenticeship proposition put forward by the I. A. as I have suggested, the exhibitor, as a general proposition, would object, but in the end he would find it to put ten dollars into his pocket for every one it might possibly cost him through advance in wages—if it did the latter at all.

In the end he would benefit, even as he has benefited by everything which has tended to raise the level of the reproduction of the motion picture upon his screen. Any abnormal restriction of the field by an apprenticeship or anything else is just pure nonsense. The plumbers, bricklayers and nearly every other trade requires an apprenticeship, and have for years, yet there is an abundance of mechanics.

The lawyer and doctor certainly have to serve a gruelling apprenticeship, and have a license, yet there are plenty of them. Fear of restriction and scarcity of men is just pure piffle. It amounts to nothing at all, but even if it did I would be for it because it is sadly needed.

Comparison

F. C. Shivers, Projectionist, Lexington, Nebraska, wants information as to comparative results of what he now has and Mazda. He asys:

I come to you for information on Mazda projection. Want a comparison of what I now have with what I would get with Mazda. Like myself the manager is uninformed as to Mazda projection.

We now use A. C. from a 220 volt supply, through a Hallberg Economizer, with 60 amperes at the arc. Projection distance is 87 feet and picture is 13 feet 1 inch wide. Screen is plaster wall coated with oxide of zinc.

The projector optical train is according to lens chart. Projection lens working distance is 3⅞ inches and free diameter 1.51 inches. Some loss of light, don't you think?

Without changing screen do you think we can duplicate present screen results with Mazda? Of course, we would use the No. 2 lens with Mazda. Please be explicit, as the manager wants detailed information, and so do I.

Handbook Fine

Oh, yes! Forgot to say that I have received the new handbook, and that to say the least it is a very fine work. As an afterthought, will you explain all about the new aspherical condenser. We want to know how it is constructed, its advantages and everything in full.

SELL YOUR OUTGROWN EQUIPMENT

An Inch Advertisement in the "For Sale" Column of the Moving Picture World Will Move It. And An Inch Costs But

Deliver the Goods

As to the aspherical condenser, I cannot tell you as to its construction because I've never, to date, seen one of them, except in operation, and have not examined them intimately. I do know, however, that they certainly do deliver the goods. They give a sharp, round spot, and reduce light loss very greatly. They are "the candy kid," to this time, in Mazda condensers.

As to a comparison—well, it is a hard subject to handle because so very much depends upon the ability and carefulness of the projectionist himself.

To get 100 per cent results from Mazda it is absolutely essential that the apparatus be exactly and precisely in line throughout—meaning that if the light source be off the optical axis by even so little as 1-16th of an inch the results will be very unsatisfactory and there will be heavy decrease in screen illumination—large light loss. Then, too, unless the projectionist handles his light source carefully and intelligently there is likely to be unnecessary decrease in life of the lamp filament, which same will "increase inversely with the square of the lack of care and intelligence," as it were.

You will find very complete information with regard to Mazda in the new handbook, and that information is fully illustratd.

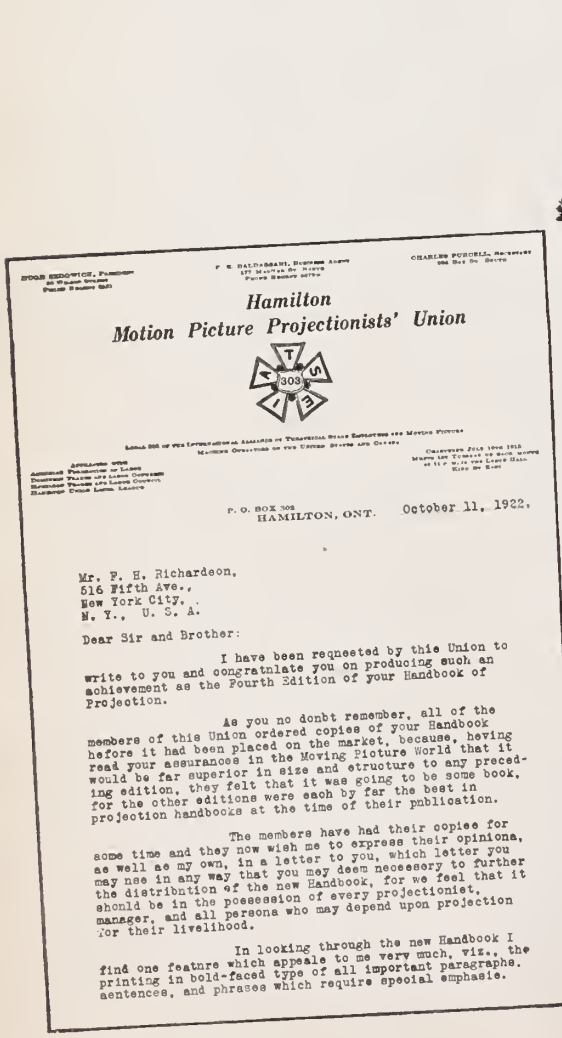
Give Proper Care

Of this you may be assured: Given proper care and careful adjustment and attention, you should and can fully duplicate your present screen result with Mazda. While the light will not be so powerful, it will nevertheless be more restful and pleasing to the eye, and the illumination will be absolutely steady and unchanging from start to finish of the show.

I do not care to advise in such matters, because so very much depends upon the individual who will handle the equipment AND upon the individual ideas of the individual who manages the theatre. I have stood beside two theatre managers, both of them at least fairly competent managers, who were looking at a demonstration of Mazda, and have heard one of them enthuse over the result, while the other pronounced it unsatisfactory.

These variations in ideas and opinions exist, and it makes it very difficult to advise. Personally I would not hesitate to make the change, because I believe you, friend Shivers, will get good results from the equipment as soon as you get acquainted with it.

The saving as against sixty amperes A. C. is very considerable. You probably use about 2,500 watts now, counting transformer losses. With the Mazda you would use only about 900 watts at most, plus transformer losses. Carbon consumption and lamp replacement would probably balance pretty well. Sorry, friend Shivers, but that is about all I could care to say.



Hamilton
Motion Picture Projectionists' Union

P. O. BOX 308 HAMILTON, ONT. October 11, 1922.

Mr. F. H. Richardson,
516 Fifth Ave.,
New York City,
N. Y., U. S. A.

Dear Sir and Brother:

I have been requested by this Union to write to you and congratulate you on producing such an achievement as the Fourth Edition of your Handbook of Projection.

As you no doubt remember, all of the members of this Union ordered copies of your Handbook before it had been placed on the market, because, having read your assurances in the Moving Picture World that it would be far superior in size and structure to any preceding edition, they felt that it was going to be some book, for the other editions were each by far the best in projection handbooks at the time of their publication.

The members have had their copies for some time and they now wish me to express their opinions, as well as my own, in a letter to you, which letter you may use in any way that you may deem necessary to further the distribution of the new Handbook, for we feel that it should be in the possession of every projectionist, manager, and all persons who may depend upon projection for their livelihood.

In looking through the new Handbook I find one feature which appeals to me very much, viz., the printing in bold-faced type of all important paragraphs, sentences, and phrases which require special emphasis.

This system is to be strongly recommended inasmuch as it prevents the passing over of some important point which might otherwise be overlooked or not heeded sufficiently if the matter were printed in uniform type.

Another feature of the new edition which we commend is the question section at the back of the book. This section finds favor because it enables a projectionist to take an inventory of his stock of knowledge and if there should be a question which he cannot answer, instead of finding the answer directly appended to the question he is directed to the page wherein the answer will be found. This system of looking for an answer makes him also read the whys and wherefores of the answer, a method which is certainly beneficial. The question section is also valuable as a minute index of the contents of the book.

The various chapters dealing with equipment used in projection, its maintenance and theory of operation leave nothing to be desired. The subject matter is all written in an understandable way and technical problems which the old-time "operator" thought he would never be able to understand now appear so clear that the average man would be ashamed to admit that he could not comprehend them.

The section dealing with Mazda Lamp Projection is the best collection of data on that topic that I have yet seen and the information on the High Intensity Arc Lamp is also very full and complete.

If I were to continue extolling the merits of the Handbook it would require a volume almost as large as the Handbook to contain all that I could say in its favor but I must content myself by saying that for an understandable book that really covers the field of motion picture projection the Fourth Edition of the Handbook of Projection cannot be beaten.

The members of this Union, including myself, join in congratulating you on the success of your efforts in compiling the new edition and sincerely thank you for striving to raise the profession of motion picture projection to a higher state of perfection.

Well, Mr. Richardson, I guess that I will not take up any more of your time in handing you bouquets, much as I would like to do so, but will close by wishing you the best of health and happiness and we all trust that you will be long spared to keep up the good work which you are doing.

Yours sincerely and fraternally,
Hugh McLennan
President

Egyptian in Both Architecture and Decoration Is Grauman's New House

THE $200,000 Grauman Egyptian theatre which opened in Hollywood, California, on October 18 with Robin Hood constitutes an architectural innovation in picture theatre design in that it is as thoroughly Egyptian in arrangement and decoration as any modern structure could reasonably be.

One of the innovations introduced by Grauman in the building of the new theatre is an open air fore court, one hundred and fifty feet long by forty-five feet wide through which, after purchasing a ticket, one passes into the theatre lobby.

This lobby measures seventy-five feet in length by twenty-five feet in width and its ceiling is twenty-four feet above its Mosaic floor.

The lobby leads into a curved foyer from which one enters the aisles of the auditorium. This latter is one hundred and eighteen feet in length, one hundred and sixteen feet in width and contains seventeen hundred and sixty of the house's total seating capacity of two thousand.

Egyptian Decorations

Flanked by Egyptian columns, two on each side, the stage, which is equipped for any kind of a theatrical performance, measures seventy-three by thirty feet. Between the columns, which are six feet in diameter, is a statue of the Sphinx, and above the proscenium arch is secreted the organ chamber, which measures fifty-six by fifteen feet.

The walls are adorned with hieroglyphics and Egyptian sculptures in low relief. The harmony of carving and coloring has been extended even to the projection room.

Two Power's Projectors

Mechanics and art join hands to make a perfect screen display of motion pictures and that is why Sid Grauman pays so much detailed attention to the projection rooms to his theatres. Grauman long ago realized that good pictures, if poorly projected, will not be a popular success and this understanding of the screen art is responsible for the minute care with which the projection rooms of Grauman's theatres are equipped.

The mechanical equipment of the projection room on which $5,000 has been expended, includes two Power's six-B projectors, illuminated with Power's G. E. high intensity arcs; one Power's triple dissolver, with which some of the latest coloring effects will be presented; three spot lights casting vari-colored hues; a special Westinghouse generator, wound for a capacity of 125 amperes, and the necessary connections to insure mechanical perfection in the screening of all pictures.

Remote Control System

This equipment is operated by the projectionist by means of automatic electrical controls arranged in three stations, from any one of which he will have complete control of the entire equipment.

The comfort of the projection room has been further enhanced by placing the rheostats of the filming machines in a specially made cabinet. Like the main room, this is ventilated by a fresh air system that insures a constant circulation of ozone.

Because the rheostats generate an intense heat, the customary plan of installing them in the projection room was abandoned in the Egyptian and a separate compartment provided and in this also has been placed the Enterprise automatic re-wind on which the films will be coiled up after they have been run in the projection room.

Adjoining the main projection room, entry to which is obtained from the roof, a film vault has been built. Constructed on the order of a bank safe, with a steel door, this vault is absolutely fireproof, and will insure the safety of the highly inflammable celluloid films while they are not being run.

All attractions to be shown at the Egyptian will be stored in this vault both before and during their exhibition runs. Every known safety method of handling the film has been installed in this compartment and any untoward accident to them has been rendered practically impossible by the precautions taken.

The theatre has been especially designed to resist the effects of any possible earth tremblers. The main carrying member of the roof is an arch with a span of one hundred and fourteen feet.

FOUR CYLINDER ELECTRIC PLANT

"Hello, Sam! This is Harry, at the Rialto."

"Yes, Harry, how did we come out with the picture?"

"Man, we didn't come out—we went in! Yes, we had a crowd. Stood 'em out. But in the middle of the first show a bad storm put the lights out. Had to refund 1500 admissions."

"Rotten luck, I'll say!"

"But Sam—what I want is the address of the people who make the Universal. The Strand theatre down the street owns one and I'll bet the money I saved them last night more than paid for their outfit. What's that—?"

"Universal Motor Co., Oshkosh, Wisconsin."

"I've got it, Sam."

The Eastman School of Music Issues Interesting Prospectus

WE are in receipt of copy of the prospectus of a course in motion picture accompanying for organists from the University of Rochester, Eastman School of Music, Rochester, New York.

The prospectus was accompanied by a letter from George Eastman, from which we quote the following:

Recognition of the importance of good musical accompaniment for motion pictures needs no argument; the demand of the public for good and constantly better music is an established fact. The organ is already installed in almost all motion picture theatres of size and permaneuce; it is pre-eminently the single instrument upon which motion picture accompaniment relies as its stable means. Organ builders are constantly enlarging the capacity of their product for equivalence to orchestral effects. The modern organ furnishes the means for varied musical interpretation of motion pictures that is a proven asset to their success.

There is a present and growing demand for a type of organist prepared to use the modern organ of the motion picture theatre to full advantage. Such an organist must be more than a skilled performer on the organ; more than a master of modern organ mechanisms. He must be prepared both by lively music memory and by ready and intelligent improvisation to follow with his accompaniment the kaleidoscope of scenes and moods of the picture to which his music must be adapted intimately, if the proper result is secured. The organist accompanying motion pictures cannot serve properly by performance of compositions by rote; he must himself be prepared to select from appropriate music such material as will be suitable to the needs of the pictures; he must in a way become a composer

The Needs of the Profession

Recognizing the needs of this comparatively new profession, the Eastman School of Music has made preparations of full adequacy to furnish the training called for. Mechanically its equipment is unrivalled. The organs of the Eastman Theatre and of Kilbourn Hall are two of the most important instruments built thus far; they represent the latest and most comprehensive thought of modern organ engineering and musical development. The studio for the course in motion picture accompanying is located in the Eastman Theatre and is equipped with a Wurlitzer orchestra organ with all modern instrumental equivalents; the regular organ department of the School has for its use two three-manual teaching organs and nine two-manual practice organs. The motion picture organ studio has complete facilities for screening pictures; lessons given there put the student in the environment of the theatre itself; properly prepared by technical and theoretical training, he there accompanies motion pictures under supervision of the teacher.

The teachers of this course in the Eastman School of Music are the organists of the Eastman Theatre. They are past masters of the art they teach. The student has constant opportunity to profit by example as well as by precept. In the working routine of this theatre there is constant preparation of musical material for use, continual scoring of a comprehensive weekly program of motion pictures. On occasion the student is given opportunity to witness this scoring.

In a music school furnishing complete education in music, of university standard, special opportunity is herein provided for an intensive training preparatory to the demand of motion picture theatres for skilled organists.

HAVE YOU A COPY OF RICHARDSON'S HANDBOOK?
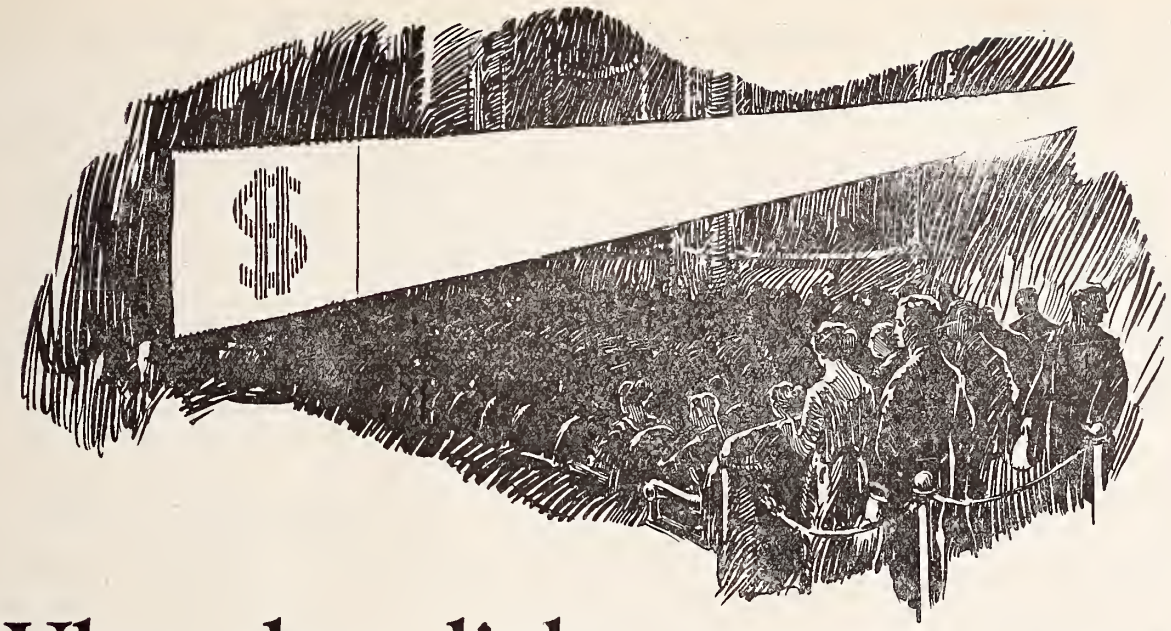
IF NOT—YOU ARE MISSING SOMETHING GOOD



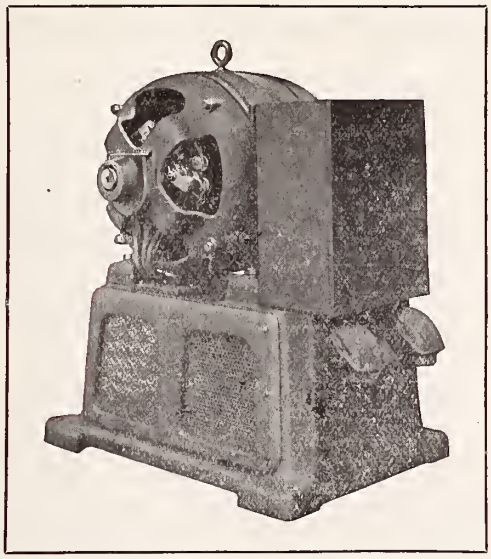
What does light mean to you?

HOW important do you consider the light you use to project your pictures? Do you rank it with your decorations, appointments and conveniences?

Remember, there were moving pictures before there were high class moving picture theatres. But where would the industry be without light?

The light you use can make your pictures come out real, life like and pleasing to look at. Or it can cause flickers and "spots" that jump around in such a manner as to tire the eyes of your patrons and spoil their evening.

One of the most desirable qualities of light for motion picture projection is that it should be white. The whiter the light the clearer the picture. All light is produced by heat. And the hotter it is the whiter it is.



Wagner White-Light Converter, Type S. C. includes converter, transformer element and starting switch. Ballast resistance, polarity switch and ammeter are included as part of the equipment and furnished in separate units.

The temperature of positive carbon—used with the direct current arc of the Wagner White-Light Converter—is approximately 4000° C. compared with that of the Tungsten filament lamp which is only 2700° C.

Whiteness is only one quality of the light furnished by the Wagner White-Light Converter. We would like to discuss further this subject of Light, so vital to every theatre owner. But space here will not permit.

Our book "Light For Motion Picture Projection" is written for theatre owners and operators. It is well worth your reading. The form below is for your convenience in requesting a copy.

Work Commences on A New Stanley House

The Stanley Company of America has secured a large plot of ground at the southwest corner of Broad and Louden streets and work has been begun preliminary to the erection of a theatre building which is promised to be one of the handsomest of its kind in North Philadelphia.

The plot of ground extends along Broad street and Louden and to Carlisle street in the rear and the building will be 166 to 177 feet, with a seating capacity of 1,500 on the first floor and 1,000 in the balcony.

There will be two tiers of boxes on each side. On the Broad street front, there will be two stores on both sides of the main entrance and over these will be an up-to-the-minute ball room, with two entrances from Broad street, the ball room extending around a mezzanine floor, with access from the foyer and balcony and here will be established rest and retiring rooms for both men and women.

Schaffer Withdraws from Supply Company

C. H. Fulton, President of Fulco Schaffer Sales Company, 24 E. Eighth St., Chicago, Ill., announces that he has purchased the interests of S. E. Schaffer in the above organization, and accepted his resignation as vice-president of the organization.

At an early date the company's name will be changed to the Fulco Sales Company. The members are those who are partly responsible for the success of the old E. E. Fulton Company, formerly located at Lake & LaSalle Sts., Chicago.

Huey Joins Bartola

Of interest to the exhibitors' fraternity will be the addition to the sales staff of the Bartola Musical Instrument Co. of William C. Huey, who is probably well-known to many of them as a film salesman. His experience in the past and knowledge of theatre work will be an asset in his new connection. This is an indication of the increasing business the Bartola Musical Instrument Co. is doing, and should be indicative of prosperity in the theatre business.

MOV-EZY
Means Ease at the Movies

Will You or Won't You?

Will you give your patrons a real physical reason for preferring your theatre to any other in town—or won't you? You will if you install the Mov-Ezy, the chair that means "Ease at the Movies."

Every man, woman and child appreciates the advantages of a Mov-Ezy the moment they sit in one. Not only is it roomy and comfortable with individual arm rests—a chair in every sense of the word—but it does what no other theatre chair in the world will do. It turns to either side, at the will of its occupant, to allow ample passage space between rows.

This eliminates the one great drawback of the old seating facilities—interrupted pictures, occasioned by people being obliged to rise continuously to allow others to pass. This affects not only themselves but others many rows behind them.

The Mov-Ezy will pull the crowd for your theatre as it is doing for others. Write at once for beautifully illustrated catalogue.

THE ANSWER!

Nigh's name should mean a lot at the box-office. The fight he has staged in "Notoriety" has the "Tol'able David" fight skinned. That should be enough.—"Danny" in the Film Daily.

"Notoriety" is a blessing to the independent market. It bids fair to outdraw at the box-office anything Will Nigh has ever done. It is replete with thrills. Its exploitation possibilities are innumerable.—Roger Ferri, M. P. World.

"Notoriety" will go in any kind of house. There is a corking fight scene which carries action plus. The characters are convincing and the technical side is excellent.—M. P. News.

One thing about Will Nigh. When he turns out a picture you can be almost certain he will grind out a box-office product. "Notoriety" has everything that has ever been screened. Nothing is left out. On the title alone it should be a money-getter.—Fred Schrader—Variety.

"Notoriety" has every ingredient a winning picture needs to make it a big box-office attraction and its advent should prove a boon to buyers of state-right attractions.—Exhibitors Herald.

Will Nigh possesses a rare insight into the psychology of the masses. The public may eat this up, just as it did in the case of a recent Will Nigh picture. The court scene has a real thrill. The cast is unusual and lives up to its reputation.—Blaisdell, Exhibitors Trade Review.

Read every word of Eugene H. Roth's Letter

It is an unbiased opinion of a big progressive first-run exhibitor after he had actually run the picture in the CALIFORNIA one of San Francisco's biggest and best theatres.

Opinions like this, which reflect audience approval, expressed by men of the standing and judgement of Eugene H. Roth, are valuable. They beat projection room reviews all to death.

Lloyd Hamilton will make six feature comedies in two-reel length for 1922-1923. Book the entire series.

Mr. C. C. Blumenthal, San Francisco Representative.

Gentlemen:

The spontaneous laughter and approval of the clientele of the California Theatre this week in the showing of Lloyd Hamilton's comedy, entitled "Speeders," are indeed very gratifying to us and I know will be to the Educational Film Exchange.

Needless to say, we are very much elated with the contract in our possession for the forthcoming releases of this comedian's delightful, clean, entertaining comedies. And with the contracts also for the Christie's as well as the Mermaid's, we feel we have an insurance for refreshing comedies in our programs at our California, Granada and Imperial Theatres for the ensuing term.

Your progressive development, coupled with the national campaign, is being splendidly handled, and all progressive exhibitors like ourselves will find themselves duty-bound to contract for these productions to round out a perfect, well-balanced program to satisfy their clientele.

With very best wishes for your continued success,

Yours very truly,

Eugene H. Roth

One man sought to learn about women from books.—The other man got his lesson from life.—Whose was the better method?

"It has been repeatedly demonstrated in picture land that the heroine who is 'up against it,' so to speak, through no fault of her own, can command the sympathies of nine out of ten people who witness her struggles against unkind fate. And Nola, the girl who weds a man who takes an awful long time to realize that she is really worthy of his name, obtains sympathy in large and generous measure. So does the self-sacrificing friend whose efforts finally bring husband and wife together in a happy climax. 'Lonesome Corners' is skilfully directed, presented by a clever cast of players and affords pleasing entertainment.''—Exhibitors Trade Review.

Exhibitors Trade Review

THE premiere of "Shadows" at the Hotel Biltmore on the evening of October 27 was more than what conservatively may be described as a triumph for its producers. It was first-hand and first-class evidence of the growing importance of the independent division of the industry. As a production it will rank as a distinct achievement. It is a subject that will make the motion picture fame of some and fortify the position of others.

"Shadows" will do more than that. Its influence, its beneficient influence, will not be confined to the friends of the motion picture. It will reach into and confuse if it does not confound the ranks of the comparatively few but exceedingly voluble antagonists of the screen. It will hold up the hands and sustain the promises of Will Hays and his associates.

What is of major importance is that it may be seen and enjoyed by the legion of older screen patrons as well as by a host of new ones.

"Shadows" is a picture that will stand analysis—from the viewpoint of story, of preparation for the screen, of direction, of playing, and of final polishing. Its titles ring true—all the way. There are smiles for all and tears for the many, but the story strikes a deep human note—of respect for the conventions of society.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

Daniel Frohman remarked years ago in an after-dinner speech following a banquet attended by motion picture men that "No great actor was ever made except in great part."

In "Shadows" the actor and the part meet. Harrison Ford is the actor and the character of John Malden the Minister in this adaption of Wilbur Daniel Steele's "Ching, Ching, Chinaman" is the part. It is a great part and "Shadows" is a great story.

Two other characterizations rank alongside that of Mr Ford's: Lon Chaney as "Ching, Ching, Chinaman," and John Sainpolis as Nate Snow, the capitalist of the New England seashore village of Urkey. But these two are older players and have had their day in court. No one who has seen Mr. Sainpolis in "The Great Lover" has any doubt of the artistry of which he is master.

Mr Chaney has been seen in a n of great characterizations—as the C in "The Miracle Man," to name ju of these. Yet it must be borne in that the role assigned to him in the ent instance is one of unusual diffi and because of that fact his triump be conceded to be all the greater.

When writing of "Shadows" it is natural mental process to revert to Miracle Man." Not that the two su are allied in theme: for in the Schu production there is nothing of the s natural, with its illusion dispelling te cy. The Morning Telegraph

REVIEWED BY HELEN POLLOCK.

Lon Chaney is at his best as the Chinaman in "Shadows." His sense of characterization goes beyond the mere outward adjuncts of make-up and one believes him really to be Yen Sin, the Mongolian.

For the producers of "Shadows" it may be said that this production is characterized by a rather unusual refinement of feeling. They have avoided the blatant and obvious wherever it was possible and thus have added much to the verisimilitude of the film. The audience will believe in the story by reason of the good taste shown in its development. The cast is a good one, and besides Lon Chaney in the principal role, includes Harrison Ford, Marguerite De La Motte and John Sainpolis.

The piece is a credit to its producers. Undoubtedly this film has the elements of popular appeal, and should prove a feather in the cap of its makers, as well as an extra plume in the head-gear of its chief actor. "Shadows" is a worthy achievement.

hi is an excellently made picture so filled with heart interest, romante and thrills as to make it a good attraction for any exhibitor. It abounds with exploitation angles and has an added value by being built on a widely read story. Directed by Tom Forman.

CK office values were evidently carefully considered by B. P. Schulberg selecting story, cast and title for ows," his second production for distribution by the Al. Lichtman Corporation. The picture was given its premiere before a critical audience in New York week and judging from the reception received, will go more than well throughout the country.

Shadows" is a picturization of Wilbur hi Steele's famous story "Ching, Ching, Chinaman," appearing originally in Pictorial Review. The direction was given over to Tom Forman and he has completed a task that satisfies.

The cast is unusually good and shows in selection the same care which marks the making of the picture. As a Chinese laundryman-philosopher, Lon Chaney is the outstanding figure and he gives to the character in keeping with his well recognized talents in such a role.

Getting over such subtlety and delicacy as the entertainingly human plot on which this latest Preferred Pictures, Inc., production, "Shadows," requires, constitutes a task rarely undertaken by any producer; yet Tom Forman, with the financial and moral support of B. P. Schulberg, undertook it and accomplished the feat with such astonishingly wonderful results that should establish this super special as one of the truly few beautiful and magnificent pictures of the current season. Certainly it is an artistic achievement of rare excellence.

Artistry and box office requirements are not always synonymous, for the solely artistic offering usually develops itself into a single class attraction. Not so with "Shadows," however, for in a careful study of this brilliant offering, the keen showman—the exhibitor who is quick to grasp the possibilities of the certain elements that contribute in the making of a money-getting proposition—this production embraces certain features which, properly capitalized, should register it as a magnet of unusual power.

With "Shadows" one can go the limit in promises of fine acting—notable characterizations that make impressively permanent showings that will not die out with the flitter of the last flicker; a lavish production reinforced with spectacularly realistic settings emphasized with thrillers that force you to take a firm grip on your seat, a story that will appeal mostly to the lover of the classics and interest those who delight in seeing the sensational and melodramatic.

That the message so cleverly communicated gets over is a tribute to Tom Forman and substantiates the contention embodied in advance notices that Lon Chaney in the role of Yen Sin is seen at his best. One distinction that cannot be taken away from this production is the fact that it is out of the ordinary in story value. Artistically, it is one of the truly great achievements of the motion picture industry.

Photographically, "Shadows" is consistent with the high class tone of the production in general. Its settings are typical of the locale of the story, while the lighting is flawless and particularly effective during the splendidly staged storm scene.

In NEW YORK:

Editorial in Motion Picture News, Nov. 11: It certainly looks like a line-up of real pictures on Broadway these crisp November days. Take notice of what is offered on the big street. "The Sin Flood" is at the Capitol. "Oliver Twist" at the Strand. "The Town That Forgot God" is catching them at the Astor, while the Criterion is turning them away with "Knighthood Was in Flower." Just around the corner on 42nd Street one may see Griffith's "One Exciting Night," Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood" and at Loew's State is "Timothy's Quest."

In BOSTON:

"Timothy's Quest" at the Modern and Beacon makes the audience live in surrendered sympathies, says the Boston Post. And the conservative Transcript says: "Once in a while out of the ruck of ordinary pictures blatantly heralded, comes a brief and simple tale which wins its way to the heart of the spectator. Such a one is "Timothy's Quest."

In LOS ANGELES:

The Examiner says: At Miller's this week you see two players who grip your hearts as securely as the most famous of stars. Joseph Depew and Helen Rowland make "Timothy's Quest" have an irresistible appeal to grown-ups and also make it something out of the ordinary classification of motion pictures. The Express says: Sweetly sentimental and giving strong tugs at the heartstrings "Timothy's Quest" is a triumph of acting and direction. It could not be improved upon. The Evening Herald says: The good things of life come oft unheralded. It is rare that a modern motion picture comes to town and makes its initial appearance without sometimes one or several bad errors showing up on the screen. "Timothy" is the exception. Done in a manner that calls for unstinted praise.

In PORTLAND, ME.

Editorial in the Press Herald: "Timothy's Quest" is a wholesome worth while production the kind which once seen will be long remembered because it tells a simple story in a charming way. Such pictures as this are well worth while. There are noue too many of them. the kind which it does people good to see.

In ATLANTA:

The Better Films Committee today had the pleasure of viewing the screen version of Kate Douglas Wiggin's delightful story "Timothy's Quest." The word pleasure is used advisedly. "So Popular They Had To Hold It Over!"

That's what the New York Sun says of Jackie Coogan's big success now in its second big week at the New York Strand.

WILL STIMULATE PUBLIC CONFIDENCE IN FILMS, SAYS THE NEW YORK WORLD.

"Jackie's performance surely is one of the most irresistible things which ever have been put on the silver screen. When he walks into the picture he seems to be the child of Charles Dickens.

"We never have seen so lovable a figure on the screen as he presents here. When he runs behind the lumbering coach on the road to London, turning his handsprings until it seems he will surely fall of exhaustion, in the hope that someone will toss him a coin, there is something deeply pathetic about it. And that view in which he is attired in the tall, silk hat and the long tailed black coat of the undertaker's assistant is something too impressive to attempt to describe.

"But Jackie is a comedian, too. See him mimic Fagan, bending over until his forehead almost touches the floor, a hand on the hip, doddering along like a decrepit old man. Watch him in the close-ups as mischievous ideas come stealing into his head.

"This motion picture will be more effective as propaganda for stimulating the public confidence in the films than all the addresses, interviews and advertisements the motion picture men can assemble. It is one of the really artistic things which have come out of the studios since screen drama began."

The Voice of the People

The people of Massachusetts have spoken—and their answer to proposed censorship is emphatic.

For the first time in history voters were given an opportunity to think and to speak on the subject of motion picture censorship.

That so cheering and encouraging a verdict should have come from Massachusetts—cradle of liberty—seems only fitting and just.

That it did come in such outspoken terms is a tribute to intelligent workers, loyal fighters, and to the sound good sense and justice of the American people.

General Hays' First Battle

The campaign in opposition to censorship in Massachusetts was conducted by a citizens' committee, headed by Gen. Charles Cole, and composed of laymen who enlisted in the cause of free speech.

Citizens who saw nothing but a further attempt to encroach on their liberties; newspapers that saw only a new assault on the freedom of the press were in the forefront of the battle. The industry's part was set deeply in the background.

But aside from the "ifs" and "ands" of the case, it may be said plainly that had the screen been defeated it would have been set down as a defeat for Will Hays in his first skirmish against foes from without.

Since victory has been our portion—let's say as clearly, as loudly, and as emphatically as it can be said, a word of praise, congratulation and admiration for Will Hays and his organization.

With "honorary mention" to First Lieutenant Charles C. Pettijohn.

A Hard-Won Victory

The fact that the verdict in opposition to censorship was carried by a majority of three hundred and twenty-five thousand may leave the impression of a mediocre fight and an easily won victory.

But the writer can bear witness that this is not the truth.

We have been on the ground, we have talked with the "wise ones" always willing to wield a hammer.

As in all such cases there have been the usual visitors to a trade paper editor's desk, ready to whisper to him "the inside story" and the supposedly damning facts of incompetence in handling the industry's battle.

The temptation is always present to jump into such a situation with a muckraker's glee, and stories of how everything is going to the dogs and headed further.

Too often in the past the knockers have been upheld by the outcome of the particular battle being waged.

The Cards Against Us

Keen political sense was necessary to bring victory in the Bay State. All the cards were stacked against us.

Several amendments were being voted on, the natural and popular answer to the others being affirmative, while in the case of the censorship one the voters were expected to remember to vote "No."

The most prominent church and society forces imaginable were lined up against us—and shrewd antagonists were awaiting the first opportunity to jump on "the motion picture trust" and "greedy film men."

But there were no mistakes—the expected boomerang didn't materialize.

Volunteer workers carried the brunt of the battle. Sincere newspapers gave incalculable aid. The theatres helped with their screens. The jingle of the money-bags was not heard; not a "magnate" was allowed on the stage; it was kept a Massachusetts question, to be decided by Massachusetts voters.

The industry can never fully repay the citizens and newspapers of the Bay State. Except, as Will Hays has said, by keeping the faith.

And that will be payment in full.

Robert E. Welsh

Have You Heard That—

While Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has officially announced that he will not be a candidate for re-election at the Chicago convention next spring, his friends in various sections of the country have inaugurated a campaign to have him reconsider the move. Mr. Cohen's popularity was intensified considerably during the past few weeks' tour of the Middlewest and it is in that section where the new campaign has been started.

The boom for the election of W. A. Steffes as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America started this week in the Middlewest. Mr. Steffes, although a Minneapolis exhibitor, is right now using his influence with New York exhibitors to bring about a return of their organization to the parent fold.

Official confirmation of the exclusive announcement published in Moving Picture World several months ago to the effect that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, of New York, would make an effort to organize similar bodies in key centres was given this week. It is said by officials of that organization that Senator James J. Walker, counsel, with several members, will make a tour of the country.

With the independent theatre owners of New York organized as a collective booking body, the syndicate bookers, namely, B. F. Keith, P. P. Proctor, Marcus Loew, William Fox, B. S. Moss and others are considering a similar organization to compete with that new organization of which Nathan Burkan is the general counsel. Already the two have submitted offers for the big pictures and several contracts about to have been closed have been held up.

Walter Batchelder, for many years associated with Hurtig & Seamon in numerous capacities, former treasurer of the Empire in Toledo, O., and of the Central Theatre in New York City, has been appointed manager of the Lyric Theatre in New York, where "Douglas Fairbanks in 'Robin Hood'" is playing for an indefinite period.

Indicates Increase

Theatre's Report Forecasts Better Business for Industry

Theatre business developments in Canada during the past year is indicated in the second annual report for Eastern Theatres, Ltd., Toronto, operating the Pantages Theatre, Toronto, with its 3,700 seats.

Although the net profits of the company are shown to be lower for the past year by the report just issued, the company is in a generally stronger financial position after dividends of $45,000 have been paid. The total assets of the company amount to $1,724,695, as compared with a total of $1,769,136 one year ago.

The value of land, buildings and equipment is shown to be $806,781, as against $654,624.

A balance of $2,576 in organization expenses was written off, leaving a surplus account at the end of the second year of $30,837 as against $24,795 one year ago.

A New Love

Miss Camilla Donworth, well known to the industry, is now conducting La Boheme Bazaar, 181 West Fourth street, New York City, having transferred her affections from motion pictures to Dresden, China, old bronzes and Christmas cards. As the woman pioneer in the field of industrial films, she founded Films of Business in 1915.

Newsy Briefs

The employees of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation are preparing for an elaborate dance and entertainment at the Roof-Garden of the Astor Hotel, Friday evening, December 15. The Goldwyn employees hope to raise sufficient funds through this dance to organize a Goldwyn club.

Harry J. Cohen, long head of the foreign department of Metro h,as resigned to become associated with Fox Film Corporation. He will be associated with the foreign department in an important capacity.

Seven thousand dollars was turned into the Maryland State Treasury by the Maryland State Board of Motion Picture Censors last year. Add to this the three annual salaries of the three members of the board at $2,400 each and the running expenses of the office and it can be approximated just what it is costing the moving picture fraternity of Maryland.

Greatly increased employment in every section of the United States is shown by the report of the Director General of the United States Employment Service, Washington, D. C., just made public. This report indicates, it is stated, that wages will be plentiful and that therefore moving picture exhibitors should prosper.

Rumors that an additional rate of 3 cents per package will be imposed on all parcel-post packages after January 1, next, have been set at rest by a statement just issued by the post office authorities at Washington, D. C. The Department has no intention of imposing any additional postage charge on parcels at the present time, it is stated.

Concurrent with the announcement that S. L. Rothafel will personally supervise and direct the entertainment and divertissement of the third annual supper dance of the T. O. C. C., comes official word that Alfred E. Smith, governor-elect of New York, has accepted the invitation to be the guest of honor of the theatre owners on the night of December 2.

"Roxie" promises to outdo some of the most daring innovations in artistic conception in keeping with the season's social event. Something distinctively original and different is assured in lighting effects and the decorations, it is said, will be of an out-of-the-ordinary character.

Officers Elected at the Nebraska Convention

NEED for what was characterized as more equitable contracts between exhibitors and distributors was emphatically emphasized at the third annual convention of the Iowa and Nebraska M. P. T. O. in Omaha, on Wednesday and Thursday of last week.

A. J. Moeller, of New York City, business manager of the M. P. T. O. A., led an attack on what he termed "the unjust and unreasonable conditions imposed upon exhibitors by distributors." He said, too, that the M. P. T. O. A. should give virile support to the independent film producer, distributor and exhibitor.

The convention appointed a committee to adjust differences between the exchanges and the exhibitors.

Among the prominent men at the convention were Dr. Thomas G. Patten, of New York, representing Will H. Hays, and Dr. George E. Condra, of the State University of Nebraska.

Officers elected at the convention were for the Nebraska association only. They are A. R. Pramer, Alhambra, Omaha, president; C. E. Williams, Park, Omaha, first vice-president; Frank Houston, Lyric, Tekamah, second vice-president; J. E. Kirk, Grand, Omaha, secretary; S. A. Hayman, Lyda, Grand Island, treasurer.

Censorship Repudiated in Massachusetts

Overwhelming Vote Is Cast for Freedom of the Screen

Boston, Nov. 8.

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

THE people of Massachusetts went to the polling places yesterday and spoke their opinion of State censorship of motion pictures. For the first time in history the citizens of a State decided for themselves and not through supposed representation what they should see on the screen, and incidentally, from what censorship proponents have stated, what they should read, hear, do, write, think, breathe. They killed censorship by a huge vote of 3 to 1, with an enormous plurality of 338,443.

The general opinion here is that the question is dead for all time now, but the "reformers" do not take that view of things. They are already laying plans for their next campaign, and intend to carry it to the Congress of the United States in seeking a national censorship law as evidenced in the following article which appeared in a Boston paper this morning:

E. Tallmadge Root, executive secretary of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, has issued the following statement concerning the defeat of the moving picture censorship bill: "The contest over the motion picture law, which has just ended, is unparalleled in Massachusetts history. In behalf of the law all the philanthropic organizations of the State and the religious bodies were lined up together. Catholic and Protestant have stood shoulder to shoulder to the last. This, in itself, is an achievement worth all the effort of the contest and will prove of incalculable benefit in the future history of the State. The religious bodies have worked, each in its own way, and without compromising their principles, but for the same moral end.

"The discussion of the subject has brought home to every citizen a sense of the moral responsibility of such amusements as motion pictures. Cleaner films are assured. It was only the assurance that the industry itself, under the lead of Mr. Will H. Hays intended to correct the depths of indecency and vulgarity to which it is conceded the motion picture magnates had descended, that has led a majority of the voters to give the industry a longer trial. If this result is not speedily forthcoming, the enactment of a law is only postponed.

"We believe, however, that the voters have been misled. In two important instances, quotations made by the opponents of the law have been promptly disavowed. The law itself has been completely misrepresented.

"We believe that the issue has been so misrepresented that the re-introduction of the law in the next Legislature would be justified and that the facts regarding the contest in Massachusetts render certain the early adoption of a national law by the Congress of the United States."

During the campaign nothing happened that so well showed just the types that the world has to contend with in fighting for personal liberty and rights as this "post-mortem" announcement. Beaten to the ground in a defeat more conclusive than any in the political history of the State they raise a mangled hand in protest and feebly cry what they are going to do, and how they are going to do, the world in the near future.

The eyes of the country were on Massachusetts in this fight, and the old Bay State has come through again. Not a city or town of any importance in the State voted in favor of censorship. Big cities like Springfield, Fall River, New Bedford, Lawrence, and others, were against the proposition by an average of about 10,000 plurality. Boston swept the board clean by a 70,000 plurality. It was a great victory, and the spoils of war go to the Massachusetts Citizens Committee Against Censorship, headed by Brigadier General Charles H. Cole, rather than to the exhibitors of the State. General Cole and his associates were ably seconded by more than 90 per cent. of the daily and weekly newspapers of the State. The State vote in exact figures, so far as known, was 207,476 in favor of a censor, while the vote against totaled 545,919. Out-of-the-way rural communities that never had the opportunity of harboring a motion picture theatre were the only ones that went for the measure. Boston showed every precinct decidedly against. The wards total an average plurality of 3,000 each.

Most of the Boston newspapers declared the result highly gratifying, the Transcript in its election editorial setting forth, perhaps better than any, the general belief over the result. The Transcript said today: "The decision of the electorate in rejecting the law providing for motion picture censorship was not unexpected, but the adverse vote was larger than many had anticipated. The question was one that had been thoroughly discussed. Arguments on both sides were generally familiar. The verdict of the people should be accepted as final.

Massachusetts citizens were given the opportunity of deciding and the far-reaching effects of their decision is ably set forth in the following statement made today by John M. Casey, Boston's municipal censor. Mr. Casey said:

"The overwhelming plurality means, in my opinion, the death knell of state boards of censorship in the United States, and as usual Massachusetts leads the way in stifling legislation that means the curtailing of liberty and free speech whether printed or screened."

The statement of Will H. Hays regarding the victory follows:

"Censorship of motion pictures has been defeated in Massachusetts in a direct vote of the people by a majority of 340,000. This overwhelming vote against censorship is a splendid response to the appeal to the press and citizens of that state that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts stand against this undue political aggression. Just as certainly is it a definite and unmistakable challenge to the motion picture industry to carry out its program for its own continual improvement in the full discharge of its duty to the public. This responsibility is accepted by the industry in the spirit of highest service and it will in grateful earnestness fully discharge this duty."

Sydney S. Cohen, national president of the M. P. T. O. A., immediately after the result of the referendum became known, wrote every exhibitor in Massachusetts urging that they express through the newspapers their appreciation of the public's verdict. In each letter was a statement by the president that he suggested each theatre owner take to his newspaper for publication. It follows, in part:

"The American people will not submit to a political censorship of the press in any of its divisions. They know it invites disaster. The open, deliberate action of the people of Massachusetts in defeating censorship of the motion pictures proves this. This verdict for a free press and a free screen will have a salutory effect in all parts of the country and will eventually eliminate censorship everywhere and leave the screen, with its wonderful powers for public service, free and untrammelled in the service of the people of nation, state and community. We congratulate the people of Massachusetts on their sound American verdict on this question."

They Are Talking About—

—Louis Mayer, in New York these days. Louis has John Stahl, Reginald Barker and Fred Niblo under his wing—consequently Louis is being given considerable attention by distributors with covetous eyes on that list of producers. Harry Reichenbach is also hanging his hat in the Mayer offices—and that means a lot. Watch for Harry's break with "Hearts Aflame," the Reginald Barker forest fire picture.

—Lewis J. Selznick. Lots of conversation after viewing "One Week of Love." A railroad wreck climax that furnished Saturday's conversation in Film Row. And a general production excellence that has given new strength to Myron Selznick's name. Lots of boosters for Lewis J. Gamest fighter and most picturesque character in the game. The rooters are calling for three more like "One Week of Love" this year. Jack Woody's sales force has its chance to whoop things up.

—Who is going to be the director of "Ben Hur?" This is a goshamighty important question. We never before have seen such widespread interest among directors and directors' agents in the question of who would be the man to produce a coming picture. We know for a fact that some of the biggest—with other connections at present—are angling for the chance. Pulling wires. And we don't blame them. "Ben Hur" in pictures is going to be the show event of the century. Something to have your name tied to. So far—Goldwyn is the only name. Next—the director?

—Of Watterson Rothacker, as no longer "of Chicago." Now it's Watterson Rothacker, of Here and There. Was in New York the past week. Left Wednesday for Chicago. Leaves there in a day for Los Angeles. Leaves Los on the 16th for Chicago. Leaves Chicago after Christmas, then for New York. We'll probably then hear that he is sailing for Europe.

—R. E. W.

More Censors

Bigger Force Swells Up Pay Roll's Total

The New York State Motion Picture Commission will shortly be enlarged by the addition of several reviewers, who will hold positions under Civil Service regulations, and who will be required to take an examination now being prepared by the Civil Service Commission. Under the provisions of the law, these inspectors or reviewers may receive a salary ranging anywheres from $1,600 to $2,500.

The examination will, it is said, be based on a practical test in viewing and analyzing certain selected films. Education, experience and general qualifications will also enter into the ratings, it is stated.

Speaks of Prices

Exhibitor Says They Are Justified Under Present Conditions

As long as operating expenses continue at their present level, exhibitors are justified in maintaining the existing scale. Exhibitors can collect such a price, but the public expects entertainment according to the admission paid.

This is the latest statement in the admission-reduction-or-retention argument written by Emmanuel Mandelbaum, First National Franchise holder of Cleveland, who has spent two weeks in New York as a member of First National's Rotating Committee.

Although the organization in which he holds an interest has devoted itself exclusively to showing motion pictures Mr. Mandelbaum has devoted himself principally to distribution and organization problems, leaving the actual theatre operations to his associates. As a result, he has come constantly in contact with exhibitors, so that his opinions represent the consensus of opinion of experienced exhibitors in the northern Ohio territory, it is stated.

In an interview given during his fortnight in New York Mr. Mandelbaum scored equally the business methods of exhibitors who foist upon the public pictures that are judged by length, rather than quality, and who will not make inquiries about the product they are to show, and producers who foist productions that they know are unworthy upon exhibitors and the public.

Business Improving

Tax Receipts Show Conditions in Industry Are on Up Grade

The moving picture business is slowly getting in a more prosperous condition. This betterment is indicated, it is stated, by the best of all evidence, the tax receipts of the United States Government. For the month of September, it is shown in the report just issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the receipts from the tax on admissions to theatres and other places of amusement totaled $4,789,391, as compared with $4,710,470, for the preceding month and $4,620,893 for the month of July, the lowest of all months since the war.

The increase of nearly $200,000 in the amount of tax collected on admissions in September as compared with July indicates an increase in receipts at the box office of from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000. However, the receipts now are but slightly more than 50 per cent. of what they were when the peak of prosperity obtained. For the month of December, 1920, the highest record reached, the tax on admissions and dues totaled $8,387,386.

During the month of September the Government also collected $126,790 from the special seating tax as compared with $389,145 for the preceding month. Total collections from all sources were $354,284,246, as compared with $139,575,948.

"Al" Smith Election a Victory For Industry in Censorship Fights

NEWS from Boston that Massachusetts had overwhelmingly voted against censorship of motion pictures was supplemented with unprecedented enthusiasm in industry circles when the fact became known that New York, by returning "Al" Smith to the gubernatorial chair in Albany by a plurality of approximately 400,000 had publicly displayed its antagonism to the Motion Picture State Commission, which the Democratic party pledged itself to put out of existence by a repeal of the censorship law. The Smith victory was generally accepted in film circles as a public demonstration indicative of the absolute failure of censorship in the Empire State.

While no official comment was available from any member of the Motion Picture Commission, the censors and their friends spent all of Election Day mournfully reading the returns which, if the Democrats keep their pledge to the people of New York, will have amounted to nothing less than obituaries for Messrs. Levinson & Co.

For the motion picture industry, on the face of late official returns, the 1922 elections will go down in history as the greatest rebuke ever accorded the "reform" element, for these reports indicated scores of towns that voted on the Sunday show proposition, had publicly rebelled against these fanatical intrusions by making legal picture entertainment on the first day of the week.

Sunday Movies Win Out in New Rochelle, N. Y.

W. P. Milligan, M.P. World's Advertising Manager, Leads Fight

NEW ROCHELLE, one of the "home cities" on the outlying boundaries of New York City, and a town in which Sunday moving pictures had never before been tolerated, cut itself loose from the antiquated idea of rule by a minority over the majority at the elections Tuesday, and voted overwhelmingly in favor of opening moving picture theatres on the Sabbath.

Wendell P. Milligan, advertising manager of Moving Picture World, and vice-president of the Homestead-Stephenson Park Association of New Rochelle, started the ball rolling that developed into the avalanche that submerged those who held to out-worn theories that there should be no Sunday amusements, and that the Sabbath should be only a day of sombre brooding.

The ballots spoke in no uncertain terms, showing how many more persons favored mild Sunday diversion than were opposed to it. The balloting in New Rochelle, always noted for its conservatism, is taken to indicate a breaking away all over the country from the hide-bound customs of the past where "Blue Sunday" advocates forced their unrelenting policies upon their co-citizens.

A vigorous campaign was waged in New Rochelle for many weeks before the election. Innuendo and open calumny played its part. Especially bitter were the attacks of the Ministers' Association against those persons who dared to raise their voices in favor of Sunday openings. These attacks were in a large measure leveled against several men well known in the community as disinterested in the question except so far as their wish to see the majority of the citizens get what they desired in the way of Sunday movies.

These men brought the pointed antagonism of the Ministers' Association against themselves by signing full-page advertisements in the New Rochelle press arguing in favor of open moving picture theatres on the Sabbath. The advertisements, worded by one of their number, spoke simply of the people's rights, and explained in logical phrases why the majority of New Rochelle's citizens should not be held in subservience by a minority that was less than half as numerous.

The men who signed the advertisements listed their occupations as carpenter, chef, telephone employe, electrician, and so on. They told in pithy language of the cause at issue. In two pointed paragraphs they summed up the whole status of the election when they said:

"We are voting on a bigger question than the mere opening of motion pictures in New Rochelle on next Tuesday. We are really voting on a question as to whether we shall continue a spirit of tolerance and personal liberty, allow free thought and free action, or whether we shall ratify the old evil of intolerance, repression and persecution of some people by other people.

"The people who do not want the motion picture theatres open on Sunday in New Rochelle are, undoubtedly, right thinking people. Their motives are unquestionably sincere. But did they ever stop to ask themselves: "Have I a right to think for another man or woman? Has that other man or woman the right to think for himself or herself?"

Mr. Milligan, as vice-president of the Homestead-Stephenson Park Association of New Rochelle, stated that the purposes of this body were purely those of civic improvement, and the matter of Sunday moving pictures was brought before it only after the purposes for which it was formed had been attended to. But once the subject had been broached to the organization, and it was pointed out how unfair it was for the people's wishes to be so flagrantly over-ridden by a strongly intrenched minority, the fight against this injustice was taken up wholeheartedly, culminating in the overwhelming victory of the people at the polls.

Now that the people have voiced their approval, it remains only for the City Council to sanction the movement to make Sunday moving pictures in New Rochelle a reality. This move on the part of the Council is considered to be assured. Other cities in the vicinity of New Rochelle have long had their Sunday amusements, and because of this they attracted much of New Rochelle's population over Sundays, and drew to themselves much of its finances.

Having the welfare of his home city at heart, and for no other reason Mr. Milligan started the movement that has culminated so favorably. But in spite of his disinterested viewpoint Mr. Milligan was viciously attacked in writings by the opposition, and many ulterior motives were laid at his door.

Answering these statements Mr. Milligan made his position clear to all who were unbiased. He said: "I have no axe to grind. But this question is one for the majority to settle. This is the United States, where the majority rule, and if the greater number of voters in New Rochelle want Sunday movies we'll have them. As for myself, the movement means nothing to me, personally, except that I am willing to stand for the right.

"As for being interested in any theatre business in New Rochelle or in any other place, as has been implied in the writings against me which those who are interested in throttling the real wishes of the people have circulated, I emphatically deny. In fact, I do not even know a theatre owner in New Rochelle nor does one know me. There is nothing at all that I expect as recompense for my efforts."

One of the principal workers whose efforts did a great deal to guide the course of the campaign was P. D. Cochrane, of Universal. Mr. Cochrane is said to have been indefatigable in his work in behalf of what he knew the people of his city wished to accomplish in bringing Sunday moving pictures to New Rochelle, and in instituting a sane Sabbath.

That the efforts of those who favored the people's rights brought results is shown by the returns from the polls. Those in favor of the Sunday movies carried every ward. Figures compiled from early returns tell their own story. They follow by wards:

	For Sunday Movies	Against
First Ward.....	1,261	599
Second Ward.....	1,617	767
Third Ward.....	1,331	1,094
Fourth Ward.....	1,622	566
Total	5,831	3,026

Going further even than the figures shown in the returns to indicate how great was the majority in favor of opening the theatres on Sundays, was the large number of letters received by the workers during the campaign. These letters numbered ten in favor, for every one against the move for which the people were agitating.

First National May Enter Production Field

Will Co-operate with Independent Producers and Directors

By RICHARD A. ROWLAND

IN accepting the position of general manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., from which J. D. Williams has just resigned, I realize that I am assuming responsibility that few men can hope to fulfil so completely and satisfactorily as did "J. D." If I can win the degree of confidence, loyalty and co-operation of the trade which he inspired I shall be more than content. In leaving First National to embark upon his more personal enterprises, Mr. Williams takes with him my own and my associates' best wishes for the success he so well deserves. There is ample room in this great industry for men with the vision and force to achieve which has distinguished his career with First National.

Our company, with which I have been associated since its inception, is, as is well known, co-operative in nature. Briefly stated, my policy will be to execute the wishes of our franchise holders as crystallized by the board of directors and executive committee elected by them. There will be no radical changes because of my new connection with the firm.

First National has reached its prominent place in the industry in five short years because the men who founded and built it realize the necessity for the service such an organization can and must render to justify its existence. The personnel of the executives, board of directors and executive committee, who are Robert Lieber of Indianapolis, president; J. B. Clark of Pittsburgh, first vice-president; Jacob Fabian of Paterson, second vice-president; John H. Kunsky of Detroit, third vice-president; H. O. Schwalbe, chairman of executive committee and secretary-treasurer; A. H. Black of Des Moines; Col. Fred Levy of Louisville; N. H. Gordon of Boston; J. G. Von Herberg of Seattle; I. H. Rubin of Minneapolis, assure the same continuity of ideals and service upon which our company was founded and has thrived.

Associated First National is, first of all, a distributing organization absolutely devoted to keeping the market open to the independent producers of meritorious pictures. The independent production has been, is, and we hope will remain our principal source of supply. Reports that we are going into production on a big scale have recently been widely circulated. It is true that we may produce some pictures in accordance with certain ideas formulated by our directors at the recent meeting, but such production will take the direction of assisting directors and independent producers of promise to enter production rather than for our company to build up a vast organization and studios and itself become a big competitor in the production field.

We represent a great many fine theatres which offer a ready market. We cannot possibly produce enough pictures to supply these theatres, which require really big time attractions. Our experience has demonstrated that the individual producer who devotes his entire time and attention to the making of his pictures, one by one, will turn out a more artistic product than we could hope to do in mass production. Therefore the independent producer will always find an outlet through our organization for the very good reason that our future welfare and his own are dependent upon each other.

For example, we have recently contracted with M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios for two pictures to be directed by Maurice Tourneur, the first of which will be Crittenden Marriot's extraordinary novel of romance and adventure, "The Isle of Dead Ships." Allen Holubar will also do "The White Frontier" at the United Studios. Edwin Carewe is at present completing a picture at the Biograph Studios, the title of which has not been decided upon. Sam Rork and Jimmie Young left for the coast last week with a contract for several James Young Productions. Mr. Young has still to direct "Trilby," for Richard Walton Tully, before beginning upon his own series.

Negotiations are under way with several other directors and producers, and while our company is interested with these gentlemen, it is upon much the same general lines as our former production affiliations. In a word, our policy will be to encourage capable directors to improve their production, for there is no doubt of the strong public demand for better and more intelligently made pictures.

With the demand for a constantly improving grade of pictures, there has also arisen the necessity for some sort of national advertising and exploitation of these more expensive productions. Our company is seeking a way to spend money upon national advertising which will prove of real benefit at the box office. We realize the difficulty and complexity of the problem and are testing several methods with the object of ascertaining what kind of advertising to use and how much money to spend in order to benefit without burdening the exhibitor with increased rentals. After all is said and done, national advertising which does not increase theatre business is a loss and not a gain to the industry. The really good picture will, to a great extent, sell itself because of word-of-mouth advertising.

With so many big-time pictures being released in such a brief season this fall, our company felt the necessity of assisting the exhibitor with some national advertising. Varying campaigns have been laid for "East is West," "Brawn of the North, "Omar the Tentmaker," Richard Barthelmess in "Fury," John Stahl's "The Dangerous Age" and other of our exceptional fall releases, all of which will be advertised nationally. We will watch closely the effect of this advertising, which has been designed to bring business to the theatre, and hope eventually to find the method and limit of expenditure upon which to base a really helpful and profitable national advertising program.

Our exploitation staff has now been functioning for several months and the splendid energy and initiative of our field exploitation agents has brought many commendatory letters in response to inquiries we have made of exhibitors as to the value to them of this corps of trained exploitation men.

In conclusion, Associated First National will undergo no radical changes because of my connection with it. Any production experience I may have gained will be devoted to the assistance of our independent producers. I am firmly convinced that care and intelligence in selection of story and production have more to do with successful pictures than lavish expenditures of spectacular settings. Until negative costs come to represent less waste, there will never be the proper profit in motion pictures for either producer, distributor or exhibitor.

"Pop" Dibble Has Exhibited 50 Years, "Movies" Just 26

I HAVE been showing pictures on the screen just fifty years—first by stereopticon and then the very first production, just twenty-six years ago, of motion pictures."

That is the latest claim for the title of "The Daddy of Them All," presented by John P. Dibble, who signs himself "projectionist, press agent, manager, proprietor, of the Park Theatre, Branford, Conn." And the claim is backed up by the intensely interesting history of a real pioneer in the motion picture business. Read on.

"I note that you are looking for the oldest exhibitor in the business," writes Mr. Dibble. "I believe myself to be the original pioneer exhibitor of this 'neck o' woods' and of the State of Connecticut, and probably of New York State, as well as the New England States."

The writer mentions a recent story which stated that he had just booked his "first Paramounts," whereas he has been showing motion pictures "for many, many years since the Paramount Company started in business," and he at that time booked No. 1 of their productions and has played "every picture they ever made since that time up to this year's output, which I am now playing." Looks to us as though Paramount's story about Brother Dibble WAS a bit off.

"Also," he continues, "I've never noticed any 'wrapping paper' signs lying around. My bills for posters, lithographs and printing for the past fifty years in the show business do not suggest same.

"But now as to my biography. I was born right here (as also were my parents, grand-parents and great grand-parents before me) in Branford, Conn. The date was August 22, 1853, so I am now 69 years of age—and still climbing the ladder to the projection room like a blooming monkey, for I always have been and still am my own projectionist as well as an exhibitor, which fact probably accounts for my failing, up to the present writing, to get rich in the business, as most of the other fellows have done.

"I have been showing pictures on the screen just 50 years—first by stereopticon and then the very first production, just 26 years ago, of motion pictures, then only 30 feet and the longest 50 feet in length, by the Lumiere Co., Lyons, France; by Thomas A. Edison, at West Orange, N. J.; "Pop" Lubin in the basement, down cellar, of his Philadelphia optical store, and other oldtimers, the Biograph, Vitagraph, Mr. Waters and others of New York.

"In 1872 I was only 19 years of age. With my brother, Frank H. Dibble, two years younger, who is dead, we having managed to get $5.00 in cash, I went to Philadelphia and purchased of C. T. Milligan, then in business on Chestnut street, a dissolving view, oxy-hydrogen stereopticon outfit and 150 or more views for same—200 views it was.

"With these I returned to Branford and gave my first exhibition, 'A Grand Trip Around the World,' in the Town Hall, which still stands directly opposite my present theatre. My father—we were genuine Yankee farmer boys—presented us with a dandy pair of black horses and had built for us at the East Haven wagon shop a big covered red wagon, which I'll say right now was some wagon for those days, and we started out on our positively first grand tour of the United States—and we made good, too, for two kids.

"Frank was 17, I was 19, also a brother four years older, C. W. Dibble, and still living out on the old homestead here in Branford, did some advance work for us. We stuck to the road year after year, showing all the Connecticut towns, also Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine, Rhode Island, New York State, New Jersey, the Long Island towns, etc.

"But this was all stereopticon work, for the moving picture had not then been produced. But—mark this date—in 1896 I learned that Thomas A. Edison had produced his 'Kinetoscope.' I went to West Orange, N. J., to his phonograph factory and purchased of him the first Kinetoscope that was ever shown in this State (Connecticut), also 25 or more of his films, some 30 feet long and the longest 50 feet in length.

"These were the longest films that had been made at that time, but they were not enough for a complete evening's entertainment, so I put up the Kinetoscope beside my stereopticon, showed a film, then switched over and showed a dozen or so views, then another film.

"The Kinetoscope, 26 years old, I have yet in my attic, also some of those old 50 and 30-foot films, and stereopticon views, some of them 50 years old. The Kinetoscope was a small wooden affair, with mechanism like your grandfather's clock. It had no stand, but was placed on a table, or empty box, any old way. It had what they called a 'spool rack,' to run the film continuously; that is, to repeat the film, by splicing the ends together, making the film an endless chain.

"So I used to run the film through once; then, as the audience encored same, I would repeat it, and again the third time, if they wanted it. It took very little to delight the public in those days. 'The Black Diamond Express' coming head on, or 'A Charge of German Cavalry' would near throw them out of their seats. And when we showed just 'The Surf at Long Branch' they would jump for fear of being totally drowned. (And we, nowadays, laugh at stories of African savages seeing a film for the first time.—Ed.)

"Nowadays we have to have bigger thrills to thrill them very much. As to comedies, if a cow in a 30-foot film kicked over the milk-stand, with a bucket of real milk, or a Chink got hung by his pig-tail to a lamp-post, or a lunch room waiter got a custard pie slammed all over his face, or the barber gave his hick customer a remarkably rough shave, or even a very small coon tried to get outside a very large slice of 'water-million,' why, any one of these, in those days, was a howling scream. But at that they weren't much worse than our present-day comedies.

"I continued on the road, playing one night to one week and sometimes two week stands. In 1896 I showed the first picture ever showed in New Haven—showed it for G. B. Bushnell in his Crown Street Music Hall Opera House (since destroyed by fire), also at Warner Hall, New Haven, and later many other halls and churches in New Haven.

"The night, just one year after the Manila Bay battle, 'Dewey Day' celebration, I showed the battleships, etc., on the New Haven Green to over 20,000 people. For music we had the old Second Regiment Band. I then showed practically all the Connecticut towns, including two weeks in Unity Hall, Hartford, to big business.

"There was no opposition anywhere, for we were positively the first. The people didn't know what the movies were, for they had never seen them nor even heard of them. Our advertising was mostly explaining what they were and that they positively were NOT stereopticon views. And they came out of curiosity, as they had, of course, heard of Edison, his phonograph and other inventions. I had a big Edison concert phonograph also with the show, though when I first put on the movies I had to use quite a small phonograph, as Edison had not then produced the other.

"As I mentioned, I was the first and original pioneer all through this section. I called my show 'The Thomas A. Edison Moving Pictures, John P. Dibble, Manager, and afterwards, 'Dibble Brothers Pictures, John P. Dibble, Manager.'

"As noted, the people had heard

It Looks Like a Family of Them

This search for the oldest dyed-in-the-wool exhibitor waxes serious. There's such a race for the honor that it begins to look as though there won't be one Daddy of Them All but a family of them. Letters recently received indicate this. They are from real oldtimers and you want to watch for their publication. First come, first served, is our motto, so if your history doesn't appear this week or next, have patience, for it will appear when its turn comes.

Incidentally, we can see where we are going to have a tough job passing on the entries. Three or four started when motion pictures did—in 1896—and to find the Daddy would be to get down to a matter of days. And there are several real oldtimers we haven't heard from yet. One of them is I. W. Rodgers of the Criterion Theatre, Poplar Bluff, Mo. We'd like to hear from him.—S. S.

of Edison and occasionally an old lady or gentleman would ask to be presented to 'The Wizard,' but we had to sorrowfully announce that Mr. Edison, unfortunately, was not present that trip. After we had been showing the 30 and 50-foot films about a year, the first then to show moving pictures in our territory was the Lyman Howe Company.

"In New York State I played annually for many, many years, until my name, I know, was a household word. Those were the days, I'll tell the world. . . . Oh, boy! We didn't do a thing to them in Auburn but turn them away for two weeks sure!

"Then, from New York State, down through Pennsylvania, Scranton, Wilkes-Barre, etc. Also New Jersey, Ohio and Indiana towns. Also several trips through Canadian towns. Also in winter sometimes south as far as Jacksonville, Fla.

"Note, I gave the first picture show in New Haven, or in Connecticut, in 1896, also the first one and first show of any kind given in Library Hall, Branford, our million-dollar, Tennessee marble show building. This was 26 years ago. Also the first pictures ever shown at Savin Rock, New Haven's summer resort, in the railroad company's old theatre, and afterward the first show ever given in White City, Savin Rock, in the old Airdome, etc., and more than 50 other theatres in which I have shown have since been destroyed by fire. But yours truly didn't do it! I'll say right here that I have yet to burn my first foot of film.

"Six years ago I moved into this Park Theatre, Branford, and am still on the job seven nights per week and Saturday matinee. I have not missed a date in the projection room since I opened here, and I have no recollection of ever losing a date on the road.

"In the early days of the movies I hailed from New Haven, as I rented a home there for my family in order to get for my son the benefit of the New Haven High School and Yale, from which he graduated and 'made good.' I had in the old 'stereo' show days met and married his mother in Richmond, Indiana, and we are still living happily. Thanks.

"In those other days of the movies, of course, we had to buy films outright. No one probably in or out of the business dreamed of such a thing as renting films as today. And as for a show in an ordinary town every night, why man, just give them about three or four movie shows a year and Mr. Opera House local manager would remark, 'Dibble, we're picture-showed to death.'

"I used to go to West Orange to the Edison factory and select my films personally, and afterward Mr. Waters opened a sales office for the Edison Company in New York, and I bought of him personally, month after month, and year after year. Also of Biograph, Vitagraph and others. I have some of their films yet, and in fair condition, strange as it may seem to those who now find a three months' old film often junk. I plan to give an anniversary, real old-time show, with my 26-year old film, and my 50-year-old stereo slides, old Civil War, colored slides, etc.

"Also I used to run down to Philadelphia and down in his basement, down cellar under his optical store, Pop Lubin would run off, himself, personally and on his own make of machine (say, you ought to see that machine) his comedies, etc., for me to inspect.

"Mr. Nicholas Power, at that time, had a small office and workroom in a loft of a Nassau street building, and many time I would take down some of my old films, which my people had all seen, and exchange same with him, for he usually had a trunk half full or so of films. His daughter, I remember, had charge of the place when he was out on some job, and they two were the entire outfit of the establishment. I was there when he was planning the model of his first machine and I remember very well his showing the working of the machine to me, and of my giving him a point or two as a practical operator as to some things desirable in a picture machine—not yet made—and had and used one of the first machines he made and I have it yet.

"Many years after, in his Gold street factory, when ordering one of his later machines, Mr. Power introduced me to a friend, or customer, as 'Mr. Dibble, the original old-time pioneer of them all.' So that was his opinion. In those later days Brother Richardson, of your Projection Department, was inspector of all machines at the Power factory, and I met him there several times. Well, anyway, I have stuck to the job from the time they all called me 'Johnnie' to the present time, when every exchange manager in the big New Haven Film Exchange building greets me kindly as 'Pop' Dibble, and they are all my friends, and good friends, too.

"Now, Brother Smith, I am quite positive I am just what you call a real, 'Simon-pure, dyed-in-the-wool,' 'honest-to-gosh' exhibitor. I was pretty near born in the business. I've been in it all my life and I expect now to die in it, but not as long as I can see the movies move."

Exclusive Theatre in Albany Bought by Massachusetts Man

The most important transaction in local picture circles in several months occurred this past week, when the Pine Hills Theatre, located in the exclusive residential section of Albany, was acquired by C. L. Gardner of Shelburne Falls, Mass. The house has been owned by Harry Lazarus, one of the most popular exhibitors in the city. The theatre has the distinction of being located the farthest from the business centre of any house in Albany, being fully two miles from downtown. It was built in 1913 and seats about 600. The new owner has already taken possession of the house, and promises to be an active figure in local film circles. He was present at Friday's meeting of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association. Mr. Lazarus has not announced his future plans.

Elmer Griffin, who handles the Opera House in Kinderhook, made a trip along Albany's Film Row this week.

Elmer Crowninshield, who handles the Bijou in Troy, has just taken over the Hudson in Watervliet.

The Palace in Troy, which went over to a second-run theatre on October 30, has announced that it will return to first-runs on November 6, but that it will combine two acts of vaudeville with a feature picture and a news reel, for an admission of 25 cents.

Friday's meeting of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association for the re-election of officers, lacked a quorum, and an adjournment was taken to next Thursday.

John Moran, of Coxsackie, handling Dolan's Opera House there, in town this week purchasing film, reports business as good and that he is now running five nights a week.

Ben Appel, who runs the American in Troy, a first-run house, has just bought "Grandma's Boy" for a second-run.

R. V. Erk, who controls the picture situation in Ilion through the "Big Ben" and the "Temple," made a round of the exchanges in Albany this week.

William Shirley, managing the Strand in Schenectady, reports that he has booked "Oliver Twist" for the Electric City directly following its run in New York. Mr. Shirley has allowed the Albany Theatre in Schenectady to take "East is West" off his franchise.

F. J. Schine, of Gloversville, who recently purchased the Colligan in Carthage, is now negotiating for the lease of the Hippodrome in the same village. This house is owned by Mr. Dolan and leased to Thomas George.

William Berinstein, owner of the Colonial and Hudson in this city, and who has lately taken up his residence in New York City, was in town Saturday.

John Christie, who owns the new Strand in Watervliet, formerly known as the Third Avenue Theatre, is improving the front of his house and making it most attractive.

The picture theatre in Bliss, N. Y., the City Theatre in Dalton, N. Y., and the Crescent Theatre in Silver Springs, N. Y., have all been closed permanently.

Paul Roberts of the Albany in Schnectady, has just booked "Skin Deep" for an early showing.

Exhibitors in this section were interested this week in the announcement that the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation is about to open up an office in Albany. S. Eckman, jr., vice-president of the company, spent two or three days here this past week looking over available locations. The branch will be located in Film Row and will be handled by Victor Bendel, as resident manager. Mr. Bendel has been connected with Goldwyn for some little time past. With the opening of the new exchange there will be fourteen exchanges in this city.

The Strand Theatre in Watertown, owned by John C. Lamon, may be acquired in the near future by the J. M. Schine company of Gloversville. The Avon now holds the lease of the property. The theatre is one of the newer and smaller ones of the city, and is located in the business center.

Write Your Own Title

The crowd begged piteously for tickets. Standing by the thousands outside of John Brown's modest theatre, their voices were raised in pleas for the right to enter. Inside, every seat was taken. The cashier was industriously at work with the adding-machine, perspiration giving her well-powdered face a mottled aspect. One of the ushers had been dispatched post haste for more rolls of tickets. It was 3 o'clock in the morning and still the throng waited a chance to enter and see the great picture. John Brown, his heart pumping joyously, his face wreathed in smiles, assured the people that all would have their chance to see the film, if he had to run it until the projectionist dropped from sheer fatigue.

As John Brown was speaking, discordant notes began to come from the piano. The pianist's head drooped and her shoulders sagged. A mist seemed to rise and envelop the interior, gradually dimming the picture on the screen. Voices expostulated in a steadily increasing crescendo. John Brown began to shake all over; he trembled from head to foot. Then a flash of light smote his eyes and they opened. The alarm clock was jangling at a tremendous rate and h is wife bent over him, shaking him from his slumbers.

"Time to get up," she said. "You'd better get busy on that new picture; you said it needed a lot of exploitation and a team of horses to drag them in to see the piece of cheese."—S. S.

Penn-State Co. Opens Its $800,000 Uniontown House

Monday evening, October 30, saw the opening of the Penn-State Amusement Company's new $800,000 State Theatre at Uniontown, Pa. This is a 2,000-seat house and plays both road shows and feature photoplays. Some of the local film people who have seen the new State say it is the finest theatre between New York and Chicago, bar none. Eighteen months were used in building from plans prepared by Thomas W. Lamb of New York City. Frontage is 73 feet and depth, 150 feet.

The palatial new house is the enterprise of the Penn-State Amusement Company, pioneer purveyor of high class pictures in Uniontown. The firm is composed of C. H. Gorley, president; C. H. McCloskey, vice-president; O. M. Boughner, treasurer, and F. E. Mertz, general manager. C. H. McCloskey is managing director of the Penn-State's three Uniontown houses, the State, 2,000 seats; the Penn, 1,000 seats, and the Imp, 500 seats. The Penn and Imp show pictures only. Frank Ray, at the present time shipper for the Pittsburgh branch office of the Film Booking Offices, and one of the best known of the local film boys, will blossom forth as a theatre manager when the new Lincoln is opened sometime during November at 2416 Wylie avenue in the Herron Hill District, Pittsburgh. The new Lincoln is just being completed after having been under construction for the past six months. L. Moogerman is owner of the new house.

George Wilson, of the Wilson Theatre, Tyrone, Pa., recently made a trip to Baltimore, Md., to look over his theatre in that city. Wilson divides his time between the two towns.

Lewis Bochert and H. S. Oss, both of Cumberland, Md., have taken over the Palace Theatre at Hyndman, Pa. Mr. Oss is resident manager of the house, and the name has changed to the Grand. It is open three nights a week.

A. H. Miller, formerly of the Court Theatre, Washington, Pa., has taken over John Conners' Regent in the same town.

On November 1, the Grand Theatre at McDonald, Pa., formerly the Louvoy, was opened by its new owner, S. J. Pusateri. The House has been closed for the past six months and was formerly conducted by Louis Voye. The Grand seats 565 and the new owner has the best wishes of the film fraternity for his success in McDonald.

A. M. Robertson and Max Little, merchants of Eldersville, Pa., are remodeling a storeroom in that town and expect to open a picture theatre within the next few weeks. The two owners were in town recently, buying chairs and equipment and also arranging for films. The house will seat 300 but only 200 chairs will be installed for the present.

Milan Salovitch of the National Theatre, Johnstown, in company with Dr. Sanderson, also of the Flood City, went fishing the other day. The two left about five o'clock in the morning and returned about seven in the evening. The total amount of fish caught between them was only one. Maybe better luck next time.

George Panagatocas of the Grand Amusement Co., Johnstown, Pa., has secured the services of Leo Conrad as publicity man for his three theatres. Mr. Conrad is a new-comer in the picture game, but seems to have taken hold of his new position with a will to make good.

W. G. Maute, proprietor of the Grand Theatre, Irwin, Pa., has purchased a plot of ground in one of the best of locations in his town and is having plans drawn for an 800-seat theatre building. Maute says that he will build a thoroughly up-to-date show-house, including a stage and complete equipment thereto.

B. E. Coupler, of the Bijou Theatre, Washington, has taken over A. H. Miler's Court Theatre in the same town. The Court, which is a 442-seat house, was closed by its owner for remodeling and the re-opening was held Monday, October 30. Chalmer Coupler, son of the owner, will look after the interests of the Court.

Morris Barsky, well-known to local film people, as having been formerly the owner of the Juniata Theatre, Juniata, Pa., has entered upon his new duties as manager of Max Engleberg's Strand and Liberty Theatres in McKees Rocks.

Weekly Framed Bulletins to Show Public Indorsed Films

Thirty-one framed weekly bulletins, in as many prominent points in the city, will hereafter herald to the public the motion pictures to be shown in the various Atlanta theatres which have the indorsement of the Better Films Committee of Atlanta. Each of the ten hotels will have one of the bulletins and the others will be distributed in prominent gathering places and clubs throughout the city. Through the Inter-Civic Council these indorsed films will also be announced each week to members of Rotary, Kiwanis, Civitans, Lions and Masonic clubs at their weekly luncheons, also at the meetings of the Committee on Inter-Church Co-operation.

The Atlanta Better Films Movement has taken such strides that its actions are receiving national comment and attention, and the secretary is compelled to answer an avalanche of mail responding to inquiries from all over the United States relative to the working methods of the committee.

W. R. Bedelle, manager of the Rialto, Atlanta, where "When Knighthood Was in Flower" opened an extended run on November 6, has plastered the town with advertising. An advertising banner 150 feet long and five feet high was displayed at the Tech-Notre Dame football game recently.

The Fairfax Theatre, Miami, Fla., recently took advantage of the presence of the Rex Ingram company in that city to prepare a sketch with parts for Alice Terry, Ramon Navarro and Edward Connelly, who appeared at the theatre three nights to S. R. O. business.

Laurence T. Lester, the genial Columbia, S. C., magnate, has sent cards to his friends announcing his entry into a law practice, in addition to his theatrical endeavors in Columbia and elsewhere.

Among the Southern exhibitors seen on Film Row, Atlanta, during the week are the following: Luther W. Jacobs, Strand, Nashville, Tenn.; F. E. Williams, Grand Theatre, Winter Haven, Fla.; W. S. Mudd and B. H. Mooney, Birmingham, Ala.; M. J. Sparks, Jacksonville, Fla.

E. F. Dardine, manager of the Charlotte Universal exchange, is the only film exchange manager who is a member in good standing of the North Carolina M. P. T. O. Mr. Jardin was largely active in the last year censorship fight in North Carolina and he has been so energetic in behalf of furthering the interests of the exhibitor of North Carolina that the executive committee a year ago voted him a member in good standing, notwithstanding the fact that the by-laws forbid such membership. But now Mr. Dardine is a full-fledged exhibitor, having complete charge of the management of the Strand Theatre, Charlotte, operated by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

M. A. Lightman, of Little Rock and Nashville, has purchased a $10,000 pipe organ to install in his Rex Theatre, Eldorado, Ark.

M. Van Praag Resigns

M. Van Praag has resigned as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas. According to his letter of resignation, he is about to embark upon an important venture in the industry which will take up all of his time and attention. R. G. Liggett, formerly vice-president of the organization, has filled the vacancy made by Van Praag.

"The national organization," said Mr. Van Praag in his letter, "has been pressing me to devote some of my time to Movie Chats, which are sponsored by them, and also some of my time to the office of national recording secretary, which I have held for the past three years. All of this I must turn down, for the enterprize upon which I am embarking will take all of my time.

"In resigning I would be doing a great injustice if I did not express my appreciation and thanks to R. G. Liggett, who will now be president, and each and every one of the members of the organization for their wonderful support and co-operation during my administration, and want to assure them that my service will be always at the disposal of the organization and at their call."

Canada

To enjoy holiday patronage three times within eleven days has been the good fortune of exhibitors in Ottawa, Ontario. A government holiday was declared for Wednesday, November 1, this being All Saints Day. This was followed by the Canadian Thanksgiving Day on Monday, November 6, after which Saturday, November 11, was generally recognized as a holiday for government departments and others. The holiday situation does not bother any other Canadian city as much as it does Ottawa, the capital, where almost every holy day, bank holiday and legal holiday is observed.

All four of the main picture theatres in Ottawa, Ontario, have been specializing in the presentation of programs for all-week engagements. For several weeks the leading theatres have had weekly runs and the list for the week of November 6 was as follows: Centre Theatre, "East Is West;" Imperial, "Don't Doubt Your Wife;" Regent, "The Valley of Silent Men," and Loew's, "Love Is An Awful Thing."

San Francisco's Portola to Be Improved; Clement Pleased

The Portola Theatre will be closed at an early date and thoroughly renovated and redecorated. It will be reopened with an extended engagement of "Dr. Jack," which Eugene H. Roth secured while on his recent trip to New York.

Van B. Clement, who took charge of the Imperial Theatre the first of August, is greatly pleased with the showing that has been made by this house since then. But four pictures have been shown in the past fourteen weeks, with "Manslaughter" holding the record for the longest run.

The Orpheum Circuit Third of a Century Anniversary Week, celebrated the last of October, had a special significance to local theatregoers, since it was in this city that the circuit was founded. Incidentally, the Orpheum Theatre was one of the first to show moving pictures here, first as a novelty but since then as a part of the regular program. The circuit now includes more than fifty theatres, and these, with their subsidiary houses, have an average weekly attendance of 4,410,000.

The Theatre Equipment Supply Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000 by Roy M. Coombs, Clarence Burchett and Helena F. Randall, all of San Francisco.

The new Curran Theatre on Geary street is to be given over to a four-week's run on "When Knighthod Was in Flower," commencing November 12. This will be the first time that moving pictures have been shown in this house.

The Century Theatre on Ellis street, which has been dark for several weeks, will be reopened shortly with an extended run on "Oliver Twist."

W. Stuart Webster, of Webster's Granada Theatre, Woodland, Cal., paid a visit to the coast metropolis recently to arrange his bookings. He combines pictures and vaudeville part of the time and finds that this meets with general approval.

Frank R. Macaulay, formerly of San Francisco, but now owner of the Unique Theatre, Santa Cruz, is making frequent business trips here, coming up by automobile in about three hours.

The California Theatre celebrated its fifth anniversary the first week of November with a special program, the feature attraction of which was "The Face in the Fog."

Holland Hudson, of New York, spent some time recently at San Francisco investigating the moving picture industry for the federal trade board.

Good Fellowship Prevails at Chicago Get-Together Dinner

It was a case of the lion and the lamb sitting down to dinner together Monday night, October 30, when the Film Board of Trade turned out en masse at a "get-together" banquet at the Morrison Hotel with the officials of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners—if you could apply the term "lamb" to either of these organizations. It was a fine dinner, with about 200 present, and a fine spirit of good feeling prevailed.

Joe Friedman, of Celebrated Players, was toastmaster, introducing each speaker in a manner than drew a big laugh. H. O. Martin, of Pathe, gave the first speech, giving the aims and ideals of the organization, and what the film industry, as a whole, might accomplish. Martin Quigley, editor of the Exhibitors' Herald, spoke about the importance of the salesman to the industry.

A salesman's response was given to Mr. Quigley's talk by A. W. Friemel, of the Paramount organization. He stated that many of the unpleasant dealings between exhibitor and exchange, due to unscrupulous salesmen, had gone forever, and he foretold a time when they would further get together and break down the unpleasantness of the business.

L. M. Rubens, president of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, made a brief talk in which he said he "would have thought twice before coming into the exchange crowd like this two years ago." He added that the get-together meeting was the finest thing he had ever seen in the business and more of them were wanted and needed.

J. M. Dibelka, member of the Arbitration Committee, gave a brief resume of the work of that body, stating that more than 500 cases of dispute between exhibitor and exchange had been settled, and there were only two instances when the vote was not unanimous. Then, as an exhibitor, he gave several methods by which unpleasantness might be ironed out between the exhibitor and exchange.

The New Tiffin Theatre opened Monday night, October 30, with a flourish that eclipsed even the newest downtown house's recent opening.

The house was profusely decorated with great baskets of flowers sent by exchanges an friends of the manager, V. Lynch, and the opening prograi went off without any of the ra edges usually seen at such pei formances. The opening featur was "Skin Deep." The prograi included "Pardon My Glove" an a scenic novelty as well as new events. Ambrose Larsen, organ ist, played specialties on the fin new organ, and Walter Kip kowski, conductor, received great ovation at the conclusion o the orchestra's splendid renditio of "Il Gaurany."

The new theatre was built o the site of the former Tiffi Theatre at 1743 N. Crawfor avenue. It is splendidly designed a comfortable, home-like atmos phere pervading, and bids fair t be the popular theatre of th vicinity.

A First National Release

HIS FIRST LOOK EVIDENTLY WAS A GOOD ONE

How the Hippodrome Theatre, Corbin, Ky., sold "The Lotus Eater" as part of its private First National Week. He had never seen a woman until he was twenty-five, and then he saw this. Gee!

Louisville Picture Houses Outdraw Stage Attractions

Louisville picture houses are handling a very fine run of business due to excellent weather conditions, along with the fact that the theatres handling stage attractions are hitting into bad luck. The Gayety Theatre recently closed its doors, while the Buckingham, also known as the Jefferson, is now merely a boxing arena. The Shubert has been dark for a couple of weeks, and Macauley's has been dark part time.

The National, running pictures (features) along with vaudeville, is the only theatre putting on regular stage attractions, and it is changing bills twice a week. The Mary Anderson is running pictures exclusively this season. The Walnut hasn't shown anything but pictures in the past several years. Therefore, with stage attractions reduced to a minimum and fall weather the best in years, the screen houses are handling unusually good business.

The Kentucky Court of Appeals, at Frankfort, Ky., affirmed decision of the Kentucky Circuit Court, sentencing James Powers to the electric chair for shooting and killing Morris Lee, exhibitor of Covington, some months ago, when a band of criminals shot Lee from a motor car as Lee's car was parking in front of his home in Covington. Powers, in company with Isaiah McKnight and George Saunders, were alleged to have followed Lee home with the intention of robbing him of the satchel containing receipts. The men escaped, but were later rounded up.

Thieves entered the Rex Theatre at Hopkinsville, Ky., on October 22, stole a 500-pound safe, which apparently was removed from a rear door with a motor truck. The safe contained $289 belonging to the Crescent Amusement Co., of Nashville, which has theatres at Hopkinsville, Clarksville, Bowling Green and other points. Manager M. L. Stockley also lost $50. Arrests have been made.

James Carrigan, manager of the Aristo Theatre, at Second and A streets, Louisville, has been released from an assault charge preferred by August Neurath, deputy sheriff, who sent word to the trial that he did not care to prosecute. Some weeks ago Carrigan was indicted. Neurath served a summons on Carrigan in a suit some time ago, and was a bit ugly about it, it is said, so Carrigan thrashed him.

Carl Rettick, formerly manager in Louisville for the Mary Anderson and National theatres, and well known to the film interests, now manager of the Alpine Hotel, upon his return from the hotel on October 27, found Mrs. Rettig dead on the floor of their apartment. Mrs. Rettig was suffering from an abscessed tooth and took an overdose of medicine. She is survived by her husband, two brothers, Roy Davis, Honaker, Va.; Guy Davis, Burnett, Kan., and four sisters, Mrs. T. Tennis and Mrs. M. New York Theatre Burns Day Before Management Changes

Fire of unknown origin destroyed the Park Theatre in Bath, N. Y., on the afternoon of October 29, entailing a loss of about $20,000. The fire was discovered on the roof over the stage. The firemen had the blaze under control after a hard hour's work but not until the house was a mass of ruins. The Park was owned by W. P. Murphy, who leased it to Charles H. Thomas. Mr. Thomas had arranged to turn the Park over to the Associated Theatres Corporation the next day. The town is now without a theatre, but the Comerford Amusement Company of Scranton, has taken an option on the Bath National Bank property, fronting on Liberty street, and J. R. Cadeset, representing the Comerford interests, announces that a modern theatre will be constructed thereon as soon as arrangements can be completed. The house will be fitted for stores and offices in front, with the theatre in the rear reached by an entrance from Liberty street. It will seat 1,400.

Immense crowds greeted Albert Hay Malotte, who made his debut as organist at Shea's Hippodrome last Sunday. Mr. Malotte played a masterful program on the new organ. He comes to Buffalo from the Liberty Theatre, Seattle. The music program at Shea's Hippodrome is now one of the big attractions and M. Shea is to be congratulated on his efforts to give Buffalonians the "limit" in modern picture theatre entertainment. In addition to the organ, there is a 40-piece symphony orchestra and usually a vocal soloist, a noted conductor, an instrumental novelty or quartette. Mr. Shea is now trying to get Victor Herbert to come to Buffalo as guest conductor for a week.

When Ralph W. Thayer presented a Fashion Review at the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., last week he put it on in great style. He constructed a runaway from the stage out over the orchestra seats, much after the style of the "Passing Shows" and installed special lighting effects the better to show the latest styles on the living models. The Strand orchestra played a fine program during the promenade. The attraction made a big hit.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, accompanied by M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the public service committee, and Carl Von Hoffman of "Movie Chats," came to Buffalo on October 30 and addressed a meeting in the Palace Theatre, attended by Howard J. Smith, president of the local Cohen unit; Jim Wallingford of General Theatres' Corporation; the Michael brothers of the Plaza, C. D. Dillemuth of the Broadway Lyceum, Judge John W. Schatt of the Fredonia Opera House, Sidney C. Allen of the Science, Medina; Fenton Lawlor of the Hodkinson exchange and a few others. From Buffalo President Cohen and his associates, including Mr. Smith, journeyed to Rochester for a meeting with exhibitors in that city.

It was a merry week for Bruce Fowler, who left town November 4 to assume the management of the Indiana Theatre in Terre Haute, Ind. The former Elmwood managing director was the guest at several parties. We refuse to mention where, but they do say as how it was about 100 proof. Another week like that and Bruce would never leave Buffalo. Elmer G. Winegar is now guiding the reins at the Elmwood. Bruce is on the job in the wild west town. Here's wishing you success, Bruce!

A new Community Hall has been opened in Catatonk, N. Y., where pictures and other entertainment will be given. Three hundred attended the opening November 2.

The Mark-Strand, Buffalo, is about to stage a regular old time comeback. Commencing the week of November 26, this pioneer Buffalo picture house will present several months of week runs, beginning with "From Rags to Riches," followed by "Remembrance," "Sherlock Holmes," "Brothers Under the Skin," "The Sin Flood," and other big productions. Manager Eugene A. Pfeil is now making plans for some big exploitation campaigns to put the pictures over with a bang.

Bill Callahan, president of the Regorson Corporation of Rochester, was in Buffalo last week for the first time in two years.

The Criterion, Buffalo, the Shubert vaudeville house, opened last Sunday with a film show headed by "What's Wrong with the Women." Sol Myers, manager of the house, and Harry Marsey, general manager for Niagara Pictures Corporation, are putting on the film bills.

Several reels of film were destroyed in a fire that slightly damaged the Star Theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y., one day last week.

E. O. Weinberg, former manager of the Buffalo Strand and who is slated to manage the new Strand in Troy, N. Y., is now enjoying a well earned vacation in Atlantic City.

Virginia Pearson appeared in person at the Loew State, Buffalo, this week and Manager Al Beckerich put over a great line of tie-up ads with local stores, through a chain of which he conducted the screen star on a shopping tour.

The worst has happened! Billy West was seen in a downtown theatre one evening last week wearing large black framed glasses to which was attached a long black ribbon. Friends of the manager of the Premier can use their own judgment!

Buffalo exhibitors have been waging a great campaign against the retention of daylight saving and credit should go to J. H. Michael, president of the Western New York unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Inc., for a lot of good work to kill the ordinance. The result will be announced in a few days.

Great Opening Planned for St. Louis Rivoli, Nov. 11

The Rivoli Theatre, Universal's new first-run house, on Sixth near Olive street, St. Louis, opens on November 11 with "The Storm." Visitors expected are Will Hays, Carl Laemmle, F. H. Coldstein, Laemmle's secretary, and A. A. Schmidt, general sales director for Universal. A dinner will be given at the Hotel Statler November 13 to local newspaper men.

Frank E. Jones, veteran St. Louis theatrical man, who for twenty-five years was manager of the famed Pickwick Theatre, Washington and Jefferson avenues, was laid to rest at Overland, Mo., last Wednesday. He had been sick but a short time. Jones retired from active work in 1904. He was 76 years old. He was well known to all the old-time stars of the theatrical world.

Edward Scholl, one of the pioneer picture men of St. Louis, was another victim of the Grim Reaper the past week. Scholl, who represented the Second Ward in the Board of Aldermen, was buried at St. Matthews' Cemetery November 1. He was an associate of O. T. Crawford and also built the Bremen Theatre in North St. Louis. He quit the movies in 1915 when he sold the Bremen to Joe Mogler.

Harry Redmond of the Majestic Theatre, East St. Louis, Ill., put on a humane contest in conjunction with the East St. Louis Daily Journal to boost "Human Hearts," which played the Majestice for four days opening November 5. Daily prizes were awarded for the best stories telling of acts of human kindness. He also engaged Miss Sue Garvey, well known local soprano, to sing "The Heart of Humanity" during the picture's run, and had a phonograph in the lobby.

The Apple Blossom was opened November 9 at Hardin, Ill., with Tom Mix as the star attraction. A. S. Talley is the owner and manager of the new house.

It's Tough, Says Fred

Fred M. Shafer is managing director of the Lafayette Square Theatre, Buffalo. It's the largest house in town. Therefore, Fred got an awful shock when a woman patron knocked at the office door one evening last week and in loud voice demanded her money back, setting forth the while that she could not understand how the management permitted the organist to play so loudly IN SUCH A SMALL HOUSE. She insisted that more boys were killed on the fields of France by the concussion of shells than by the bullets themselves, so what chance had Lafayette patrons when C. Sharpe-Minor boomed forth "double forte."

It's a tough life, this theatre manager business, says Fred. The "Small" Lafayette seats something like 4,000 persons.

HERE'S FORBIDDEN FRUIT DOWN IN HAVANA

The Fauste theatre made a very pretty lobby, tableau for La Fruta Prohibida. Looking at the Americans lined up at the Cuban bars "The Fruits of Prohibition" would seem the better translation.

Think of It

Manager G. R. Phillips is now the envied of all his fellow Atlanta exhibitors. For be it known that the genial and likable "Pup," as he is known to his intimates, has been chosen as coach of the basketball team of a local girls' business college. Think of it, fellows, think of it! "Pup's" team went into action Tuesday, November 7, and we had it on good authority—"Pup's" word—that the other team hadn't a Chinaman's chance. We're waiting to hear the result.

Kansas City

News was received in Kansas City this week of the death of Justin D. Bowersock, sr., pioneer theatre owner of Lawrence, Kas. Mr. Bowersock, who was 80 years of age, died at his home after an illness of three weeks. Deepest regret was expressed by the entire film section here.

In 1880 he bought the old Liberty Hall in Lawrence and gave that town its first playhouse in the Bowersock Opera House. This building was destroyed by fire in 1911 and was replaced by a large structure known as the Bowersock Theatre.

Mr. Bowersock was known as an influential citizen, and from the time he settled in Lawrence he was an active factor in the development of the city. He was also active in politics having advanced from the position of mayor of Lawrence, through the State Legislature to several years in Congress.

A. J. Moeller, general manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was in Kansas City over the week-end, checking up on Movie Chat contracts and in the interest of the music tax. He left last week for the West Coast, where he will attend exhibitor conventions.

Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Andrews, owners of the Gem Theatre at Olathe, Kas., drove into town last week. Olathe is about thirty miles from Kansas City.

L. A. Wagner of the Princess Theatre, Eureka, Kas., was another visitor.

The executive offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri were moved last week from 811 Gloyd Building, Kansas City, to Suite 524, Rialto Building, this city.

W. H. Carson, owner of the Empress Theatre at Osawatomie, Kas., dropped around to the film exchange colony last week and looked over some of the big films.

Billy Wagner of the Best and Beldorf Theatres, Independence, Kas., was seen at some of the film exchanges the other day.

Atlanta Theatre Attendance Poor Despite Fine Pictures

As a usual thing, the first crisp, cool days of winter find picture theatres beginning to fill comfortably and business fine. The rule has failed to work so far this season although attendance in local houses has picked up in the past two or three weeks. Incidentally, the local houses have never seen the time when they were offering more thoroughly worthwhile programs.

The week closing November 4 found the Howard Theatre playing "To Have and to Hold," with a beautiful prologue, offering, as its main theme, Ernest R. Ball's old-time song, "To Have, to Hold, to Love," with a popular Atlanta duo singing the song. The Howard has always been praised for its splendid ventilation, and the management has found the happy medium between the too-great heat, and not enough. Business was better than the preceding week, closing splendidly.

The Metropolitan offered Gasnier's "Rich Men's Wives," with a splendid presentation by Buel B. Risinger, who came to Atlanta recently to direct the massive new symphony orchestra here and has established himself firmly in public favor. The picture drew as well as was expected.

At the Tudor, with its three-changes-a-week, the Friday-Saturday picture, Frank Mayo in "Wolf Law," drew better than any other picture through the week, although "Why Change Your Wife?" proved an interesting revival which played to good business on Wednesday and Thursday.

The Rialto played "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" for a week's fairly successful run, aided by some snappy advertising in the daily papers, some exceedingly well-placed poster stuff about town, and a small painted set with cut-outs placed above the marquise. The comedy was Al St. John's "The City Feller" and the week was satisfactory from the box-office standpoint.

The Strand had "The Sage Brush Trail" and Al St. John in a new comedy, "All Wet." Business was splendid for Monday and Tuesday, fell off considerably on Wednesday and Thursday, but rallied on Friday, and closed fine Saturday.

At the Alamo No. 1, "The Bootlegger's Daughter," an independent state-right feature, and two western re-issues played to a week's acceptable business.

The Bonita, with its policy of a tab show and one feature picture, used the Paramount feature, "Bought and Paid For," and reported good business and favorable comment from patrons. A Mack Sennett comedy closed the bill.

At the Alamo No. 2, "The Prisoner of Zenda" played the first four days of the week to much smaller business than the management expected, and the final two days of the week featured Clara Kimball Young's "What No Man Knows" and Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor-Made Man." Business was very good for Friday and Saturday, as if to make up for being disappointing the first two days.

The Vaudette has a policy of three changes a week, and Monday and Tuesday played "I Am the Law" to poor business; Wednesday and Thursday, "The Sting of the Lash," to excellent business, and Friday and Saturday "The Lady from Longacre," with a Mermaid Comedy, "Dynamite," to very good business.

The Alpha, with its program of daily changes, Westerns, serials and comedies, enjoyed its uniformly good business, with a faithful clientele built up through this sturdy little theatre's past year or more of good "action-stuff' pictures.

Manager W. R. Bedell, of the Rialto Theatre, could not be located in his office on Friday afternoon. The Tech football team was having a final bit of practice before going into the big game on Saturday at Grant Field. Manager Bedell is a Tech man. Whether there is any connection between the above items, we leave you to imagine!

A First National Release

PUTTING UP A BIG FLASH FOR SKIN DEEP

H. B. Clarke, of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis, paid only $10 for all this display and it helped to bring in an additional $225, which is a very neat profit on his moderate investment.

The pleasant smile of "Pat" Patterson was missing from the Metropolitan Theatre all week, as was the charming smile of Mrs. "Pat" from the office of the Weekly Film Review. The solution is that Mr. and Mrs. Willard Patterson sneaked quietly away last Monday for a brief run to New York, where they have been having a wonderful time, from all reports.

Manager James F. Jackson, of the Tudor, sloughed the cares of his office from his shoulders, donned disreputable clothes (on the testimony of Mrs. Jackson, that statement is made) and departed, with a happy grin, for a three-day hunting trip.

Southern Enterprises has copped off another brilliant young masculine genius, no less a person than Sammy Mayer, one of the brightest and most popular ornaments of the Atlanta baseball team. During the winter, Sammy will hold forth at the Lyric Theatre, as a member of the house-staff. But summer will find Sammy holding down his favorite spot in the Atlanta dug-out once more.

Manager W. T. Murray, of the Alamo No. 2, expresses his surprise quite frankly at the failure of "The Prisoner of Zenda" as a box-office attraction at his theatre. "It is a picture that has everything in the world to make it a knockout—and I confess that I am at a loss to understand its failure for me!" he said.

Manager John Thomas, of the Vaudette Theatre, is a native of Stephensville, Alabama, and during this sort of weather he has a hard time sticking to his desk—seems more natural, he intimates, if he could shoulder a gun, whistle to the "dawgs" and go "a'huntin' possums, coons and things." More natural, and a lot more fun!

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" opened an indefinite engagement at the Rialto on November 6, at a top price of $1. This is something of a new venture for a straight picture theatre here, pictures of this calibre usually going into the larger legitimate houses. The sale of reserved tickets, which opened October 30, has been quite brisk, and Manager Bedell is much encouraged thereat. The run of the picture will be watched with keen interest by other exhibitors.

Seems sort of natural to see the friendly grin on "Jack" Kaliska along Film Row. Jack, whose honest-to-goodness monicker is "W. G. Kaliska," but who is always hailed as "Jack," was formerly manager of the Rialto, where he made a host of friends for himself. He is now an insurance man, but visits here occasionally.

The Week in Review

A CERTAIN producer-distributor boldly asserted himself as being absolutely against the reviewing of any picture in what he characterized as "cold projection rooms." This gentleman had the following to say on what he terms an "important problem":

"No one is so intimately qualified to judge any picture in a projection room. It is unfair to the producer, to the distributor, to the director and to the entire trade in general. There is no picture made that should be forced to abide by a reviewers' opinion following such a showing. The place to review and judge pictures is in the theatre where an audience is present."

WE trust that the gentleman in question—and there are scores in the business who have advanced the same argument, namely, that pictures should be judged only when publicly exhibited—means just what he said. And we believe he did, for he has repeated the claim so often. As a rule, his argument has been permitted to stand unquestioned and unchallenged.

AMONG the things that this writer is paid for doing is one concerning the reviewing of independent pictures. We have reviewed hundreds of them in the past few years. So, perhaps, in disputing the contentions of the aforementioned gentleman, we are doing so as a member of that army which he "puts on the pan." Personally, whatever we say about any picture represents our own personal opinion, based on a knowledge obtained in this and the legitimate fields of public entertainment and personal contact with the public which pictures are made to entertain.

THE production cost of a picture is considered; so are the exhibition and territorial values. We maintain that a picture sold on a $10,000 basis should not be subjected to the same scrutiny as a $100,000 production. There is no comparison. The shopper when purchasing articles at a Woolworth store does not expect a Tiffany product. A producer with but $25,000 to make a picture can not be expected to turn out the same high class production that the man with four times that amount should produce. The exhibitor who buys a picture for $25 a day does not expect a $100-a-day feature. And the theatres charging ten cents, top, cannot be expected to compete with the high class attractions of a 55-cent house. It's not being done in any business—and when money is concerned the fundamentals in this industry are no different than those of other industries.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD reviewers take into consideration these facts; but, how many distributors do? Very few, we'll venture to say. Yet, the aforementioned gentleman disputes the right of a reviewer to judge a picture from a projection room showing. For the moment, let us consider what this very same distributor does: When a producer submits a production to him he requests a showing—a projection room showing. He judges, approves or rejects the picture as a result of this same projection room showing. And after purchasing the picture he invites prospective buyers to view the picture in a similar fashion—in the projection room. And the exhibitor buys on the impression he gets from this projection room showing.

DO distributors want us to believe that their own, self-chosen methods of judging a picture are wrong? Would they want us to believe that before they can consider the purchase of any picture the producer must arrange a public showing in a theatre with a capacity audience on hand? Would they want us to believe that every time an exchangeman comes to town they should lease a theatre so that the exchangeman-buyer can "get the proper angle"?

WE maintain that the present system of reviewing pictures is the correct one. We see no reason why pictures should not be judged at their projection room showings. Producers, distributors, exchangemen and exhibitors all judge pictures in that fashion—the one practical and logical method of properly analyzing the merit of pictures. If projection room reviewing is wrong then the entire sales system in this business is wrong. Think it over, gentlemen.

NEWS from the Coast this week is most encouragingly promising. There are more concededly masters of production and distribution coming into the independent market. Two newcomers are slated to make their identity known next week. These two gentlemen are well known, have produced some of the biggest and most consistent money-makers in the business and their invasion of the independent will be a tribute to the latter.

B. P. Schulberg Announces New Plan For Preferred Pictures, Inc.

Plans announced this week by B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, provide for the major part of his first year's releasing schedule through the Al Lichtman Corporation. When the releasing company was formed, Schulberg and Lichtman announced a policy of one picture a month and the program now made public takes care of the initial ten.

"Rich Men's Wives," released in September, was the first feature offered to exhibitors by the new organization. This has been followed by the Tom Forman production, "Shadows," featuring Lon Chaney. Next month's picture will be a screen version of Bertha M. Clay's celebrated novel and stage play, "Thorns and Orange Blossoms." This special attraction was made under the direction of Louis Gasnier with a cast headed by Estelle Taylor, Kenneth Harlan and Edith Roberts.

At the Schulberg studios two producing units work simultaneously on the specials for the Al Lichtman Corporation. One company is headed by Gasnier, the other by Tom Forman. At present the former has under way Gilbert Emery's stage success, "The Hero," which is to follow "Thorns and Orange Blossoms." Tom Forman is taking "Are You a Failure?" a screen original by Larry Evans, prominent magazine writer whom Schulberg has recently placed under contract. Upon the completion of "The Hero," Gasnier will start on "Poor Men's Wives," a story from the pens of Frank Dazey and Agnes Christine Johnston, co-authors of "Rich Men's Wives." After his work on "Are You a Failure?" is finished Forman will undertake "The Girl Who Came Back," a popular play by Charles E. Blaney and Samuel Ruskin Golding. This picture will be followed by "Mothers-in-Law," which Gasnier will make. Here again the credit of authorship goes to Frank Dazey and Agnes Johnston, who have written innumerable original picture stories and have successfully adapted as many more.

Other material already purchased by Schulberg includes "A Mansion of Aching Hearts," by Harry Von Tilzer and Arthur J. Lamb, and "My Lady Lips," written first as a stage play. Definite plans for the direction of these have not yet been laid out.

C. C. Burr Signs Diminutive Star

Charles C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors and Mastdon Films, Inc., this week signed Violet Mersereau, the diminutive star, who has just returned from a year's visit to Italy and Germany for Fox Film Company, for an important role in his latest Johnny Hines special, "Luck." The cast now includes Johnny Hines, Robert Edeson, Charley Murray, Polly Moran, Flora Finch, Miss Mersereau and Joe King.

Merit Test of Film Is Principal Basis

Gene Marcus, of Twentieth Century Film Corporation of Philadelphia, a Principal Pictures Corporation distributor for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, while in New York this week announced that he had prepared an extensive campaign in that territory on the first Principal production, "The World's a Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips, and based on Elinor Glyn's latest story, which will be released this month. In this campaign the entire exploitation and publicity department of Principal Pictures Corporation will co-operate with Mr. Marcus.

Mr. Lesser, in a statement he sent out this week to exchanges associated with Principal Pictures Corporation, emphasized the plan of the company to extensively advertise in the trade papers. The advertising, according to Mr. Lesser, will be systematically conducted. Following introductory announcements of the product, exploitation suggestions relative to means of putting over the pictures in question will be embodied in these advertisements, the subject matter of which will be inserted by showmen of long years' experience.

It is the proposal of Principal Pictures Corporation to lay aside $100,000 annually for the advertising of Principal Pictures in trade papers. This record-breaking appropriation will be supplemented with a nation-wide campaign confined to billboards, regionals and special exploitation to be supervised by a special staff of exploitation men.

Arrow Film Exchange of New York will handle the New York distribution on "The Streets Of New York," the Burton King production which opened at the Frank P. Hall houses in Jersey City last week.

Judging from negotiations now on, Christmas week will be an unusually busy one in the way of competition among independent pictures, for three Broadway houses are now angling for such production during the holiday period.

With the Minsky Music Hall in New York a complete success, exceeding the fondest expectations of showmen, Matt Radin, of Capital Film Exchange, who is financially interested in the burlesque venture, finds his day a busy one, for bills at the Park are changed weekly.

Despite the reported battle over the film rights to the story of "Madame Sans Gene," Producers Security Corporation this week announced that it has been instructed by Producer Aubrey Kennedy to release that production on Nov. 10.

Four Broadway plays which Will Nigh will adapt for the screen were purchased this week by L. Lawrence Weber of L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North. Nigh, it is understood, will adapt the three plays into scenario form, cast and direct them.

Harry Warner Finds Independent Producers Setting New Standards

Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, returned this week to New York after a three weeks' stay at the West Coast studios. Mr. Warner's trip to the coast was made in order to confer with his brothers, Abe, Sam and Jack, on the production schedule of 1923. According to Mr. Warner the production plans are for eighteen pictures during the coming season. The nature of the stories was not revealed, but it is intimated that some of the best-known novels dealing with current, yet vital topics of universal appeal, and stage plays possessing the same dominant factors, have been secured for the new roster of productions.

In addition to the acquisition of the stories, Mr. Warner declared that a number of prominent directors and popular screen players have been engaged for the coming season. The names of the directors and players were not divulged for, as Mr. Warner stated, it would tend to seriously interfere with the engagements to which they are now bound.

All of the eighteen productions will be made at the coast studios. In order to properly accommodate several companies, Mr. Warner said that arrangements are now being completed for the expansion of their present quarters.

"Practically every place I visited," said Mr. Warner, "was humming with activity. It convinced me of two vital things in the making of box-office attractions. The first is that producers are not making pictures in haphazard fashion, and the second is the keen regard for the production which will embody every essential for box-office success. In the consideration of these factors, much depends upon the calibre of the directors chosen to complete them.

"I have been told of the terrible wastage of footage and valuable time; I have been made aware of the utter disregard for studio efficiency in the past; but the present methods of picture making tend to show in no small measure the unerring care for every little detail that goes into the finished product. This is indeed a gratifying thing, for, after all, if we cannot engage people who will produce a picture at minimum cost, at the same time excellent in every respect, then theatre owners and producers will have a tough time making ends meet. The outlook, however, is splendid and, regardless of what anybody says, I think the future of the industry, based on our present progress, is wonderful—in the true sense of the word. And that is saying a great deal."

New Exchange In Charlotte

ATLANTA (Special) — Enterprise Distributing Corporation will open a new exchange at Charlotte, N. C., according to word given out at the firm's local office. The exchange will temporarily be located at South Graham and Trade streets. James M. Hicks will manage the new Charlotte office of Enterprise Distributing Corporation. He was formerly a salesman connected with the Atlanta exchange.

Bob Savini, of Savini Films, Inc., is handling the Bible pictures, having negotiated numerous important and business-getting tie-ups for exhibitors using the films which Sacred Films, Inc., of Burbank, Cal., made.

Consolidation Would Harm

ST. LOUIS (Special)—Independent distributors of this territory are anxiously awaiting the outcome and effect of the plans to consolidate the Missouri and New Grand Central theatres. There apparently has developed a last minute hitch in negotiations. The long awaited announcement that the deal has been closed has not been forthcoming. Independents hereabouts are fearful that the contemplated consolidation would aggravate the present situation, further removing their chances of breaking into the Grand Boulevard houses.

While here, Joe Brandt, of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, recently signed Sam Warner, of United Film Service, for the 1923 series of Hallroom Boys comedies. He also arranged for several important showings here of "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned."

Pat Collins, manager of the Exhibitors Film Service, announced this week that during the past two weeks he has sold more independent pictures than for any similar period in the history of that exchange.

The Dick Talmadge westerns are seemingly the most popular of the kind available in this territory, according to exhibitor reports of the past five weeks.

"How Women Love" Hit in Jersey

JERSEY CITY, N. J.—(Special)—Betty Blythe personally appeared at the Lincoln and Pastime Theatres here and at the Roosevelt in West Hoboken on Tuesday night, Oct. 31, and was directly responsible for the breaking of house records in each instance. Her first independent feature, "How Women Love," was the featured attraction at each house for the first three days, showing to splendid business, despite the fact that no special exploitation was done in view of the aggressive advertising done by the opposition, the Hall houses, Strand in Hoboken and State and Ritz here, playing "The Streets of New York" with six headline vaudeville acts at each theatre.

ERIE, PA.—Charles Davis, exploitation manager for Arrow Film Corporation, is here exploiting Arrow pictures, two of which, "Streets of New York" and "Night Life in Hollywood," will be shown at the Rialto here on November 12 and 5th, respectively.

SEATTLE, WASH. (Special)—One of the most consistent moneymakers in this section, according to exhibitor reports, is "Flesh and Blood," with Lon Chaney. One house, which was robbed, capitalized on the stunt, which helped business.

"Something For Nothing" Is New Equity Production

"Something for Nothing" is the title of the second Daniel Carson Goodman production that Equity Pictures Corporation will release in the independent market. This release is in accordance with the recently published announcement of Equity that it will distribute five big specials during the forthcoming season. The first D. C. Goodman production, "What's Wrong With the Women?" has proven to be one of the biggest money-makers of the year, according to exhibitor reports from all parts of the country. Mr. Goodman has completed the story, which is said by Lou Baum to be even greater than that on which "What's Wrong With the Women?" was based. Casting will be done next week. Nigh Pictures Will Be Released on Franchise Basis by Weber-North

Will Nigh's photodramas are being produced and distributed by L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North on a franchise scale. Sam Sax, Sales Manager of this independent organization, has mapped out a "Will Nigh Series Selling Plan" that is being rapidly bought up by state-right buyers who are anxious to secure rights on all of Will Nigh's future product instead of merely his first production "Notoriety" alone. By the terms of this selling plan a franchise holder is appointed in each territory of the country and has exclusive distribution rights of the quartette of Will Nigh releases for the year throughout his territory. It is known that some of the buyers of the series will incorporate the name of Will Nigh in the name of their exchange.

The idea of selling Will Nigh's series as a whole instead of each release individually originated from the state-right buyers. For their own protection exchangemen who signed for local distribution rights on "Notoriety" have applied for the rights to Nigh's next three, in order to avoid the possibility of two or more exchanges in the same territory handling Will Nigh's output. Franchise holders for the Will Nigh series include Sam Grand of the Federated Film Exchange, New England; Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia; Sydney Samson of the Grand-North Exchanges, Buffalo and Albany; James Alexander of the Columbia Film Service, Pittsburgh; George Montgomery of the Supreme Film Co., Los Angeles, and a number of others shortly to be announced, who have already bought the rights to "Notoriety" and have declared their intention to sign for the series.

The outstanding strength of Will Nigh's premier production for Weber & North and the director's reputation for turning out the biggest hits in the independent market, are considered responsible for the demand for his future releases. Nigh is now working on the second of his series, which will be completed within two months. A schedule of a two-month interval between releases is being followed, thus assuring franchise holders of the prompt delivery of the entire four finished productions this season.

Al Rogell Now an Independent

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Albert Rogell, the director, has joined the ranks of independent producers, having established production quarters at the Fine Arts studio here. "The Greatest Menace" is the title of his first picture. Ora Carew heads the cast which includes Jack Livingston, Wilfred Lucas, Mildred June and Robert Gordon.

Lesser Lines Up Exchanges to Distribute Principal Films

Irving Lesser, Eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, whose first two releases, Elinor Glyn's "The World's a Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips, and the Irving Cummings production, "Chicago Sal," with Alice Lake and Milton Sills, have been completed, this week announced that he had virtually concluded negotiations with foremost exchanges throughout the country to handle the local distribution of Principal Pictures which will be released at the rate of one a month. The present schedule provides for 12 pictures a year. In each picture a star of proven box-office value will be featured along with a cast of "names." None but successful plays and popular published stories will be used, according to Mr. Lesser.

Exchangemen for the past six weeks have been negotiating with Mr. Lesser seeking franchises, but the latter, firm in his belief that bulk distribution of pictures creates a tendency of over-selling, held out for the sale of pictures individually, the selling being strictly on the merit of each picture. Exchanges with which Principal Pictures Corporation will be associated will be pledged to release pictures along similar lines, that is, on the merit of each individual picture.

While there are two units at work at the coast studios, Mr. Lesser made it known that his corporation is in the market for the best productions possible. Principal Pictures Corporation already has signed four stars for as many pictures, but their identity cannot be made known at this time owing to the fact that these players' contracts with program companies, with which they are associated, have not yet expired.

Pittsburgh Is Showing Boom

PITTSBURGH (Special)—Business in this section is improving considerably, according to reports at the local independent exchanges. The latter are purchasing new features and considerable short stuff. The big independent specials have been getting a big play at local theatres.

Gilbert Heckel, president of the Apex Pictures, Inc., accompanied by several associates, is in New York City looking over the feature film market. It is their intention to endeavor to secure some real winners and put the Apex back on the map.

Harry Snyder, shipper at the Quality exchange, is wearing the glad smile and is kept busy acknowledging congratulations. Reason being, Mrs. Snyder presented him with an 8½-pound baby boy recently. Mother and son are doing fine. Congratulations.

J. G. Sanford, formerly on the road for the local Fox exchange, has left that organization and is now connected in a similar capacity with the Quality Film Corporation.

Bernard Kahn, recently with the Simeral exchange on the road, is no longer connected with that organization, and this week commenced his new duties in a simlar capacity with the Penn Film Service.

Joseph Young, who has officiated with several local film exchanges in the capacity of salesman, is now connected with the H. C. Simeral Co., Inc. Joe is taking care of the city trade on the large number of Arrow productions recently announced for release here by the Simeral Company.

Kenneth Webb Planning New Independent Production Unit; News From Eastern Studios

Kenneth Webb, director of "Secrets of Paris," the C. C. Burr-Whitman Bennett production, while having severed his connection with Mr. Bennett with whom he had been associated for several years, will shortly announce an affiliation with an independent producing unit whose pictures will be made in some New York studios. Negotiations involving a well-known star are now being carried on and as soon as completed, Mr. Webb's plans will be announced in detail.

John Adolphi has completed production on the third Betty Blythe picture for Whitman Bennett. He starts production next week on another feature co-starring Martha Mansfield and E. K. Lincoln.

John Lowell and his company arrived in New York Saturday to take New York "shots" for "Lost in a Big City." The company has been working at Gloversville, N. Y., since the middle of August. The picture will not be completed until late this month and will not be released earlier than January 1.

Burton King will start casting for his next production some time next week. He already has engaged Constance Joslin, formerly with the D. W. Griffith forces, for an important role in his next feature.

It is not believed that Doris Kenyon will go west with "Up the Ladder," in which she is being starred. Instead, it is said, she will return to New York to be starred in several pictures.

Martin J. Heyl, of Mart Heyl Productions, Inc., will produce "The Little Red School House" for Independent distribution.

Production has been completed on the Coast on the new Max Graf production, "A Modern Madonna," which is based on a novel by Caroline Abbott Stanley.

Belated Release of "I Am the Law" Proves Winning Move for Exhibitors

The belated release of the C. C. Burr-Bernie Fineman production, "I Am the Law," which Edwin Carewe so cleverly produced, seems to have served as a blessing for that picture, judging from reports that have reached New York from various parts of the country. Owing to litigation which held up the release on the production, "I Am the Law" was released generally throughout the country this week following the insertion of several scenes that materially strengthened the dramatic value of the entertainment as a whole.

Bobby North, of Apollo Exchange of New York, reported that he had booked every circuit house in his territory. The Coliseum in Seattle also has booked "I Am the Law" for an indefinite run, while the Princess in Denver, Col., last week did a turnaway business with that feature. Up in New England "I Am the Law" proved the biggest Northwestern money-maker exhibitors there have had in a long, long time.

Had "I Am the Law" been released last summer it would have had the opposition of at least seven big Northwestern pictures. However, it was held up, and while at the time the delay seemed to be fatal, it has been a blessing, for right now exhibitors are clamoring for Northwesterns which a year ago were being released in large quantity. Exhibitors' reports wired in this week on business done on Monday and Tuesday indicated that the showings, generally, are hugely profitable.

"I Am the Law" is one of the best pictures of the year and certainly the greatest production Edwin Carewe has ever turned out. It includes an all-star cast with the action of the rapid-gun calibre.

Sam Saxe Leaves for Middlewest

Following the principle of the producers and distributors of Will Nigh's "Notoriety" that selling a picture to independent exchangemen does not end their part of the obligation, Sam Saxe, sales manager for L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North Left this week on a tour of Middlewestern cities for the purpose extending all possible cooperation to local distributors of that feature. He will visit Pittsburgh, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Indianapolis and St. Louis.

Many Accessories For "Only a Shop Girl"

Plenty of novelties on "Only a Shop Girl" are promised the exchanges and exhibitors by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. Believing that one learns only by experience, this company has asked all territorial holders of its Six Box-Office Winners to tell them without reserve just wherein the press book on "More to Be Pitied" accomplishes the real purpose of a press book—that is, as an aid to the exhibitor—and just wherein it fails.

As a result of the answers to these requests the C. B. C. publicity department announces that most of the activities concentrated on the preparation of accessories of this feature will be turned toward the preparation of novelties for the exhibitors' use, and that there will be a large and varied assortment of these.

Coast Independent Producers Enthuse Over Future Status

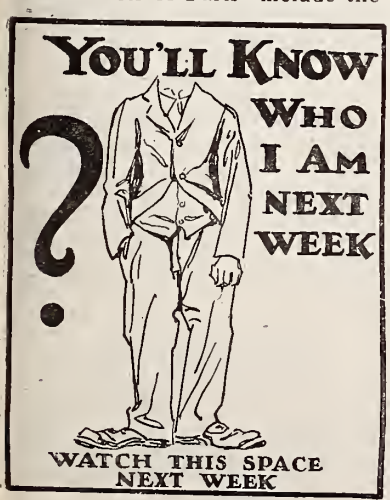
LOS ANGELES—(Special)—The determination of independent producers here for the services of established stars with "big name" value, popular stories and "big" directors is the subject of popular conversation in this section. There is a belief general here that independents have finally come into their own and big productions seem to be their hobby right now. Never before in the history of motion picture production here have independent producers been so busy.

That independents are not scoffing at stars' salaries is proven by the price being paid for the services of some of the bigger stars who are now on "location" for independent producers. Exhibitors in Los Angeles are clamoring for independent pictures and within the course of the past six weeks eight Independent pictures have been shown at houses that in the past were closed to such features.

Sales Going Fast on "Secrets of Paris"

Pending negotiations on territorial sales of C. C. Burr's "Secrets of Paris," give every indication that within a short time this melodramatic feature will have been 100 per cent. sold.

The latest sales announced on the "Secrets of Paris" include the entire New England territory, embracing Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Island and New Hampshire to Major Films, Inc., of Boston; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to Metro Film Exchange, of Philadelphia; Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah and Idaho to Mountain States Film Attractions, Inc., of Denver; entire states of California, Arizona, Nevada and Hawaiian Islands to Supreme Film Company of Los Angeles; foreign rights (excluding United States, Alaska, Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland and Hawaiian Islands) to William Vogel, New York City. It is reported sales on no less than six additional territories to prominent exchanges are being consumated through the mails, and that Lester Scott, Jr., general sales manager of Mastodon Films, now on the road with prints of "Secrets of Paris," has virtually arranged for three other territorial closings which necessitate final O. K. by C. C. Burr, of Mastodon Films, Inc.



The addition to several other screen players has completed the cast for Warner Brothers production, "Little Church Around the Corner," the picturization of which was started last week at the Warner studios. The new additions to the cast are Claire Windsor, George Cooper and Tom Kennedy. Other players are Kenneth Harlan, Hohart Bosworth, Bessie Love, Walter Long, Alex Francis, Margaret Seddon, Winter Hall and Cyril Chadwick. Olga Printzlau adapted the screen version from Marion Russell's play. William A. Seitzer is directing.

Michael Rosenherg, production manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, anounced this week that that firm's two specials, Irving Cummings' "Chicago Sal," with Alice Lake and Milton Sills, and the Elinor Glyn story feature, "The World's a Stage," with Dorothy Phillips, Bruce McRae and an all-tar cast, would he released this month. Prints of hoth pictures have been forwarded to Irving Lesser in New York.

B. P. Schulberg, producer of "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows," two Preferred pictures being released through Al Lichtman exchanges, on last Saturday morning was literally smothered with night letters and telegrams from friends in the trade in New York following the special trade showing of "Shadows" in that city last Friday evening. Mr. Schulherg in reply paid trihute to his director, Tom Forman, and his cast, saying that to them should go all credit for the picture.

Ward Hayes, the scenario writer and gag man, has heen added to the production staff of Frankie Lee and "Fatty" Karr. Hayes is the author of "The Garage," presented hy Fatty Arhuckle. He was with Charles Chaplin for some time. He also has been associated with Harold Lloyd. He starts work on the "Fatty" Karr comedies immediately. Bruce Mitchell is directing the Karr comedies. Clarence Bricker is making the Frankie Lee "American Boy" comedies.

Bruce Mitchell this week made known the fact that he had signed Mary Jane Alden to play prominent roles in the "Fatty" Karr comedies that he is making for East Coast Productions, Inc., of which Franklyn E. Backer is President. Miss Alden is the Johnstown, Pa., girl to which Moving Picture World exclusively directed the attention of the trade several months ago. She was "discovered" hy Harry Charnas, who owns the Standard exchanges in Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati. She won a prize beauty contest in Pennsylvania. Jack Warner first signed her.

Albert Rogell Productions, Inc., started work last week at the Fine Arts studio on its first picture, "The Great Menace." Rogell is directing. Monty Banks is working on the third Ben Wilson comedy for Federated Exchange release. William King will shortly start production on a picture that will be released independently.

New England Glad Censor Issue Is Beaten

BOSTON (Special)—With the final reports on election returns in Massachusetts showing a decisive defeat of censorship, local independent exchangemen, on Wednesday, celebrated the occasion. The defeat of the referenda means a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars to exchanges in this section. Prior to election even the most optimistic conceded that "it was going to be a tough job."

Contracts were closed this week with Jake Lourie for the day and date run of "Shadows" at the Modern and Beacon theatres during the week of December 11. This is the second Preferred Picture.

"More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" was hooked into the Victory Theatre in Providence, where big business ruled. Election Day helping considerably to put the week over.

Virtually all of the Boston independent exchanges kept "open house" on Election Day for exhibitors who came to hear the returns.

Sam Moscow expects "Sure-Fire Flint," the second Johnny Hines feature, to break all records estahlished by the first Hines picture, "Burn 'Em Up Barnes."

To Handle Metro in Brazil

Brazilian distribution of the entire photoplay output of Metro Pictures Corporation has been contracted for by Paramount.

The contract calls for distribution of "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Trifling Women;" "Broadway Rose" and "Jazzamania;" Viola Dana pictures; film plays made under the supervision of Max Graf; Fred Niblo productions, presented by Louis B. Meyer; Bull Montana comedies, produced by Hunt Stromberg; Stan Laurel's comedies, made by the Amalgamated Producing Corp.; and all others scheduled for release during the season of 1922-23.

Exhibitors Praise "Forgotten Law"

"The Forgotten Law," which was produced for Metro under the supervision of Max Graf, was given a pre-release showing before a gathering of Illinois exhibitors at a luncheon party at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, recently.

The consensus of opinion, as reported to S. A. Shirley, Metro's Chicago district manager, was that this picture version of Caroline Abbott Stanley's famous novel, "A Modern Madonna," which has in its cast such leading players as Milton Sills, Jack Mulhall and Cleo Ridgely, would prove a big box-office attraction.

Among the exhibitors present at the luncheon and preview were: Harry Asher, William Burford, Charles Lamm, Max Balaban, E. C. Beck, W. L. Barbee, H. O. Loper, Russell Loper, Louis Zahler, Arnold Shaak, Lester Retchin, Robert Gumbiner, Henry Goldson, J. Cooper, Arthur Schoenstedt, L. Schindler, Abe Gumbiner, Cooney Brothers, and Ed Hefferkemp.

Added to Staff

Following out his consistent policy of gathering together the most promising members of the theatrical profession to train them for special motion picture work, Jesse L. Lasky has added another recruit to the ranks of Paramount Pictures.

His newest "find" is Richard Ordynski, formerly stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York and the man who used to assist Max Reinhardt in his spectacular European productions. He is now at the Lasky studio studying production and directorial methods with a view to ultimately directing for Paramount.

Tourneur to Make Four Big Specials

M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios, announces that he has completed negotiations with Maurice Tourneur whereby that popular director will make a series of four special productions during the coming year, to be known as Maurice Tourneur Productions and to be presented by Levee through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Tourneur's first vehicle will be a picturization of that colorful novel, "The Isle of Dead Ships," by Crittenden Marriott. Several other stories and plays are now under consideration by Messrs. Levee and Tourneur for future production.

"Under our arrangement with First National," states Mr. Levee, "we will produce only the highest grade of screen entertainment and each of the productions will be in keeping with First National's policy of handling only those pictures which have unquestioned audience appeal."

Production on "The Isle of Dead Ships" will begin at the United Studios in about two weeks. The continuity is now being prepared under Mr. Tourneur's supervision. The production will be on a lavish scale, it is stated.

In addition to presenting the Maurice Torneur Productions through First National, Mr. Levee is also sponsoring Allen Holubar's second production for that organization, which will be a picturization of Jeffry de Prend's "The White Frontier." It is probable the title will be changed before the picture reaches the theatre-goers. Dorothy Phillips will be the star.

Noted Players Seen in Big "U" Picture

"The Power of a Lie," Johann Bojer's story which Universal is filming under the direction of George Archainbaud, has been fully cast and presents an impressive array of well known film artists.

Mabel Julienne Scott is portraying the chief feminine role in the story of New York social intrigue. Opposite her is Earl Metcalf. In principal roles are June Elvidge, Maude George, Phillips Smalley, Stanton Heck, David Torrence, Winston Miller and Ruby LaFayette.

Charles Kenyon prepared the scenario and is supervising the production.

"Up the Ladder" Now Being Filmed

"Up the Ladder," the play that William A. Brady produced so successfully in New York last year, is being changed by A. P. Younger from the stage form of the author, Owen Davis, to the screen continuity that will bring out the strongest dramatic elements and provide a fitting vehicle for the first starring effort of Virginia Valli.

Universal is preparing to make this production a special in every sense. Hobart Henley has been assigned to direct.

Kenyon Joins Big "U"

Albert G. Kenyon has joined the Universal City scenario department as a writer of continuities and originals. He is a brother of Charles Kenyon, one of the supervisors of the department, and is known to his new associates through active participation in the affairs of the Hollywood writers' world.

Douglas MacLean Joins Associated Exhibitors

Douglas MacLean has joined Associated Exhibitors' galaxy of stars. J. C. Ragland, secretary of that organization, announced this week the closing of a contract under which the popular comedian will make four productions during the coming year for distribution by Associated.

Mr. Ragland's announcement contains also the information that Mr. MacLean's productions will be big comedy specials of the type of "The Hottentot," picturizations either of successful plays or well-known stories of noted authors. The star, who is now to become producer also, already holds options on two popular plays, and the name of the first feature to be produced will be announced at an early date.

In all his pictures for Associated, it is declared, Mr. MacLean will have all-star support. It is understood that he has completed the organization of Douglas MacLean Productions, which will make the several features. Bogart Rogers has been selected as general manager of the company, and Lloyd Ingraham will be the director. J. R. Crone will be production manager, and George Crone, who was with Mr. Ingraham three years, assistant director.

Add Popular Players to Moore Film

Mayme Kelso has been added to the big cast now working on the forthcoming Selznick superspecial, "A Dollar Down," starring Owen Moore, being produced on the coast.

Alice Lake is appearing in a featured role. In addition are Douglas Carter, "Snitz" Edwards, and Frank Clark.

"A Dollar Down"—and this is only the working title of the production—is from a story by Victor Heerman, who is also directing the production.

Beaumont to Direct Viola Dana

Viola Dana's new Metro picture will be "A Noise in Newbro," a story by Edgar Franklin. Rex Taylor has prepared the screen adaptation for the picture and Harry Beaumont will direct.

David Butler and Allan Forest will have two of the leading roles. Other members of the supporting cast are Eva Novak, Betty Francisco, Alfred Allen, Joan Standing and Bert Woodruff.

Once With Griffith

David Butler, who is appearing with Viola Dana in "A Noise in Newboro," her newest Metro starring picture, was first featured on the screen as a protege of D. W. Griffith. During the past few years he has been starred in eight pictures.

Lease Space

Rollin Sturgeon and Lucien Hubbard, director and scenario writer, have leased space at Universal City to produce independent pictures. M. K. Wilson has been retained as production manager.

Louise Lovely on Tour with "Shattered Idols"

In conjunction with J. L. Frothingham's production of "Shattered Idols" distributed by American Releasing, Louise Lovely, who plays a featured role, is touring the larger cities in an original entertainment.

It opens with a vaudeville playlet, "Their Wedding Night," in which she appears with her husband, William Welch, English comedian; and for the second portion of her act the stage is transformed into a replica of a studio setting, with lights, camera, etc.

Actual motion pictures are made, using children from the audience at the matinees and at other performances girls and men. Miss Lovely makes up her subjects and directs them while Mr. Welch entertains with a monologue, after which the actress is seen in "Shattered Idols." Pictures taken during her engagement are shown at the theatre the following week.

The novelty was widely advertised in Cincinnati during the Lyric engagement as a means of discovering if amateurs had "screen personality."

Ruggles Completes F. B. O. Film

Under the direction of Wesley Ruggles, Ethel Clayton this week completed the filming of "The Remittance Woman," which will be her second release through the Film Booking Offices of America. The story is by Achmed Abdullah. It was originally published in a nationally known magazine.

Miss Clayton's leading man is Rockcliffe Fellowes.

Pick "Cardigan" to Open Club

The handsome new Woman's Club auditorium in Atlanta, erected at a cost of $110,000, will show a motion picture for the first time on December 1.

The subject chosen is "Cardigan," distributed by American Releasing Corporation, selected because of its historical and patriotic appeal. It is a stirring romance of the days of 1776, a picturization of Robert W. Chamber's novel.

Will Write Titles

Oliver Morosco Productions announce they have obtained Avery Hopwood, well known playwright and author of a dozen Broadway successes, to write the titles for "Slippy McGee," their second production for First National release, featuring Colleen Moore and Wheeler Oakman.

Mr. Exhibitor:
Ask your Film Company for the
"Thematic Music Cue Sheet"
(Pat. Applied For)
It means more to you than any other accessory. It is the cue sheet that insures a musically perfect picture presentation.

"Shadows" in Exceptional Category

The Exceptional Photoplays Committee of the National Board of Review, after a private screening of "Shadows," the new B. P. Schulberg release through the Al Lichtman Corporation, placed the picture in the exceptional pictures category. As is usual with pictures so recognized, the committee will sponsor a private showing at the Town Hall. The date has been set for November 17.

The Exceptional Photoplays Committee has special lists of representative people in its files. It is that sort of an audience which will be invited to the Town Hall showing.

Paramount Companies Spread Over the Map

Paramount producing companies are now spread all over the map. An effort to place a finger on each of the units making pictures at either the West Coast or Eastern studio reveals the fact that the companies are widely separated.

James Cruze's company, producing "The Covered Wagon," is in Utah, where tremendous scenes are in progress with an aggregation of about 3,000 players taking part. Lois Wilson, J. Warren Kerrigan, Ernest Torrence, Tully Marshall, Guy Oliver, Alan Hale, Charles Ogle, Ethel Wales and others are in the cast.

The Agnes Ayres company, filming "Racing Hearts," under Paul Powell's direction, is on location at Lancaster, California, where thrilling racing scenes are being taken. Besides the star, Miss Ayres, in the cast are Richard Dix, Theodore Roberts, Robert Cain, Warren Rogers, J. Farrell MacDonald and others.

In far-off Hawaii the Paramount company producing "The White Flower," starring Betty Compson, has met with perfect weather and many beautiful scenes are being photographed. Julia Crawford Ivers is directing a cast composed of Miss Compson, Edmund Lowe, Edward Martindel, Sylvia Ashton, Arline Pretty, Leon Bary and Lily Phillips.

Meanwhile, at the West Coast plant, a lone company reigns. It is the Jack Holt starring unit producing "Nobody's Money," under Wallace Worsley's direction. In the cast of this screen adaptation of William LeBaron's famous stage success are Jack Holt, Wanda Hawley, Julia Faye, Walter McGrail, Robert Schable, Eileen Manning, Josephine Crowell, Harry Depp, Charles French, Richard Tucker and Will R. Walling.

The Eastern producing units of the company are quite as widely separated.

The greater part of Dorothy Dalton's new picture, tentatively titled, "Black Fury," is being filmed far out on Long Island, many miles from the studio. Victor Fleming is directing this original story by Edmund Goulding, and the cast includes Robert Ellis, Jose Ruben, Ellen Cassidy, Pat Hartigan and Warren Cooke.

Thomas Meighan has been over around Pittsburgh making scenes in the oil fields for George Ade's "Back Home and Broke." For this location trip Director Alfred Green took along six cameramen. In the meantime, Lila Lee, Frederick Burton, Cyril Ring, Charles Abbe, Florence Dixon, Gertrude Quinlan, Laurence Wheat and the other members of the supporting cast enjoyed a brief holiday awaiting the return of the star and director to the studio. The rest of the picture will be made at the studio.

Lloyd Film Breaking Records

The record-smashing career upon which "Grandma's Boy," the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors' superattraction, produced by Hal Roach, was launched with its first appearance in Los Angeles, has extended itself, Associated Exhibitors says, far beyond the big first-run houses of the large cities.

Now comes an upset also in the neighborhood houses of the large centres, and in smaller towns of the country, it is reported. With only the locales and the capacity of the places of exhibition altered, the same conditions are being repeated. As "one-week towns" suddenly came into prominence as two, three, and even four-week towns," so places where hitherto a run of three days was the rule for even a special offering have been elevated to "full-week" rank, reports state.

A telegram received from John C. Graham, owner of the Lyric Theatre, Butler, Pa., is characteristic of many reports. Mr. Graham wired: "Lyric did the greatest business in two years. Bring on all your Lloyds. He is our best bet yet."

Last week was the third for "Grandma's Boy" at Finkelstein & Reuben's Strand, Minneapolis, and Sam Harding's Liberty, Kansas City. It was used, too, as the attraction for the grand opening of the Electric Theatre, one of the largest pictures houses in Kansas City, Kan. A. F. Baker is the manager. The Kansas City Kansan, one of Senator Arthur Capper's newspapers, issued a special eight-page section in honor of the event.

Critics Enthuse Over Read's "Pawned"

J. Parker Read, Jr.'s "Pawned," recently secured for distribution by Select Pictures Corporation, is about ready to be released. Prints have already been shipped to the Select branches throughout the country.

Since "Pawned" has been in the hands of the Select people a number of private showings have been given for the benefit of those especially interested in the production. Among those who have seen the photoplay may be mentioned "Bob" Davis, who is almost as well known in the picture trade as he is in the national magazine field, where his connection with the Munsey publications has stretched over many years.

Definitely fixing the value of "Pawned" as an entertainment vehicle, it may be said that Mr. Davis, after witnessing "Pawned," did not hesitate to say that he thought J. Parker Read, Jr., had come closer to saving the full story value of the Packard story than had any previous producer who had attempted the same task when supplied with other stories.

Hodkinson Receives New Press Book

Advance copies of "The Headless Horseman" press book have arrived in the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and, according to reports, in the estimation of those exhibitors to whom it has been shown, it is one of the best books that this organization has ever put out.

Special accessories to help the exhibitor in advertising have been designed. Special stress also has been laid upon the exploitation angles, it is said.

Fred Niblo Starts Metro Picture

Fred Niblo has begun production of James Forbes's stage success, "The Famous Mrs. Fair," which is Mr. Niblo's initial production presented by Louis B. Mayer for Metro.

Mr. Niblo secured the permission of the commandant of Fort MacArthur for the use of two hundred and fifty artillery regulars to take part in some of the scenes.

Script Ready for Vitagraph Film

The script for Alice Calhoun's next starring picture has been sent to the coast from Vitagraph's Brooklyn scenario department. It is by C. Graham Baker, with a temporary title of "Mary Mixes In," and was written especially for Miss Calhoun.

An Unusual Sight

The gorgeous "Battle of Flowers," the famous yearly festival of the Argentine Republic, is being reproduced by Director Sam Wood for "My American Wife," the new Gloria Swanson Paramount picture. This photoplay was written by Hector Turnbull and adapted for the screen by Monte M. Katterjohn.

Charles deRoche, French Actor, to Star in Paramount Films

Without saying a word about it to anybody, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has put under contract a French film actor who Mr. Lasky believes is one of the screen's greatest personalities.

The man is Charles deRoche, and he will arrive in New York on La France Saturday. His first work in an American studio will be as a featured player in support of Dorothy Dalton in Konrad Bercovici's gipsy story, "The Law of the Lawless," after which he will play the title role in "The Spanish Cavalier."

"Mr. deRoche has been seen in this country only once," said Mr. Lasky, in announcing his latest acquisition to the Paramount constellation of stars. "That was in a picture made in Europe, which was shown here last Spring. In that picture Mr. deRoche played the role of a toreador, and everybody who saw the picture was struck not only with his consummate skill as an artist, but also with the great magnetism which was obvious in his personality. He dominated every scene he was in, and gave one of the finest performances I have ever seen on the screen.

"I was in California at the time, and was bombarded with telegrams from the home office advising me to watch the work of Mr. deRoche when I saw the picture. I followed that advice and when I got a chance to see the picture in Los Angeles I determined instantly that in him I was looking at a finished screen actor who had the personality, the appearance and good looks which the American public demands and which the American public also rewards lavishly.

"So when I went to Paris early in the summer, I made it a point to check up further on the work he had done in French films. Inadequate as these pictures were in their lighting, their settings and their direction, Mr. deRoche still stood out because of the sheer force of his personality.

"I felt that if the American people ever got a chance to see him in an American-made picture and in roles suitable for him, he would become one of the big figures of our screen. We entered into negotiations and made a contract which became effective on the expiration of his then engagement. The result is that he is now abroad La France and will arrive in New York Saturday."

Said to be one of the handsomest men on the French screen, Mr. deRoche has an immense following of fans all over Europe. He is six feet tall, has a strong face, with flashing black eyes and has all the grace and strength of character which mark the men from the Basque country, in the southern part of France, where he was born.

With Cosmopolitan

William J. Lorelle, one of the first leading men in pictures and who has been in retirement for the last three years, has been engaged for the role of Major Healey in Cosmopolitan's picturization of "The Go-Getter," a Peter B. Kyne story. Seena Owen and T. Roy Barnes are featured.

With Inspiration

John S. Robertson, director of "Sentimental Tommy," "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," and other notable productions, has signed a contract to produce for Inspiration Pictures, Inc.

de Mille Arrives in East

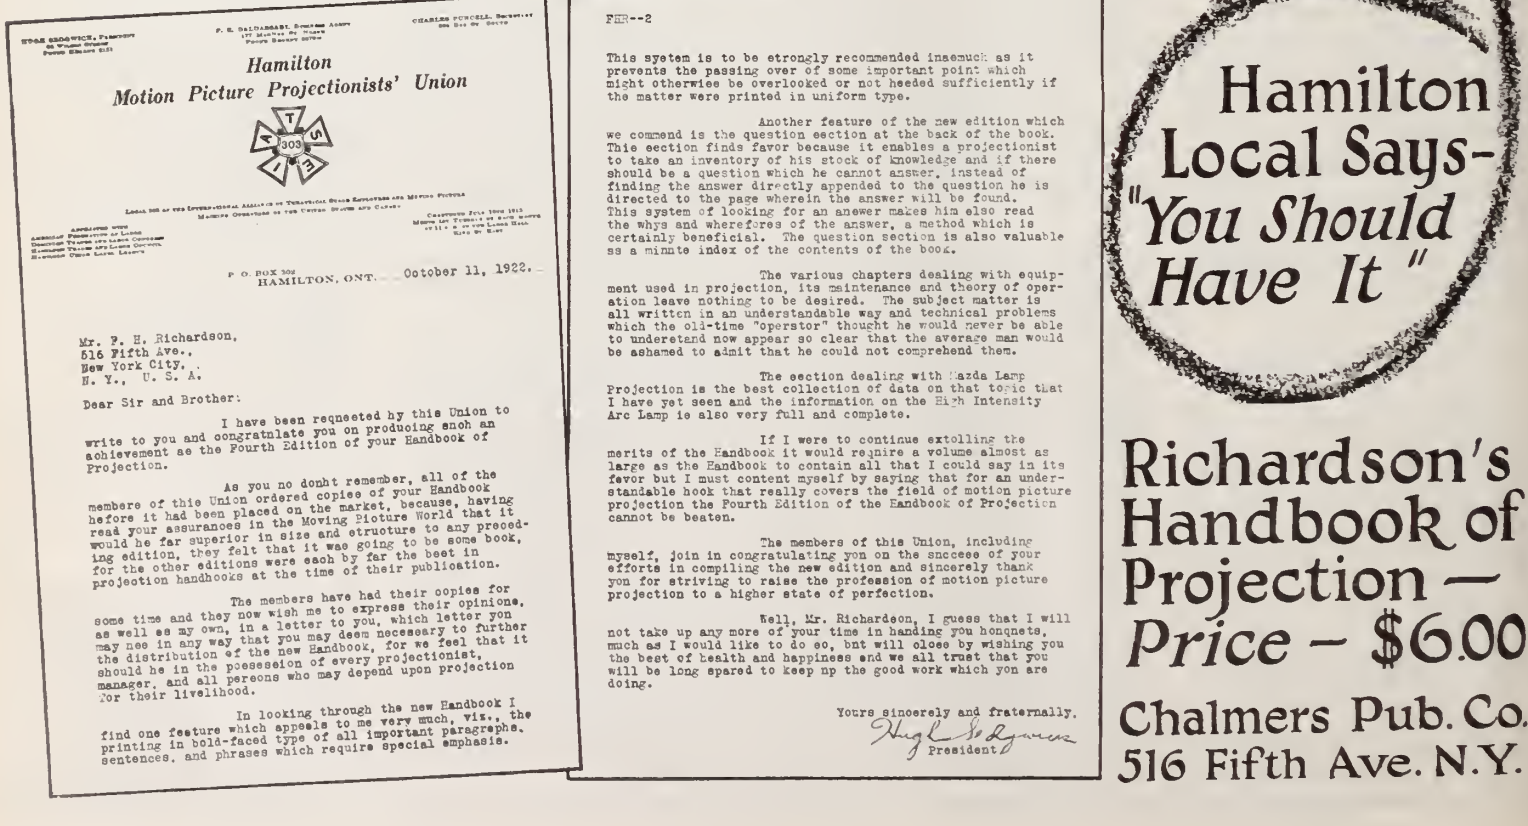
William de Mille has arrived in New York from the West Coast with the rough negative of "The World's Applause," by Clara Beranger, which he has just completed with Bebe Daniels, Lewis Stone, Kathlyn Williams and Harrison Ford in the featured roles.

Mr. de Mille will remain in New York about a month, during which time he will supervise the cutting of the picture at Paramount's Long Island studio and confer with Clara Beranger as to the scenario of his next production.

"Finger Prints" Is Showman's Film

"Finger Prints," the first of the series of six features to be issued by Hyperion Picture Corporation for independent exchanges, has been hailed as a picture with an unusual exploitation title, according to reports received at the home office.

Extraordinary interest in the picture has been aroused by the possibilities of "putting across" the production, and expert showmen from all over the country have expressed a desire to view the picture as soon as possible.



Hamilton Motion Picture Projectionists' Union

P. O. BOX 304 HAMILTON, ONT. October 11, 1922.

Mr. F. H. Richardson,
516 Fifth Ave.,
New York City,
N. Y., U. S. A.

Dear Sir and Brother:

I have been requested by this Union to write to you and congratulate you on producing such an achievement as the Fourth Edition of your Handbook of Projection.

As you no donbt remember, all of the members of this Union ordered copies of your Handbook before it had been placed on the market, because, having read your assurances in the Moving Picture World that it would be far superior in size and structure to any preceding edition, they felt that it was going to be some book, for the other editions were each by far the best in projection handbooks at the time of their publication.

The members have had their copies for some time and they now wish me to express their opinions, as well as my own, in a letter to you, which letter you may use in any way that you may deem necessary to further the distribution of the new Handbook, for we feel that it should be in the possession of every projectionist, manager, and all persons who may depend upon projection for their livelihood.

In looking through the new Handbook I find one feature which appeals to me very much, viz., the printing in bold-faced type of all important paragraphs, sentences, and phrases which require special emphasis.

This system is to be strongly recommended inasmuch as it prevents the passing over of some important point which might otherwise be overlooked or not heeded sufficiently if the matter were printed in uniform type.

Another feature of the new edition which we commend is the question section at the back of the book. This section finds favor because it enables a projectionist to take an inventory of his stock of knowledge and if there should be a question which he cannot answer, instead of finding the answer directly appended to the question he is directed to the page wherein the answer will be found. This system of looking for an answer makes him also read the whys and wherefores of the answer, a method which is certainly beneficial. The question section is also valuable as a minute index of the contents of the book.

The various chapters dealing with equipment used in projection, its maintenance and theory of operation leave nothing to be desired. The subject matter is all written in an understandable way and technical problems which the old-time "operator" thought he would never be able to understand now appear so clear that the average man would be ashamed to admit that he could not comprehend them.

The section dealing with Mazda Lamp Projection is the best collection of data on that topic that I have yet seen and the information on the High Intensity Arc Lamp is also very full and complete.

If I were to continue extolling the merits of the Handbook it would require a volume almost as large as the Handbook to contain all that I could say in its favor but I must content myself by saying that for an understandable book that really covers the field of motion picture projection the Fourth Edition of the Handbook of Projection cannot be beaten.

The members of this Union, including myself, join in congratulating you on the success of your efforts in compiling the new edition and sincerely thank you for striving to raise the profession of motion picture projection to a higher state of perfection.

Well, Mr. Richardson, I guess that I will not take up any more of your time in handing you bouquets, much as I would like to do so, but will close by wishing you the best of health and happiness and we all trust that you will be long spared to keep up the good work which you are doing.

Yours sincerely and fraternally,
President

A Millarde Film

The famous characters of Georges Ohnet's celebrated novel, "Dr. Rameau," have, Fox says, come to life on the screen in the William Fox version of the story adapted under the title of "My Friend the Devil," to be released on the November schedule of Fox Film Corporation.

Charles Richman, one of the screen's foremost dramatic actors, is said to set a high mark for emotional depiction in the role of George Dryden, eminent surgeon. Barbara Castleton is the beautiful, but faithless wife. Among others in the cast are Peggy Shaw, former Ziegfeld Follies beauty, and William H. Tooker.

"My Friend the Devil" was directed by Harry Millarde, who was responsible for the production of "Over the Hill."

Fox Releases for Week, Nov. 6

Two features, a Clyde Cook Special Comedy, a Sunshine Comedy, and a Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon comprise the releases announced for the week of November 6 by Fox Film Corporation.

"Shirley of the Circus" is the Shirley Mason publication. It was directed by Rowland V. Lee.——John Gilbert appears in "The Love Gambler," directed by Joseph Franz.

Clyde Cook comes in his new two-reeler, "Lazy Bones."——"The Ranch Romeo" is the title of the new Sunshine Comedy, and a Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon, "Wishing Ducks," is also on the week's release program.

Elinor Glyn's Name Aids Attendance

A brief shopping expedition, then a box of sweets and an Elinor Glyn matinee—these seem to afford a perfect afternoon for the average woman, says Playgoers Pictures in summarizing exhibitor opinion after the first week of its current Elinor Glyn attraction, "The Man and the Moment."

"It is an established fact, recognized among theatre owners, that the magic name of Elinor Glyn is a wonderful stimulant to matinee attendance," says the Playgoers statement.

Beban Honored by State Governor

George Beban, touring the larger cities with his stage and screen combination of "The Sign of the Rose," was received in Tokepa, Kansas, for his appearance at the Orpheum Theatre, under unusual conditions.

Because of the political convention which overcrowded the city, hotel accommodations could not be provided for the star and his company, whereupon a suite was placed at his disposal in the executive mansion by Governor Henry J. Allen.

Arrangements Made to Release Film

Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, a subsidiary organization of United Artists, will release the Nazimova production of "Salome." This picture, aside from its general release, will be presented at a Broadway theatre in New York at the same time, it is understood, that the great Russian screen and stage star makes her appearance in a new stage play.

Much public interest has been aroused also, it is said, by the action of the National Board of Review in indorsing "Salome" as not only a beautiful and highly artistic photoplay, but as being also free from censorable qualities.

The National Board's report, it is stated, certifies the eligibility of the picture for all classes of picture theatres, and stands as well as testimony of its dramatic effectiveness and beauty of presentation.

Willat Directs Two Scenes at One Time

Directing two scenes at one time was the feat of Irvin V. Willat during the filming of the Metro screen version of "All the Brothers Were Valiant," Ben Ames Williams' great sea story. This feat was performed aboard a whaling schooner during the "shooting" of scenes showing a hair raising battle between a mutinous crew and the captain's men.

Mr. Willat's chair was situated so that he could view but one scene, the other being at a point back of him and to the left. He directed the action in both spots, aided by a megaphone and a mirror, the latter being so suspended that Mr. Willat could view both scenes in their different locations.

Leah Baird Picture Now in Preparation

"When Civilization Failed" is the title of a forthcoming production featuring Leah Baird, which is now being cut in preparation for its delivery to Associated Exhibitors. The picture was adapted from "All Mine," by Dorian Neve, the well-known New York playwright.

The atmosphere for the production was acquired on a voyage made by the Baird company to South American waters and along the coast of Lower California. Instead of only one "big" scene, or spinal thrill in this picture there will be four, according to Arthur F. Beck, the producer.

Included with Leah Baird in the cast of "When Civilization Failed" are such well known players as Tom Santschi, Richard Tucker, Walter McGrail, Alec B. Francisc, Bobby Bolder and Ruth Mitchell.

Vitagraph Says Its Film Is a Thriller

Director David Smith has completed and turned in for revision the first of Vitagraph's big twelve special productions, "The Ninety and Nine." This picture is frankly a thriller, Vitagraph says.

The big thrill is the rescue of an entire country-side from the fury of the flames, as a forest fire races toward a surrounded town. Great stretches of burning forest are shown, whole towns in flames, hundreds of men, women and children running frantically to cover. The little telegraph office is besieged with shouting, cursing, praying men, demanding an engine to take the trapped inhabitants to safety.

Finally a young derelict who chances to be on the scene commandeers an engine, and with a young woman at the shovel, he rolls the steel monster out on the main track and heads into the furnace of roaring flames ahead.

Warner Baxter is the volunteer engine driver in this great production, and beautiful Colleen Moore is the winsome Ruth Blake who handles the shovel for him.

Mary Minter's Next

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," by John Fox, Jr., the famous romance of the Cumberlands, is soon to be made into a Paramount picture with Mary Miles Minter as the star. Miss Minter's choice to play this story is considered especially fortunate as she is a Southern girl and her greatest successes have been made in tales of this sort. Before joining Paramount she made a big hit in plays of the Southern mountains, especially in another story by John Fox, Jr., "A Cumberland Romance," which she did for Realart.

Records Broken

Having rounded out its second year of continuous playing "Over the Hill" now holds all records for length of continuous run, attendance, number of theatres played, and gross receipts, according to a statement from the Fox Film Corporation which first presented the play in New York City on September 17, 1920, and paved the way for a mass box office attack all over the world.

Entering its third year, the statement says, it has bowled over every record set up for it to shoot at, and is now sweeping the world with no let-up in sight.

It has been the feature attraction in 7,813 houses in the United States. Canada has played it in 571 of its theatres. In England it has been played in 1,628 public places of amusement.

"Bella Donna" Easy to Adapt

Paramount claims to have discovered at last the novel that lends itself perfectly to screen adaptation. It is "Bella Donna," in which Pola Negri is to star as her first American-made picture. Moreover, Ouida Bergere, to whom was intrusted the task of scenarizing the famous Robert Hichens' story, is the authority for the statement that it is the perfect novel for screen adaptation.

This George Fitzmaurice production boasts of the unusual feature of two leading men playing opposite the Polish star—Conway Tearle and Conrad Nagel.

Picture Draws Big Theatre Crowds

Associated Exhibitors attractions packed two big theatres simultaneously in Detroit last week. One was Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy" in its second week at the Fox-Washington, and the other was the Florence Vidor feature, "Dusk to Dawn," which was appearing at Warren & Cohen's Colonial Theatre.

Olcott to Direct Marion Davies

Sidney Olcott has been engaged by Cosmopolitan Productions to direct Marion Davies in her next picture, a screen version of Rida Johnson Young's famous stage play, "Little Old New York."

Work on the picture, the scenario of which is by Luther Reed, will begin about the middle of December. The engagement of Olcott to direct Miss Davies comes as a result of the proposed world's tour by Robert G. Vignola who directed Marion Davies in some of her big productions.

Meantime, Olcott is on his way to Europe, but will be back ready to start work on "Little Old New York" in about five weeks.

Famous Players Forces Working on Big Releases

Plunged into the heaviest production schedule which has ever prevailed in the Paramount studios, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, returned to New York this week with the prediction that the next six months of this season will see even greater improvement in the quality of pictures than has already been shown since the opening of the season in September.

Thirteen companies are now at work producing Paramount Pictures in the Lasky studio in Hollywood and in the Long Island studio, but, imposing as the list of productions is, they are only a few of the big pictures to be released by Paramount after February 1.

"Every one of these thirteen companies," said Mr. Lasky, "is making a picture which will surpass those we have already released so far this season, wonderful as our record on 'The First Forty-One' has been.

"For instance, James Cruze is now producing what I firmly believe will be the biggest production ever released by Paramount. It is 'The Covered Wagon,' the epic story of the old West by Emerson Hough, published first as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post and later as a best-selling novel.

"Another sensational picture will be the one that Cecil B. DeMille is now making. With unusual settings and with a wealth of artistic detail Mr. DeMille plans to tell in this picture the story of the girl of today—the most discussed subject in our modern life.

"Pola Negri, after recovering from the overwhelming reception accorded her by the American public, has begun production under the direction of George Fitzmaurice on Robert Hichens' powerful novel, 'Bella Donna.'

"One of the most novel pictures Paramount has ever made is 'The White Flower,' the picture which Julia Crawford Ivers is making in Honolulu, from her own story, with Betty Compson in the leading role.

"Even greater than 'The Impossible Mrs. Bellew' will be Gloria Swanson's next picture, 'My American Wife,' an original story by Hector Turnbull, author of 'The Cheat.' This will be a Sam Wood production, with a strong cast headed by Antonio Moreno and Walter Long.

"The growing army of Jack Holt fans will be pleased to see him in the picture he is working on now, 'Nobody's Money,' which will give this sterling artist an opportunity to show his skill in comedy.

"Agnes Ayres will have something different in her next picture, 'Racing Hearts,' which is being directed by Paul Powell, the man who made that rarely beautiful picture, 'Borderland.'

"Mary Miles Minter has the biggest role of her career in 'The Drums of Destiny,' which Charles Maigne made from Stephen French Whitman's popular story, 'Sacrifice.'

Alan Dwan is beginning this week at the Long Island studio on 'The Glimpses of the Moon,' from Edith Wharton's latest novel. Bebe Daniels will play the role of Susy Branch and another featured player will be Nita Naldi.

"George Melford, having completed 'Ebb Tide,' one of the most powerful screen dramas I have ever seen, is now engaged in producing Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, 'Java Head,' with the active collaboration of Mr. Hergesheimer.

"Thomas Meighan is now engaged on the first of the series of the greatest Meighan stories the screen has ever seen. It is 'Back Home and Broke,' an original story by George Ade. Following this Mr. Meighan will be seen in a story by Rex Beach, and Booth Tarkington, who has been acclaimed America's greatest novelist, has consented to write an original for Mr. Meighan entitled 'Uncle Jack.'

"Dorothy Dalton is now engaged on an original story by Edmund Goulding under the direction of Victor Fleming and Alice Brady is working on 'The Leopardess' by Katherine Newlin Burt, under the direction of Henry Kolker.

"These are only a few of the productions which Paramount will release in the six months after February 1, but, although we made a sensational record by our first forty-one pictures of the season, the production department is confident that this performance will be surpassed in the pictures of the last six months of the season."

"The Sin Flood" Is Praised by Critics

Goldwyn's film version of Henning Berger's drama, "The Sin Flood," is the week's attraction at the Capitol theatre. It is said to have held up to Goldwyn's great expectations as to its popular appeal and as to the artistry that has gone into its making.

The New York Herald critic wrote: "A fine picture and a distinct credit to the Goldwyn corporation which sponsored it." The reviewer on the Tribune said: "Lloyd has seized upon the material and made it into a fascinating screen comedy. . . . A delightful picture play."

The New York Times said: "Sharply realistic. . . . All of the parts are well played. . . . Frank Lloyd has done remarkably well as the director." The World wrote: "Here is a corking good idea for the screen. . . . Gripping film melodrama." Morning Telegraph: "Intensely dramatic photoplay."

Evening Telegram: "One of the most absorbing and gripping photoplays of the year."

Evening World: "Even more gripping on the screen than it was on the speaking stage."

Sun: "Likely to draw floods of patronage. . . . Was keenly appreciated by audiences."

Mail: "From the play a surprisingly strong picture has been evolved."

Goldwyn Announces Dates for Releases

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces the release dates of six of its productions following "Remembrance," Sherlock Holmes" and "The Sin Flood."

The latest schedule carries the Goldwyn company up to the latter part of January and assigns definite release dates to two pictures that are awaited with particular interest: Marshall Neilan's production of "The Strangers' Banquet," December 31, and Maurice Tourneur's production of Hall Caine's "The Christian," January 21. "Ben Hur" is another super production now in the making.

"Brothers Under the Skin," made from a Peter B. Kyne story, directed by E. Mason Hopper, with a star cast, will be released November 19. On November 26 "Hungry Hearts," founded on Anzia Yezierska's book, directed by E. Mason Hopper, will be released.

A picturization, under the title of "A Blind Bargain," of Barry Pain's story, "The Octave of Claudius," directed by Wallace Worsley, will be released December 10. Lon Chaney is featured.

The Chicago Daily News $10,000 prize winning scenario, which Goldwyn produced, is scheduled for release December 24. This is an Allen Holubar production.

Two of Playgoers

Two features have places in Playgoers' schedule of November releases. One is a drama, the other a Western.

"The Man and the Moment," after the novel of the same name by Elinor Glyn, is set for release November 5. It is a five-reeler and was placed with Playgoers for distribution by Attractions Distributing Corporation.

"The Man Who Waited," a five-part Western, is to be released November 19.

Universal Works on "Ghost Patrol"

The Sinclair Lewis novel, "The Ghost Patrol," which Universal is filming with Nat Ross as the director, has been put in work with a cast of unusual strength.

Bessie Love and Ralph Graves, stars in their own rights, portray the romantic leading roles. The big character of the story, an old New York "copper," is impersonated by George Nichols.

George B. Williams and Max Davidson, both noted for their character work in the Universal-Jewel success, "No Woman Knows," are enacting roles of similar importance in "The Ghost Patrol."

Lydia Yeatman Titus is one of the most capable character women and one of the most outstanding "types" of the screen, and her work in a principal part promises noteworthy quality. George Cooper, Melbourne MacDowell and Jack Carlyle handle other roles.

"The Ghost Patrol" was prepared for filming by E. T. Lowe, Jr., and Raymond Schrock, the scenario editor at Universal City.

Nat Ross, director of several Hoot Gibson successes, is in charge of the production.

Breaks Records of Film Showings

All records for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in Stockholm, Sweden, were broken during the week of October 22, when fourteen recent Paramount pictures were on exhibition in the leading theatres of the city.

During that week, also "The Sheik" was in the third week of its run at the Rialto and Sibyllan theatres, Stockholm, where all previous box-office records have been smashed, both for duration of run and receipts.

Success Expected with New Film

A six-reel feature which officials of the organization confidently predict will prove a great popular success, is "Breaking Home Ties," set for release by Associated Exhibitors November 12.

From all reports the production has been excellently done. Richard Farrell, Arthur Ashley, Lee Kohlman, Rebecca Weintraub and Betty Howe have the principal parts.

Eight Week Run

American Releasing Corporation has entered upon an eight weeks' occupancy of the B. S. Moss Cameo Theatre, New York, opening Sunday, October 29, with Ray C. Smallwood's Pyramid production, "Queen of the Moulin Rouge," from the famous play by Paul Potter.

Several of the special productions being distributed by American Releasing will follow "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" in the Cameo and then will be played across the metropolitan circuits in New York City and Brooklyn.

Many Indians Used in Paramount Film

Under the guidance of Major T. J. McCoy, of Wyoming, now associated with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in making "The Covered Wagon," James Cruze's Paramount production, a half dozen train loads of Bannock, Crow, Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians have passed through Salt Lake City during the past few days en route for Milford and Meek Ranch. Several carloads of horses and equipment, including tepees, saddles, war bonnets, bed rolls, etc., have been attached to the trains.

"It has been a task of no small proportions," declared Major McCoy. "You would hardly believe that some of the older men of these tribes, after we had secured the necessary permission to bring them from the reservations, refused utterly because they believed it was a scheme to break up their reservations. We lost a couple of lots because of their suspicions, but have the pick of the entire country as it is."

Making Progress

Word just received from Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, who recently arrived in Los Angeles after a four weeks' business visit at the Selznick home offices in the East, is to the effect that splendid progress is being made in the filming of the big Selznick special, starring Owen Moore.

The special is being made under the title of "A Dollar Down," with story and direction by Victor Heerman. The principal feminine role is in the hands of Alice Lake.

Enthusiastic Over New Picture

Though hobbliing about on a broken leg which, while mending continues to cause him severe pain, Edward A. MacManus, just returned to New York, is none the less enthusiastic over the second production which he has completed in Porto Rico for Associated Exhibitors.

The new MacManus picture is after an original story by Charles A. Logue and now bears the working title, "Allah Is Allah."

In Country Store Comedy Film

Larry Semon's latest comedy, "The Counter Jumper," as the title suggests, deals with a country general store. Lucille Carlisle is leading woman.

"The Counter Jumper" is said to be up to the high standard established by Semon, and to be due for a boisterous welcome.

Universal to Re-issue Valentino Picture

Universal announces the re-issue of "All Night," a feature production made several years ago with Carmel Myers and Rodolph Valentino as the leading players. It will be released as a Universal Special and will be accompanied by new prints, paper, press sheets, slides, lobby cards and other accessories.

Universal recently re-issued the "Delicious Little Devil," a feature production with Mae Murray and Rodolph Valentino. It met with instant success and exhibitors all over the country have cleaned up with it. "All Night" will be released under similar conditions. It is being put out as the result of a demand on the part of exhibitors for more Rodolph Valentino re-issues.

"Once to Every Woman," another Universal picture in which Valentino had an important role and which has been shown in thousands of theatres throughout the country during the last two years, suddenly took a new lease on life about six months ago. The demand for it became so great new prints had to be ordered and new press sheets and accessories made up.

New Sales Records Show Big Business

Exchange of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., are in the midst of a "Harvest Time" sales contest which shows that business has "come back" with a big punch.

The contest opened October 2 and closes November 25. Reports for the first three weeks indicate that sales records are being smashed in each of the branch exchanges, and branch managers and salesmen are enthusiastic over the big business which is being brought in under the First National banner.

The awards consist of a first prize of $300, a second of $200, third of $150 and a fourth of $100 to the winning salesmen in each of the following sales districts: Canadian, Eastern, Western, Mid-Western, Central, and Southern. In other words, there will be four awards in each district, or twenty-four in all, which means that one salesman out of every four should come forth a winner. In case of a tie for any of the prizes, each of the contestants so tied will receive the full amount of the prize tied for.

Philadelphia Gives Film Big Reception

The Rex Ingram production, "The Prisoner of Zenda," was given its Philadelphia premiere at the Aldine Theatre, on the evening of October 23, at which time was celebrated the taking over of the theatre by Marcus Loew, president of Metro Pictures Corporation. Twenty-five motion picture stars accompanied Mr. Loew in a private car from New York.

In Philadelphia they were met by a band, which took its place at the head of an automobile parade to the City Hall. The company was next received by Mayor Moore, and Mr. Loew was given the key to the city at the reception which took place. Rex Ingram, maker of "The Prisoner of Zenda," and Alice Terry, Princess Flavia in the film and Mrs. Ingram in real life, were also presented to the Mayor. In the evening the party was present at the premiere. A supper dance in honor of the celebrities was held at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel.

Advertising Campaign

Twenty-five thousand dollars, will be expended by Sawyer and Lubin in an exploitation campaign for "Quincy Adams Sawyer" the forthcoming Metro-SL special production translating to the screen this famous novel by Charles Felton Pidgin.

Sawyer and Lubin's programme for the campaign includes: A full page advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post; nation-wide distribution of an eight-page broadside explaining how to cash in on this; a special photoplay edition of the novel; publication of a condensed version in over 500 newspapers; distribution of effective advertising novelties, and of autographed photographs of the cast; oil paintings for lobby display, and huge banners, large enough to carry names and photographs of all the players.

Co-operation of the publishers of the book, Grossett and Dunlap, has been obtained, and the result is a special photoplay edition of the novel, illustrated with twelve scenes from the photoplay. A complete short story version of the photoplay will be published in more than 500 newspapers. Many novelties have been devised.

Organization Adds to Sales Force

W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, announces addition of several new members to that organization's already large staff of salesmen.

A. H. Livzey becomes a member of the force at the Detroit branch, Vincent Trainor at Newark, Floyd Rice at Atlanta and John C. Cain at Pittsburgh, while Jack Schaefer is appointed sales representative in the New Orleans office.

Will Soon Send Out Prints of Film

Select exchanges throughout the country are receiving daily shipments of advertising accessories on the big J. Parker Read, Jr., picture, "Pawned," which the Select company are about to release. Prints will be in the branches within the next few days.

"Pawned" is from a story by Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man." Irvin V. Willatt directed the filming. Tom Moore and Edith Roberts are the featured players.

Big Audiences See Griffith Film

Entering its second week at the Apollo Theatre, New York, "One Exciting Night," the D. W. Griffith production, continues to draw capacity audiences, United Artists states.

For the purpose of bringing new faces and new methods to his silversheet the players, for the most part, were selected because of their lack of motion picture experience.

Exhibitors Anxious for S. L. Film

In connection with the forthcoming release of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" by Metro Pictures Corporation, it is said that hundreds of exhibitors throughout the New England states are requesting immediate bookings for this film.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" is an S-L special, produced under the supervision of Arthur H. Sawyer and directed by Clarence Badger.

Making Big Preparations for Paramount Convention

Word comes from Los Angeles that elaborate plans are being formulated for the entertainment of the Famous Players-Lasky convention which opens in that city November 21.

The Eastern delegation, headed by Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and S. R. Kent and comprising the home office executives and eastern district and branch managers, will leave by special train over the New York Central November 16. The train will run as the second section of the Lake Shore Limited to Chicago, where the delegation from the North Central exchanges will be picked up. From Chicago the route will be over the Santa Fe, with a stop at Kansas City to take on the representatives from the Middle West.

The party will arrive in Los Angeles Monday, November 20, and will be met at the station by Mayor Cryer, member of the City Council, representatives of the Chambers of Commerce of Los Angeles and Hollywood and other prominent citizens. The visitors will be escorted to the Hotel Ambassador, which will be the convention headquarters, and there they will be officially welcomed by Mayor Cryer.

Following the opening of the convention a big dinner will be given at the Lasky studio, the guests including hundreds of Hollywood picture people and prominent citizens of Los Angeles and Hollywood. The business sessions will last four days and at their conclusion another dinner will be given in honor of the visitors on Friday evening at the Ambassador.

Between seventy-five and a hundred official representatives of the company will attend the convention, which will be the largest gathering of its kind the West Coast film capital has ever entertained.

Those going to the convention with the main party are as follows: Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, S. R. Kent, E. E. Shauer, Marcus Loew, Gerald E. Akers, Harry Ballance, P. A. Bloch, of Philadelphia; A. M. Botsford, advertising manager; P. N. Brinch, of Boston; H. H. Buxhaum, New York district manager; John Clark, divisional sales manager; H. B. Franklin, G. B. J. Frawley, of the home office; Harry Hunter, of Washington; J. H. MacIntyre, of Portland, Me.; John D. Powers, of New Haven; Charles E. McCarthy, publicity manager; Henry Salsbury, of the home office; Claud Saunders, exploitation manager; Walter R. Scates, of Boston; George J. Schaefer, New England district manager; Mel Shauer, accessory sales manager; W. E. Smith, Philadelhia district manager; George Spidell, general purchasing agent; E. W. Nichols, of Des Moines; Frank Newman, of Kansas City; R. D. Thompson, of Omaha; Oscar Morgan and George Meeker, representing Cosmopolitan, and A. O. Dillenbeck, of the Hanff-Metzger advertising agency.

Players Chosen to Suit Screen Roles

The characters in George Ade's screen story, "Back Home and Broke," which is now being produced at the Paramount Long Island studio with Thomas Meighan, are certain well-known small town types, and to be assured of characterizations which will be true to life, Director Al Green and Meighan, together with Mr. Ade, have been carefully considering players for these well-defined parts. Accordingly a cast of seasoned screen and stage players has been chosen to portray the realistic activities of the townspeople of Bradford.

Frederick Burton, who appeared recently with Alice Brady in "Anna Ascends," the screen version of Harry Chapman Ford's play, has the role of a small town banker in the Ade story. Another former member of the "Anna Ascends" cast is Florence Dixon, now playing Olivia Hornby, Tom Meighan's fickle sweetheart in "Back Home and Broke."

Others in the cast are Lila Lee, Cyril Ring, Laurance Wheat and Gertrude Quinlan, Ned Burton, Charles Abbe, Maud Turner Gordon, Ned Borden and James Marlowe.

"The Young Rajah" for Early Release

Rodolph Valentino in "The Young Rajah," an adaptation of the play, "Amos Judd," by Alethea Luce and the novel of the same name by the late John Ames Mitchell, is the Paramount feature for release November 12.

Here is, it is said, one of the most fascinating stories in the whole realm of American fiction, scenarized by June Mathis, who adapted "Blood and Sand" and "The Four Horsemen," and directed by Philip Rosen, one of the most capable men on the Paramount directorial staff. The picture has been most lavishly produced, it is said, with a reproduction of the Indian Durbar and a college boat race, with a background of handsome steam yachts and a myriad of darting motorboats, among its high lights.

Wanda Hawley, as leading woman, and Charles Ogle head the supporting cast.

Selznick Holds Successful Showing of "One Week of Love" at Hotel

What proved to be a crowd representative of "Who's Who in the Motion Picture Industry" gathered at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, on Friday evening, November 3, applauded enthusiastically Selznick's newest melodramatic production, "One Week of Love," co-starring Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle, and later adjourned to the Crystal Room where they pranced, danced and frolicked to the syncopated strains of a Paul Whiteman aggregation of jazz hounds. Pronounced the "prince of entertainers," L. J. Selznick, president of Selznick Corporation, was sought out by the same 2,000 film folks who jammed into the spacious hall at each of the two showings, made necessary because of the unexpected large attendance, and warmly congratulated for giving the trade one of the most thrilling productions of the season.

While special trade showings at exclusive New York hotels have become common occurrences, the Selznick showing was blazed with a pretentiousness and replete with an atmosphere of sociability that put it in a class all by its lonesome. The showing was carefully staged without a single hitch, the presentation being artistically given. That the audiences enjoyed the picture was evidenced from the frequent outbursts of applause. Following each showing the guests were invited to the Crystal Room where dancing was in full swing until the wee morning hours.

Seek $5,500 for Breach of Film Contract

Suit has been filed in the New York Supreme Court by the Harmony Film Company of Los Angeles, Cal., against the Sunnywest Films, Inc., and Jacob Berkowitz, its president, and Bernard H. Mills, its treasurer, to recover $5,500. In the complaint filed in the County Clerk's office, it is alleged that on February 4, last, an agreement was entered into between the litigants, whereby it was agreed that the defendants for a valuable consideration would pay to the plaintiff $3,000 on May 1, last, and $2,500 on July 1, last. It is charged by the plaintiff that it has lived up to all the requirements of the agreement, but despite repeated demands the Harmony people declare they have been unable to collect the $5,500. The papers in the suit were filed by Woodward, Dennis & Buhler, of 261 Broadway, counsel for plaintiffs.

Suit to recover $9,248.06 from the Clark-Cornelious Corporation has been brought in the New York Supreme Court by Milhurn Morante and Frank D. Fowler of Long Beach, Cal., through their attorneys, Phillips, Mahoney and Leihell of 51 Chambers street. According to the complaint filed in the County Clerk's office, it is alleged that on May 24 last the plaintiffs drew up a bill of exchange to defendant requiring the latter to pay to the order of the plaintiff the sum sued for on October 15 last, at the Pacific Bank, 729 Seventh avenue. It is alleged that the bill of exchange was given by defendants for a valuable consideration, and was duly accepted by the Clark-Cornelious Corporation.

However, when the paper fell due it is alleged the Clark-Cornelious Corporation failed to honor same, and allowed the paper to go to protest. Failing since then to collect the indebtedness plaintiffs were obliged to bring suit for recovery.

According to a report of Arthur Ofner, referee, filed in the New York Supreme Court, Josiah B. Millet, associated with the New England Motion Picture Corporation, is entitled to $2,500 compensation from the Master Productions, Ltd., Emil Wertheimer, Arthur L. Fullman, J. Frank Brockless, Inc., and Arnold B. Carrick for depreciation to the value of "Land of Rising Sun," the ownership of which is claimed by Millet.

Millet brought suit in the Supreme Court for damages for an "invasion of and interference with his exhibition rights to the picture in Great Britain," and the matter was referred to Mr. Ofner to adjudicate. The picture deals with various forms of life in Japan, and had a private exhibit in this city at which Japanese Ambassador at Washington was present, and subsequently it was exhibited at the Rialto Theatre.

"Curse of Drink" Political Tieup

L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North's exploitation forces this past week negotiated a tieup that ranks among the best of the season. The tieup involved clever exploitation for that firm's production, "The Curse of Drink." The Prohibition question became an issue in virtually every State engaged in pre-election controversies.

St. Louis

Sam Werner of the Federated Exchange, St. Louis, with his lineup of pictures for 1922-23 complete, is concentrating every effort on getting a 100 per cent. showing for his pictures.

Jack Underwood of Enterprise Exchange in St. Louis joins Mr. Leonard in the statement that conditions generally among the exhibitors are improving, and despite the theatre situation in this section the State right exchanges with box office pictures will not want for dates.

Rose Tapley Returns

After five years' absence from the screen, Rose Tapley returns in George Melford's Paramount production of "Java Head" in the role of Rhoda Ammidon. She is the screen mother of four charming girls, and she likes her children and her part so well that she is hoping for another young mother part, which she says is her natural role.

Edmund Goulding, playwright, is making an adaptation of F. Marion Crawford's novel, "The White Sister," for Inspiration Pictures Corporation. Lillian Gish will appear as the star. Mr. Goulding recently finished an original story called "Fury," as a starring vehicle for Richard Barthelmess. He is now at work on another story for the same star.

Says Showmen Will Benefit by Contest

With sturdy insistence that exhibitors will directly profit from patron interests intelligently served, Pathe rests its latest sales contest on claims which are not often pressed in such a connection. This contest, which began at midnight on November 4 and will end at midnight on December 30, is named in honor of E. A. Eschmann, general sales manager.

"From the beginning of this contest," says Mr. Eschmann, "every Pathe salesman becomes consciously a missionary for bigger and more stable picture attendance. That his services have operated in that direction for more than two years past is proved by the present enormous vogue of Pathe short subjects.

"This contest, therefore, with its generous prizes, is largely in the nature of a reward for having in so great a degree consolidated exhibitor faith in the popular attractions contained in the entire list of widely varied Pathe subjects."

The prizes in the Eschmann Sales Contest will foot up a total of about $7,000—according to the number of salesmen competitors at each branch exchange. The first, second and third prizes are divided as follows: Manager—$750, $500 and $300; Assistant Manager—$400, $275 and $175; Each Salesman—$300, $200 and $125; Booker—$270, $175 and $100; Cashier—$250, $175 and $100. In case of a tie all branches so tying shall receive equal prizes.

The figures on which the results will be based and on which the winners will be determined were arrived at by computations which are considered to make this the most equitable form of contest yet evolved. It provides just consideration, first of all, for the men on the firing line—for the salesmen, who are in direct communication with the exhibitors and upon whom producers and distributors must rely very largely to hold their product in the public estimation which it deserves.

Stars Play Second Fiddle to Stories

A new policy in picture production has been established at Universal City by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, according to a statement just issued at the Universal home office. A sharp trend away from the star system has resulted, and at present Universal is devoting its efforts mostly to pictures with high quality casts but no featured players.

This innovation has come about as the result of several experiments by Universal with non-star pictures. In the last few months several of these have been made and inserted in the Universal Attraction schedule. Each of them was a decided success it is said. Among them were such popular pictures as "The Long Chance," with Henry B. Walthall, Marjorie Daw and Ralph Graves in the cast, and "The Jilt," with Marguerite de la Motte, Matt Moore and Ralph Graves.

Universal now has six important non-star pictures in production. More attention even than ever before is to be paid to the worth of the stories, and less to the individual star, it is said.

Sacred Film Given Strong Endorsement

A special meeting of the Better Films Committee of Atlanta, Ga., was called October 30 to preview the Abraham series of Sacred Films brought from the Coast by Larry Weingarten. Mrs. B. M. Boykin, president of the Better Films Committee, presided at the meeting.

Following the screening the committee gave the production its emphatic endorsement. Mrs. Boykin said: "Sacred Films is to be congratulated. This latest of its productions approaches the high standard it has set in educational, inspirational and entertaining values with its former pictures. We have implicit belief that Sacred Films will prove of great value in furthering the cause of cleaner pictures."

Mr. Weingarten responded and told the committee that its endorsement was appreciated, but asked that it go further and aid in creating a demand for such pictures.

Pathe Says "Dr. Jack" Is Harold Lloyd's Greatest Picture Achievement

With Harold Lloyd "in the air" everywhere as being one of the most popular of screen comedians, Pathe announces that that enviable position will be made doubly secure by the forthcoming feature comedy release, "Dr. Jack." When General Manager Elmer Pearson, during his recent visit to the West Coast, saw "Dr. Jack" screened at the Hal Roach Studios and in preview at three different types of theatres, he unhesitatingly pronounced it to be the comedian's greatest and most widely-appealing achievement—"the summit of popular screen entertainment, while providing more hearty laughs than even 'Grandma's Boy' supplies."

This verdict has been fully ratified as the result of screenings for other Pathe officials and executives and the screen committee at the home office. The inference is plain—that Lloyd need entertain no misgivings about the public reception of "Dr. Jack," following on the heels of the extraordinary record made by "Grandma's Boy" in the first five months of its run. "Dr. Jack," in fact, is a friendly challenge made to its immediate predecessor, whose outstanding, uninterrupted runs, up to this date, range from nineteen to two weeks of capacity houses in the following citics: Los Angeles, Portland, Ore., Atlantic City, San Francisco, Chicago, Boston, Indianapolis, Toledo, New York City, Louisville, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Omaha, Seattle, Uniontown, Pa.

"Dr. Jack" is described as being triumphantly and familiarly human in its visualization, in a compact feature comedy form, of humorous and comical aspects of real life. The story and the characters are declared ideally to bear out the simple and captivating theme—common sense, instead of scientific subtlety, in treating human ills that are largely imaginary. The title character is a poor but lovable young country doctor whose keen gaze sees straight through the little hypocrisies of his "patients" and cures them by ingenious, practical methods in which "medicine" plays a ridiculously small part. This quality is illustrated by incidents that start the laughs going from the very beginning.

In the meantime the pretty daughter of an enormously rich father is being scientifically treated for a "mysterious illness"—of which she shows no evidences—by a pompous "Herr Professor," who has firmly established himself in the household, which he rules with the authority of a monarch. The rich father's level-headed lawyer, however—who has observed the common-sense methods employed by Dr. Jack, introduces him "for consultation." His cheery waving aside of the Herr Professor's scientific diagnosis and coddling treatment enrage the latter, whose opportunity for revenge comes when young Dr. Jack is almost immediately caught kissing his pretty and quite agreeable patient.

The two have fallen violently in love with each other. Dr. Jack declares that what she needs is "sunshine and some excitement." When the kissing episode gets him ordered from the house—he doesn't go, for the girl, and an "escaped lunatic" scare which upsets the whole household, combine to enable Dr. Jack to carry out the funniest series of incidents in Harold Lloyd's entire professional career.

Nothing but the screen itself is adequate to describe the riot of continuous comic action which is the theme of "Dr. Jack."

Many Unique Exploitation Possibilities in Harold Lloyd's "Dr. Jack"

To the exhibitor who believes the word exploitation means spending of money, "Dr. Jack," Harold Lloyd's first feature under his new Pathe contract, will be a welcome stranger.

Pathe officials believe that with a star as potent at the box office as Harold Lloyd and with the ideas, stunts, bally-hoo, novelties, posters, large ads and stories that have been conceived on this comedy sensation, that the exploitation possibilities are limited only by the brain power, personality and elbow-grease that the exhibitor puts into his showing and not the wads of greenbacks he spends after he books.

On previous Lloyds, ideas that cost little, led one enterprising exhibitor to send samples of wall paper to his patrons, notifying them that the run had been extended, because the crowds had pushed the paper off the wall.

Another showman has used the Lloyd cutout goggles repeatedly to put across a Harold Lloyd parade, which attracted two hundred kids marching down the main street, all advertising his showing of Lloyd. The entire stunt cost him two dollars.

Lobby cutouts, Lloyd impersonation contests, tie-ups with local optical shops displaying the goggles, have been ideas that have been successful and cost the showman comparatively nothing. On "Dr. Jack" the Pathe exploitation department are emphasizing the doctor's prescription idea for mail bally-hoo, and special invitations.

A novelty herald in the form of a playing card with Harold Lloyd's face replacing the Jack of Spades will be an innovation for the showman to use as a calling card of "Dr. Jack." The cost of these are three dollars per thousand.

A "Dr. Jack happy bag," a cardboard miniature representing a doctor's kit designed for bally-hoo by shops—to fill these kits with articles they sell and display in their windows—is a novelty that is bound to be popular, due not only to its out-of-the-ordinary appeal and usefulness, but its low cost.

Showmen who remember the popularity of the Gob's hat used in conjunction with "A Sailor-Made Man" will be happy to know that a cutout doctor's high hat will be ready for exploitation on "Dr. Jack." The cost again is low with results of proved high value.

All of these items, supplemented with cabinet photos of Lloyd for souvenirs at special matinees, oil paintings, posters and poster cutouts, with an array of advertising which include four quarter pages and one half page, are all endeavors to place the exploitation of Lloyd on a safe-and-sane basis so that to put over some big distinctive stunt or a bally-hoo that is exceptional will not break a showman's bank pile, but be an effective means of increasing it, says Pathe offices.

A special service campaign book, called "expLLOYDation" visualizing pictures of every plan, idea and stunt, will be available to the showman who wishes to wreck records with "Dr. Jack."

Mission Secures "Dr. Jack" for Big Exclusive Run

Pathe's guaranteed contract with the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, whereby that house secures an exclusive Southern California run of Harold Lloyd's new five-reel comedy, "Dr. Jack," is reported to be exceptional in the history of feature pictures of any type.

At the time of the execution of this contract all of the Los Angeles daily newspapers gave much space to the transaction. The following from the Los Angeles Express of October 20 is corroborated in its essentials at the Pathe home office:

"The Mission Theatre has secured Harold Lloyd's next five-reel comedy production, 'Dr. Jack,' at a figure which puts in the shade any monies put on record as having been guaranteed for the run of big feature productions. This sum of money includes the rental guarantee with the stipulation that 'Dr. Jack' will be shown at no other theatre in Southern California during the entire season.

"This extraordinary clause gives the Mission Theatre one of the most unusual booking arrangements ever accorded to a first-run picture. Harold Lloyd's new picture, when it goes on the Mission Theatre screen, cannot, by force of contract, be exhibited in any other Southern California city until the end of the 1922-23 season, which extends toward next June."

Magazines Reflecting Lloyd's Popularity

For many months past, Pathe notes, practically all of the successful "fan" magazines have steadily increased the space devoted to pictures and articles dealing with Harold Lloyd and his screen comedy productions.

As all exhibitors are aware, there is no more reliable printed record reflecting the general screen patron estimate of a star and his typical productions than is contained in these widely circulated publications.

At the present time, with the coming of "Dr. Jack," Lloyd's second feature length comedy, these records agree in placing Harold Lloyd in a class by himself at the top of the list of screen comedians.

Lloyd Demonstrates His Versatility

That Harold Lloyd, the comedian, should be able to demonstrate first class qualities of a real hero-lover without abating any of the power of his characteristic comedy "punch," is described as one of the most impressive achievements of Lloyd in his forthcoming five-reel production, "Dr. Jack."

The many other unusual qualities of this production is declared to lift it into an unique position among screen masterpieces.

Selling the Picture to the Public

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Making Minor Accessories Show Results in Place of Merely Giving Them Away

WHILE this story deals directly with the distribution of the "fanfotos" of the Paramount stars put out by Paramount to advertise the players, it should be considered not in connection with these souvenirs but as a method of handling the distribution of any novelty accessory.

The fanfotos, as most exhibitors know, are a set if eighteen sepia prints of Paramount stars, autographed by the star and reproduced to give an almost perfect imitation of the original photograph. They were sold for $15 a thousand in quantities.

Most managers merely offered them as souvenirs to some special performance, used them backed with the program for some special week, or merely handed them out as advertisements.

Lem Wanted More

Lem Stewart, exploitation director for Southern Enterprises, possessed of greater vision, figured that they could be made to give more for the money, and he offered a special prize of $25 to the Southern Enterprises manager making the most effective use of the accessory. The conditions of the contest are best covered by these extracts from the circular letter he sent out:

"We believe they can be made a powerful sales asset—the purpose of these is not merely for distribution. The prize will be awarded that method which not only shows the greatest immediate return on the expenditure, but at the same time creates future good will. What this department is after is the method of getting the maximum sales value out of these photos."

The additional advice was given that people value most what they have to pay for, and the suggestion made that they be given value by demanding something in return—information, attendance or mailing list.

The prize was awarded Frank J. Miller, manager of theatres in Augusta, Ga., who conducted the identification contest in conjunction with the local newspaper, getting advertising valued at about $800 in return for his small investment of 59 sets of tickets and fifty pairs of passes good during Paramount Week.

His idea is not as new as some of the others, but effectiveness and not novelty was to be the test of the contest.

How He Worked It

The newspaper was permited to take all the credit for the stunt in return for the advertising. This included a four-column display—almost a quarter page—for three weeks before the contest, a number of readers, and a double truck the opening day of Paramount Week.

The eighteen pictures were displayed in a prominent window, with the rules of the contest. This was done a week in advance. On the Sunday which ushered in Paramount Week a double truck with eighteen advertisements was run. Each advertisement displayed a cut of one of the eighteen stars. Fifty sets of photos and fifty pairs of seats were offered for the fifty best lists. In addition to the identification, the contestant was required to name some of the plays in which each star had recently appeared and a play of theirs scheduled for early release, tying up to the display ads in the Saturday Evening Post and other papers.

Five thousand replies were received, and the winners were announced by the paper through the medium of the same double truck on Tuesday, this time with the identifications under the cuts, that the contestants might verify their lists.

In spite of the large number of replies received, there was no difficulty in deciding the winners, since minor errors made the reduction of the list a simple matter.

The checking was done more on the lists of plays than upon the names, since most of the players were well known, and the decision was made upon the fullness of the information given as to past and future appearances.

The Strand, Birmingham, Ala., opened an information booth in a local music store, the crowds drawn to the store through curi-

Not So Good

With righteous indignation, the Newark Star-Eagle asks a correction of the story recently appearing in this department concerning an athletic meet held in Newark and which, according to the story, was planned by the Branford Theatre and sold to the newspaper.

The amusement editor states that the idea originated in the offices of the Star-Eagle and not from the Branford, and that the painting for "The Eternal Flame" on the banner and bass drum as shown in the cut did not appear in the parade, there or elsewhere. It adds that the prize distribution was made on the field the day of the meet and not at the theatre, and adds: "Not only in your paper but in other motion picture publications there have been many misstatements on stunts we have put over for the local theatres. We do not mind the local manager of the theatre getting due credit, but we insist on correct statements."

Evidently some short-sighted press representative is killing the goose which lays the golden eggs.

Paramount Lobby Is Not Strikingly New

This Paramount lobby suggestion is by no means new. It has been used on a lot of other South Sea Island stories and probably will be used on a lot more, but it is simple and will catch the eye.

It is suggested that the lobby floor be sanded, to carry out the idea, but this depends on what you have on the floor of your foyer and auditorium. If there is sufficient marble or tile between the lobby and the carpets to let the sand be shaken off, the sand is a good stunt. Otherwise, it would be well to leave the sand out.

Japanese matting can be used to cover the box office if grass is not easy to procure. Make a conical roof and then sheath the sides, first bathing it in green dye, if you wish, or painting it in green and red stripes, alternating with the natural straw color. Matting can also be used as the mat for the still frames in place of the usual boards, and if Hallowe'en is not too remote, perhaps you can get some of the skull lanterns to suggest the head hunters.

The banner shows the title of one of the leading songs from the current Ziegfeld Follies, and perhaps you can tie the music store to a display on the song. It is worth a try, at any rate.

A Paramount Release

THIS CONVENTIONAL LOBBY WILL SELL "EBB TIDE" IN A PINCH

It is not up to the Paramount standard, but it suggests the usual idea and is simple and effective. The cutouts are from the three sheets and the grass should come from some marsh or river bank, if you can find one. The banner is a slogan, and not the title.

osity making a sufficient number of purchases, once they were there, to more than repay the space.

Here a girl offered to reply to any questions concerning Paramount stars, and a portrait of the applicant's favorite player was given him free. To obtain this, he was required to fill in a blank giving name and address and star preference, supplying the house with a mailing list and data for special circularization. A side angle to this scheme was the distribution of ten pairs of seats each day to the visitors.

To draw for these would be to constitute a lottery and the attendant was instructed to use her good judgment in the distribution, giving out the passes to persons she thought would most appreciate them. This added to interest through uncertainty. If the attendant waited upon someone who did not seem to be a dyed-in-the-wool fan, she would hand out a pair of seats with the suggestion that the recipient really should see "Nice People," and make a convert.

This must be done intelligently, but you need an intelligent girl to answer the questions properly.

Guessed the Contents

A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., put a set of the photographs in a chest in the lobby, together with a five-dollar gold piece. Blanks were supplied on which persons were permitted to guess at the contents of the chest. Many guessed fanfotos and were given one, but on one thought to add the five dollars.

Several hundred names were added to the mailing list.

The fotos were then given as souvenirs at a "weak" matinee.

Two Punch Stunts

A. H. Cobb, Jr., of the Alamo Theatre, Griffin, Ga., had small cards printed up with five numbers. A number was punched each time the holder witnessed a Paramount picture. On the fifth visit the card was turned in with the holder's name and address and the name of the star desired. This gave the mailing list.

New cards could be obtained on request and a second and succeeding photographs obtained. Ten dollars is offered the patron first obtaining a complete set, which will require the witnessing of 90 Paramount plays and the investment of $22.50 in the case of an adult or $9 in the event a child first completes the series. Many of the patrons have already obtained two or more of the fotos.

I. C. Holloway, of Columbus, Ga., confined his punch idea to the children. A Columbus paper started the story of Jackie Coogan's career in six chapters. On the Tuesday following the first publication, every child who presented the first chapter of the story was given a ticket good any afternoon of that week, and good, as well, to a special showing of "The Little Princess" on Saturday morning. The tickets cost the kiddies one cent.

After their dual use they retained the cards, and when ten punches had been acquired they were entitled to their choice of any one of eleven of the portraits.

His adult stunt was to display the fotos in a window and give copies to the persons who could correctly name the stars in ten recent pictures indicated on a slip supplied all applicants. As the slips had to be signed, this also served to freshen the mailing list.

One of the Best

In the opinion of this writer, one of the best stunts was turned in by A. C. Cowles, of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C. It was held out of first money, probably because it was limited in its scope, but its attention value was far in excess of the number of persons approached, particularly in a small town.

Mr. Cowles took one hundred photographs (twenty-five sets of four each), had had them cut into quarters. Four quarters, precisely alike, were then mailed to as many women patrons. For example, one woman got four slips each showing the upper right hand quarter of Gloria Swanson's face.

It was her task to lay off three of these quarters to three other women, each of whom also had a section of the Swanson picture, but a different quarter. Each woman who assembled all four quarters of the picture was given an uncut picture of the same star and a free admission to the theatre.

Only one hundred photographs were sent out, but no woman knew who had received other quarters, so she asked everyone she knew and many she did not know that she might complete the portrait. Several thousand inquiries were made.

This is a variation of the old Fred Greene cut advertisement, but in this case there were no holdouts. All four quarters were sent out.

Opinion Getters

Charles H. Amos merely offered a foto to any person who would tell over their signature and address why they liked Paramount pictures. The best answer was rewarded with a thirty-day pass but everyone got a foto. This gave him newspaper mention a window display and several hundred names of persons who had crystallized their appreciation through having had to put it into written words—which is the real angle of this stunt.

C. B. Wines, of the Diamond Theatre, Tuscaloosa, hooked to the Paramount national advertising. You had to read these advertisements to be able to reply to the questionnaire which brought out a free foto. He got a tie-up with the newsdealer.

Other managers worked along lines similar to those given above, so their stunts are not repeated but this symposium if retained in your files will give you stunts through which you will be able to put over any similar stunt. For example, a 25-punch card might be rewarded with a Jackie Coogan snuggle pup, or ten punched cards laid off to your freinds being a set of Lorna Doone pearls. The schemes are elastic and may be stretched to fit your requirements.

"THE OLD HOMESTEAD" SEEMS TO HAVE LOST A STORY

But there was enough left to sell the play to advantage in the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga. The display was planned by Frank J. Miller, Manager of Theatres. The lantern was cutout and an amber globe placed behind it. The house was also lighted from behind.

AN EFFECTIVE FRONT FOR "GRANDMA'S BOY" FROM OKLAHOMA

Lloyd is killing them down South, and Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, got his share with a telling black and white front with checkered border and two giant cutouts from the lithographs. He gained 40 per cent.

"THE MASQUERADER" ENJOYS A LONG STREET CAR RIDE

The Strand Theatre, Pasadena, used the bannered street car for 'The Masquerader" and gave Guy Bates Post a pass over the entire system. The paper is pasted to a canvas foundation to guard against blowdown; a better idea than rigging up a board.

Eight Pages

Eight-page hook-up sections were common some years ago, but they have dropped down to a double of late. In Cumberland, Md., Leslie F. Whelan, Washington Paramounteer, arranged for an eight-page hook-up for "The Old Homestead" at the Liberty Theatre. He had twenty-four merchant ads, so he wrote a 24-word panegyric for the play, printed it and then sank one word into each of the advertising displays. The stunt was to mark these words in the ads for ticket prizes and $30 in cash.

With the legend printed out, this was more simple than making the reader find the words and then arrange them himself, but Whelan evidently wisely figured that digging them out would be enough of a job to tax the Cumberland intellect. Eight words should be the limit to a do it yourself arrangement.

Style Show for $13

Charles E. Saseen, of the Queen theatre, Galveston, put on a style show with "Her Gilded Cage," and got a third more business than usual at a cost to him of only $13. This was for eighteen inches of extra advertising.

The local merchant who co-operated paid for the building of a stage and runway, gave window and store interior displays, hired extra light men, paid for special wiring, used large newspaper spaces and stood all of the other expenses and then thanked Mr. Saseen for his co-operation.

And he brought in a lot of new people, some of whom may become regulars.

Hart Holds Record

Perhaps because he was just about to get married J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace theatre, El Paso, ran up on gilded cages. Anyhow he put a gilt cage with a cutout in the centre of his lobby as a sop to convention and then went ahead and put cages around the four three-sheet boards, with potted plants at the base of each. It made a very neat display.

Then he took some of his house staff over to the Stadium, where Geraldine Farrar was about to give a concert, and opened and placed the 3,000 folding chairs used, thoughtfully placing a herald in each seat. It was a back breaking job to swing all the chairs, but Edgar never was afraid of work.

Different Windows Win Best Position

The best windows are generally those most difficult to get into, and they are the best often because they are exclusive. To get recognition is to win a certain cachet of achievement.

The Liberty theatre, Pittsburgh, recently won a store window through an unusual display.

A First National Release

THE ART WINDOW DISPLAY

This is supposed to be "the Goddess of Art proclaiming the beauties of 'The Eternal Flame,' while two humble students bow at her feet." Maybe it is that, but certainly it is a fine display and no one cares much what it means. They get the message that Miss Talmadge is at the Liberty, and that is the main point. The eternal three foot candle is also in evidence and works in well with the rest of the structure.

Painted lobby floors are not new, but combining a pasted lithograph cut-out as the basis of a floor design seems to be the next step in advance. It was worked by Tom Clemmons, of the Tivoli theatre, Beaumont, Texas, for Mabel Normand in "Head Over Heels," and worked into a very pretty effect.

TWO EARLY STUNTS ON "EAST IS WEST" REPORTED BY A. G. STOLTE, OF THE DES MOINES THEATRE

One shows a 'rickshaw used for the street work and the other an adaptation of the Rothapfel prologue, a sketch of which was recently given in this department. This is all well enough as a prologue, if you still go in for such things, but it is better when worked in a store window, as can very easily be arranged if you persuade the merchant that it will make people look at his other windows.

Auto Perambulator Stimulates Memory

Election may be over, but you can use the auto reminder for any other local event to help put over "Remembrance," just as effectively as did the Main theatre, Uniontown, Pa.

A Goldwyn Release

A PERAMBULATING TICKLER

This can be worked on any local event of a non-competitive nature, and if you pick out something of general local interest, you can banner as many cars as you are willing to buy the cloth for by hooking the local club or working through garage managers.

The Main also used the same text on tack cards all over town.

Had Novel Scheme for "Pharaoh" Film

One of the El Paso newspapers gets its print paper wound on pasteboard cylinders instead of the iron tubes used in other sections. They are waste after the paper is run off, and they gladly gave them to J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace theatre, when he asked for them. Painted up to represent marble, they gave a palace effect to the lobby for "The Love of Pharoah" that was really striking.

For this centre display he built a compo board reproduction of the treasure chamber, which figures in the story, and in the top of this he set a phonograph on the disc of which was one of the Oriental shimmy dancers now sold by most phonograph shops. With an Oriental record on the machine and a repeater attachment, he achieved a striking display at very little cost, and the structure wholly concealed the phonograph, permitting only the dancer to show.

It was a good display even for this lobby specialist and the better because it kept the dressing against the walls and made the entire lobby space the display.

A FOYER STAGE FOR THE DISPLAY OF SLIM SHOULDERS

Plan Book Schemes Win in Los Angeles

There still seems to exist a too-common impression that plan books are printed merely to give a job to some press agent, and far too many of them go into the waste basket practically unread.

Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, put over "Timothy's Quest" to three weeks of continuously good business recently, and did it on the schemes laid forth in the American plan book. The advertising was picked out from the book, and drives were made successively on parents, teachers and school children; the latter being supplemented by 50,000 cards to the kiddies with the announcement of an essay contest.

Another angle was the drive on women's clubs, and any organization selling 10,000 or more tickets was entitled to 25% of the proceeds for the club funds. In smaller towns this quota should be reduced to proportion to the house, but the scheme can be worked advantageously and the women's clubs will get solidly behind a picture of this type.

Purely plan book schemes held up business for a three week run. Get a new slant on the press books.

A First National Release

IT COMES EASY WHEN YOU LEARN HOW TO TURN THE TRICK

The only difference between this and hundreds of similar banners is that H. C. Everhart, of the Fotosho Theatre, Suffolk, Va., added "Buy in Suffolk" to the Smilin' Through banner—and the merchants paid for it and got it up as well.

Bundled Them In

There is no particular connection between Bill Hart and old clothes, but down in Austin, Texas, some 200 school children were unable to attend school because of a lack of proper clothing.

Ray Whitfield, of the Majestic theatre, announced that all children who would bring a bundle of clothing to the theatre on Saturday morning between eleven and one could see "Traveling On" free, and he just let the piles of discarded but still wearable garments accumulate for the moral effect it had upon the adults. Working in with the local paper, he also got all manner of write-ups of the sort that have a lasting effect because they deal with the house rather than the show of the day.

Dancing Exploits

An "Old Homestead" dance was one of the stunts of the Crown theatre, New London, Conn. Prizes were offered for the best rural costumes, and this gave an excuse for putting out "Old Homestead" stills some weeks in advance of the showing. This was also good for display windows.

If you can, lay off the dance to some local organization and be content with the publicity it will bring.

An American Release

HERE YOU CAN PLAY THE RACES OR PLAY CHECKERS AS YOU LIKE

Tom Clemmons, of the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, Texas, borrowed a race game from a carnival for "My Old Kentucky Home," and dressed his house staff in Jockey costumes. The floor was done in a checkerboard design with red and white watercolor.

A Double Raffles Made for Comment

Even the Raffles idea; ancient though it may be, is capable of being freshened. The police pinched a Raffles used by the Mary Anderson for "The Masquerader." The plea was that he was causing crowds to congregate.

The action was loudly denounced by a second man who claimed that the person under arrest was not the Raffles at all and that he alone was the sole and authorized name-blown-in-the-bottle Raffles.

As the police had tipped the reporters off that they were going to make the arrest, the incident was fully covered in the papers, of course, from a humorous angle, which always makes for the best reading.

And that laid the foundation for a tie-up with the Post on masquerades and assumed identities contributed by the readers. It clung to the front page for four days. Of course, the double Raffles and the pinch was a plant.

Hooked Up U. S. M.

Most theatres do their mail exploitation with one and two-cent stamps, but the Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles, did it with a hook-up.

It persuaded the local postmaster to proclaim a Fast Mail Week, when special efforts would be made to speed up mail deliveries. Prizes, donated by the house, were offered for the most speedy handling of the mails by carrier, by delivery wagons and letter sorters, and the newspapers fell for the novelty idea and helped things along with reading stories.

And all the mail trucks were bannered for the Fox release. That's coming pretty soft.

Endorsed by Flappers

In some Southern cities the flappers are "off" Rodolph Valentino because he wears a pigtail in "Blood and Sand," but Ray Whitfield, of the Majestic theatre, Austin, Texas, persuaded the Valentino club to come in a body and give their endorsement to the picture. As the club is composed of the socially elect, it had its due effect.

Mr. Whitfield also sent out a thousand highly perfumed notes giving publicity to the attraction, and distributed a thousand rotogravures.

Not Murder, But—

J. M. Blanchard, of the Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pa., often supplies the Rotary or Kiwanis club with the letterheads on which the weekly notice is sent out. A recent Kiwanis notice has the "Drive carefully" stunt spread over the top fifth of the sheet, and at the bottom is the line: "Stationery supplied by the Strand. You may think this is getting away with murder, but it's Manslaughter."

It took Blanchard and Eli Orowitz, the Philadelphia Paramounteer, to evolve that line, but it's a peach. See if you can work it. The public service angle will justify any business club in using the warning.

His Old Suitcases Made Fine Display

J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome theatre, Waco, had used the cutout stars so often that when he came to play "A Trip to Paramountown" he felt that something would put over the short length to better advantage.

The "trip" gave him his idea. From a trunk store he borrowed a lot of old suitcases and these were hung in the lobby and stacked around the base of the wall, fifteen or twenty being used. The big announcement was made on a battered old trunk.

After the showing a damp cloth erased the water colors and he sent them back to the store. The cost was only that for paint, plus a few passes to the obliging storekeeper. The effect was unusually good.

Kidded a Kiddie

Taking the gifts the gods provided, Manager Dundee, of the Strand theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D., hooked his publicity on "Hurricane's Gal" to the discovery of a girl foundling just as he was ready to break his advertising. He did not plant the youngster, but merely rode on the ready-made publicity, and worked it so well that the interest he aroused in the infant found a good home for the waif instead of letting her go to the asylum.

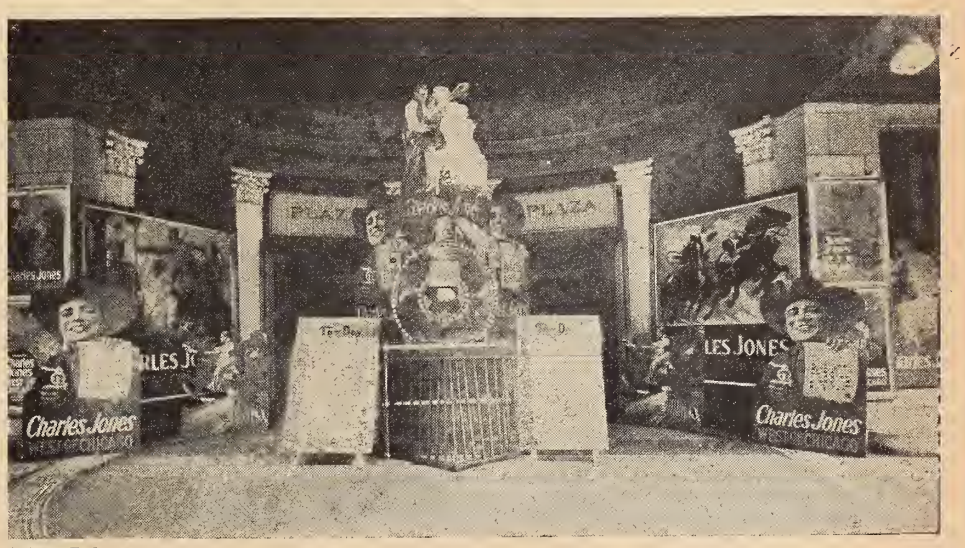
His first shot was a pseudo news story in which it was reported that a tough character, known as "Hurricane" Wilson, had been seen in the vicinity. From that he ran into frankly press story, making capital of the initial hoax.

Timely Stuff

Only one manager seems to have hooked his bookings on "The Masquerader" to the Cabinet crisis in England.

William Reinke, of the Orpheum Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo., used a red ink edition to tell that the House of Parliament was in an uproar and that John Chilcote had been shown the exit.

People had to read to find out that it was a sting, and it centered interest on the play. The papers cost him $15 and the charter of the newsboys three dollars more, but he got a lot back for that eighteen dollars.



A Fox Release

A NEW STYLE ENGINE CUTOUT FOR A CHARLES JONES PLAY

It will work just as well for "The Fast Mail," but it was designed for "West of Chicago" by E. J. Bauman, of the Plaza Theatre, Wheeling, W. Va. It is a flat, apparently cut from the lithographs, with a built-on cowcatcher, which adds to the realism.

Gift Suggestion Is Tied to Remembrance

Because the Alamo theatre, Louisville, left the house name off a window strip, it was able to put 200 of these in prominent stores and gift shops for the run of the Rupert Hughes play, "Remembrance." It might have gained some windows with the house name, but it got more, and more prominent locations by apparently giving it all to the store. The house gain came from the widespread hammering of Remembrance Week.

A Goldwyn Release

THE ALAMO STREAMER

The original is about 13 by 20, black on white and so well displayed that it has a strong attractor value. No one card was worth much, but the 200 had a strong cumulative value in getting the title over while not seeming to do so.

The house also used the ten-name personal-notification stunt, distributing sheets to all school children and giving free admission to all who presented their forms filled in with the names, addresses and telephone numbers of ten persons who had been personally notified of the play.

Shaped Doorknobs

It may interest small town exhibitors to know that they can get shaped doorknobs at comparatively small cost. Not long ago it was necessary to have a die cut and the cost was almost prohibitive, but now it is possible to cut shapes on any platen press with a design made of steel cutting rule at a cost of only a few dollars.

The steel rule is bent to shape and set into a bed of spongy rubber, the whole mounted on a hardwood block. This is set into a chase, precisely as is a type job and the cards are fed onto the platen as in a regular printing job; the rubber buffer preventing the rule from cutting into the platen backing too deeply. It is as simple as running off a printing job and should cost no more.

Shaped doorknobs and hangers get more attention than straight cards, and the cost is no longer prohibitive.

A Film Booking Office Release

THERE ARE MANY NEW IDEAS IN THIS LOBBY DISPLAY

It was designed by J. W. Haas, of Clune's Theatre, Los Angeles. Note the log ends at the left, the rustic letters pendant from the icicles and the slab sides used as a backing for paintings and paper. It is a departure from the general run.

Hacked Perambulator

Richmond, Va., is the home of a Confederate Museum, where are found relics of the Civil War, and the museum is one of the prides of the city.

J. H. Reville used a peramublator when he played "Sonny" at the Broadway Theatre. "Sonny" deals with a boy who fought in the World War, and it struck him he could hook to the older scrap, so he advertised that the car, to the limit of its capacity, would take visitors out to the museum free.

Just a matter of petting up local pride, but it gave real news value to the perambulator—and "Sonny."

Kidding Publicity

Of course, Hugo Plath used the impossible statements for "If You Believe It, It's So," and told how the Kaiser supported the American Legion and how John D. Rockefeller had to hock his watch to buy gas. And because it was new in Abilene, Texas, it was as good as though it had never been done before.

But what interests those who are familiar with the stunt, is Mr. Plath's build-up on the idea.

In the lobby he had a curio display with George Washington's hatchet, the stone with which David slew Goliah and similar antiquities, all covered with the legend. It got a big laugh and helped to run business up.

Playing "The World's Champion," he found that a miniature prize ring in the lobby got in the women who might not have responded to a full sized display.

Went the Limit

In addition to doing about all the stunts suggested by the Southern Enterprises exploitation department on "Nice People," J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome theatre, Waco, went ahead.

Eight restaurants and soda stores had cards on all tables reading "Reserved for Nice People," and he painted ten miles of sidewalk in the residential section with the title of the play, making more than 800 impressions; which sounds like the most extensive sidewalk painting to date. The letters were three and one-half inches high.

In addition to the classified ads, so generally used in the South, Mr. Harrison got a streamer over each page.

HERE IS A CRACKERJACK LOBBY ON "BLOOD AND SAND"

This was used by the National Theatre, Breckenridge, Texas, and is a falsework top and sides. The stills and cutouts show through apparent breaks in the plastering, and the lettering is the real Spanish.

Texas Plaza Toros Is Correctly Done

John Victor, of the National Theatre, Breckenridge, Texas, knows a bullfight when he sees one, and he added some neat trimmings to the general plaza idea for "Blood and Sand." For one thing, he substitutes "boletas" for "tickets" over the box office window, and the two entrance doors are "entrada del sol" and "entrada de sombre," in other words to the sunny and shady sides of the arena, the shady side commanding a higher price than seats where the sun shines in the eyes of the spectators.

The lobby was built in with a falsework and the lighting was the long, slender tube lights, dyed green to heighten the effect. Red and green draperies were used inside of the openings, and the stills and cutouts are mounted to suggest that they show through the broken masonry.

In spite of the pretentious effect, the cost is placed at below $15.

Used House Drapes for Window Display

When Roy C. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., got ready for Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through" he started with a house trailer two and a half weeks ahead, and worked in with slides the last week before the two-day engagement.

In the lobby he arranged a niche, on a platform, making this of a set of curtains taken from one of the boxes, and backing it with white crepe paper. It contained a cutout of Miss Talmadge, and was so shallow that no special lighting was required.

When the film opened he took the drapes over to a local store and set in place of the cutout a wax figure, dressed in hoopskirts and with a wig curled as shown in the photographs of Miss Talmadge in this play. The backing was replaced by a black ground touched with gold, which also was made the general color scheme, a lettered card done in gold on black telling that the star played a girl of 1850 and of 1922. On either side of the display was a single model of the fall styles with the semi-hoopskirt effect, one of which was given a card which bore the lettering "The modern interpretation of the style of yesteryear."

The main streets were painted every few blocks, the words being fifteen feet apart and starting with the first word, so that it showed

Let's

These were half the street width in town and full width in the suburbs.

The photograph shows how the garden effect was carried out in the marquise.

Now for "The Storm"

Down in Houston, Charles McFarland, of the Queen Theatre, and Wakefield, the Universal exploitation man, collaborated on "The Storm" and got a lot of talk by offering $50 in prizes for the best stories of storms, a local paper being hooked to the idea.

Storm warnings were thrown on the sidewalk by means of a stereopticon, and were inserted in the weather reports, and a lobby display was built to show the forest fire, the lighting being all in red.

Dug Lobby Floor to Make Display

According to the First National Exploitation, the Doric theatre, Toronto, a suburban house, dug up a portion of its lobby to make a garden display for "Smilin' Through." The floor was tiled and a square of about ten feet was raised to permit sodding as a foundation for the gate set.

Possibly the management figured that the stunt would impress the patron, but it would have been much more simple to have made a box of the same size, filled it with dirt for a few inches, laying the sods on that and banking in with moss.

If the stunt possessed any value at all it was in the advertisement gained while the setting was being prepared. Apart from this the idea has no real advantage over the box plan.

Eddie Collins, of the Rialto theatre, Dennison, Texas, figured that half a cage would do for Gloria Swanson, so he built it on a half circle and backed it against a sateen ground with a cutout of the star. It carried out the idea and cost only $3. It was not as good, perhaps, but it was good enough to hit up the receipts about ten per cent.

TWO OF THE STUNTS ROY SMART USED ON "SMILIN' THROUGH" AT THE NOBLE THEATRE

It's new down in Anniston, Ala., because it has not been shown there before, and an intelligent campaign shot the receipts well above the fifty per cent. increase. The window display was first used in the lobby, and then moved to a store to hook in to the modified hoopskirt idea in the current season's styles. The effect was much richer than the photograph suggests.

A CLEVER UTILIZATION OF A CUTOUT ON "PINK GODS"

Planned by Frank J. Miller, of Augusta, Ga. The background is replaced by translucent cloth, illuminated from behind, and the pink diamond is also back-lighted, as well as the jeweled ball above, which carries on the idea. Modjeska Theatre.

This Looks Good

Although the First National press story is lacking in detail, it suggests the germ of a good idea used by the Virginia theatre, Champaign, Ill., for "The Bond Boy."

It will be recalled that a shadow effect is strikingly used in the play. The Virginia used a three sheet cutout in a shadow box which swung to and fro, alternately coming into the rays of a spotlight and passing into the darkness on either side. Just how this was arranged is not told, but screens on either side will probably give the desired effect and permit movement to augment the attention value of the cutout.

Changed the Town

When we were in San Francisco last summer we told Milt Samis, of the Roth & Partington houses, about the Saturday opening idea, in discussing the handicap of having to advertise two shows in the Saturday and Sunday editions.

Milt evidently took the idea along up the line for he writes that they are opening the feature on Saturday now and that they like it so well most of the other San Francisco houses have followed suit.

We believe that the Jensen & Von Herberg houses were the first to adopt the Saturday opening that they might get the two big days on the early part of the run and profit from the word of mouth advertising from the larger crowds.

Did you ever think it over? It's a great scheme.

A Cyclone Policy

Out in Peoria, Ill., well removed from the cyclone belt, the Palace theatre took out a cyclone insurance policy because of the big blow in "The Old Homestead." They professed to be afraid that the wind would blow the house down. The agent made no charge for the policy; which was framed and exhibited with a tie-up card for the big wind in the picture.

Make the insurance agent come in with a hook-up advertisement.

Hyman Had Hook-up for "Old Homestead"

Of course, Brooklyn is not precisely New York. It is a part of the greater city, but the papers are not quite so hard boiled, but even at that a hook-up page is something to tie bouquets to, and Edward L. Hyman landed a hook-up page for real estate dealers.

He ran out of real estate men before he ran out of space, but a dry goods store was glad to come in to remark that it could furnish the Old Homesteads once they were built, so the page was 100 per cent. Eddie paid for a generous centre space and was given a good play in the heading in return, the top strip reading, "See Denman Thompson's 'The Old Homestead' at the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre today and learn of the advantages and affections fostered by a good home." Below that the page was split, half going to the show and the remainder to a continuation of the home argument, the ribbon dropping two inches.

This might not be much in a smaller place, but it counts in Brooklyn.

Drumming Up Trade

One of the music stores in Pittsburgh has a mechanical drum in which an electrical device replaces the sticks. The First National's Pittsburgh exploiter tied the store to copies of the plugger song for "The Eternal Flame," stuck in a cutout of the branding scene and switched the juice into the drumming device. It was noisy, but seemingly efficient, though in general such exploitation will not attract the persons best able to enjoy a production of this nature.

Shoed the Show

Adapting a stunt from the plan book, the Capitol Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., took the "the old shoes pay for the new shoes" idea into the lobby.

A bed was placed in the lobby and below was a pair of old shoes as shabby as could be found, alongside a pair of dainty new pumps. A sign on the footboard told the line, with a suggestion that the play be witnessed to see how it was done.

The phonograph hook-up was employed as well as the "Remembrance" contest, the latter proving very popular with the newspaper readers.

THE LOBBY DISPLAY AND A WINDOW ON "THE STORM" FROM THE STRAND THEATRE, MEMPHIS

The displays were planned by H. B. Clarke, who got the window for three weeks for this attraction and ran on the single display. The lobby was made to match the window and so capitalize the earlier display. Evidently it did, for the picture played to a strong business throughout the week.

Plays Up Thrills in "The Fast Mail"

Using the thrills to sell a melodrama is no new idea, but it was very capably carried out by Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington, when "The Fast Mail" was the attraction. One is sold in picture and the others on catalogue, but only the four big punches are used, where the play offers many more, and in a type display the list can be extended to cover the loss of the cut. But the cut has a selling value of its own, familiar as situation now is. Races with trains abound in melodrama, yet somehow they seem not to have lost their punch, and the Palace not only puts it over, but links it closely to the title, which is well displayed in spite of a slight crowding of the space, a 120 by 3. It is a good example of clean cut work along conventional lines where the conventional is apt to be the best seller.

Sells 'Old Homestead' on Chief Character

This is the display used by the Temple Theatre, Toledo, on "The Old Homestead," which it played in advance of New York. Several other houses have taken the same general idea, though this has been adapted from the press book to the Temple general design. The lettering for the title is good, but the star names should have been set into the oval in type rather than in hand letters. We think that the best selling should mention the transformations and improvements wrought by the director and scenarists. This should be done in such a way as not to suggest a material change in the story, for there is none, but "The Old Homestead" of the screen is a better and stronger play than the drama of the stage, and this fact should be made use of to get a sale to those who may feel that the play is old fashioned. It makes a good display, but there is more to be said in the selling talk than has been written into most advertisements up to date. It is worthy of a better recommendation, though overpraise is to be avoided. Tell them it is good, but do not tell them what a really fine production it really is. Concentrate on the first day's business, and those who come then will do the remainder of the selling for you.

This figure of Viola Dana in "The Five Dollar Baby" has been used in many displays and always to advantage. This is from the Ohio Theatre, Indianapolis, and is one of the best handlings, but it seems difficult to turn out a poor advertisement with this as a foundation. What we like best about this display is the way in which it is sold on the heavy face type and then sold in greater detail with the smaller print. The upper half of the space does all the reel selling needed. The rest is merely to assure the reader that his first impression is correct, and to clinch the sale of the story. The cut alone can do a lot of selling, for the figure shows Miss Dana in the type of character in which she excells and her followers know that she must be good. The man who does not follow the stars with the avidity of a fan will be attracted by the pose and women will declare her to be "cute," so everyone will be reached for a sale. This advertisement is a striking example of the fact that a good single figure will generally sell better than an elaborate scene with many small figures. There are, of course, exceptions to the rule, but not many.

Gets Matinee Crowds With Reduction Ads.

Ralph Ruffner, of the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, knew that he could do a good night business with "Manslaughter" if only he could get the play talked about. He made a splash ad down seven columns of an eight column sheet, pulling his top lines from the Paramount display in the Saturday Evening Post and getting most of the rest, including his art work, from the plan book and stills, throwing in the personal guarantee. Probably he did not refer to Miss Joy when he talked about the "Big Bertha of the films," but that reminiscent line seems to have helped to put it over. But his best bet was a 105 line by two which offered a slight reduction in price at the early matinees. That got the women in, and the matinee business is not often good in Vancouver. It is not one of those towns where the women and the night workers fill the house. Here in New York more than half the matinee audiences are composed of men who work nights, but most of Vancouver goes to bed when it gets dark and if Ruff could sell his matinees for thirty cents, he not only made money on those, but he brought in a better night business, for the women went out and talked. Ruff cannot use many of the jazzy lines with which he is best known. The town is too conservative, so he has to think of other ideas, but he manages to keep the appeal to autoists, ministers, judges, policemen, and about all others, but the first lines are what count. This is a better phrasing than your money back if you do not like it, for it puts the refund back of the integrity of the house advertising rather than behind the picture. In this phase it will work for future advertising as well as for the immediate picture whereas the usual form benefits only the title being put over. That "confidence in our advertising" is a line worth spending dollars to the Capitol for weeks to come.

This Busy Artist Spoils a Display

The artist for the Colonial Theatre, Indianapolis, is not afraid of work, but he is too darned willing. He wants to do it all, even where the compositor at his worst would be better than the artist at his best. Mere willingness is of no value where it is not tempered by good judgment. He set out to make a good job and he spoiled it by working overtime. That bank about the name should have been set in type instead of hand lettered. It would have been more easily read—and you have to read to be sold on this old time play. The title, too, is sunk into the still and is not saved much by the outline so that the net result is that if you like Tom Moore you may be interested. This is not enough. Every angle should have been sold to the limit, and the points should have been sold in type. In some instances the old-fashioned costumes have not been liked where a little advance selling of the old costumes as a novelty would have not only obviated this but would have been an additional selling point. Picture audiences are queer people. They are narrow in their general likes and broad in their dislikes, and yet they can be sold on costume plays if they are sold on the right angles. Here there is nothing but a blurb about Tom Moore that will not sell him to any one who does not already like him, and there is nothing else to hang a ticket sale upon. No stranger is going to buy tickets for "Tom Moore again—the same Tom with the same golden smile, but in a kind of part." The same man might

Jigsaw Once More

Jig saw puzzles still pull good business. The Hippodrome Theatre, Cleveland, gave the News $300 for prizes in a cut-up contest, with a cut of George Arliss in "The Man Who Played God." That was split into some sixty prizes. It bought more than $300 worth of publicity and gave the News a good circulation feature as well. The decision was based on the neatness of the pasted puzzle plus a hundred word story on the type of picture the competitor liked best. That was supposed to give the house a line on the taste of its patrons, but most of them sought to curry favor by telling how much they liked Arliss, and that phase fluked. That, however, was only a by-product, so it did not matter.

Grauman Displays Are Much Improved

Recently we said we had stopped showing the advertising for Grauman's Theatres, Los Angeles, because they were so poorly done. The last few examples have been better, though they are still far from being models. The fault with the Grauman stuff has always been that there was too much art work and too little sales copy. If they looked pretty on the cardboard before they were sent to the printer, no one seemed to care a whoop whether they looked well in the page or not. Probably no one knew. Possibly they did not care, for Grauman seems to pin his faith to prologues and productions. But it is apparent that something has happened to shake up the houses a little, for now it is possible to read the argument and to tell almost at a glance what attraction is being shown. The spaces have been cut to two columns in width, but they still come down most of the page, with the result that they string down the page, which does not make for the best display. Of the two the Rialto is the better because there is more room for the title, the star and title for "Blood and Sand" form four lines, and they are set too close together so that there is no white space against which they may be shown, where the one word title for the de Mille play gets a better chance at the glance because there is white behind it. Probably this just happened, because we do not believe that the Grauman artist is capable of thinking in terms of advertising, but hit upon a good placement through some happy accident. The entire space is hand lettered through the panel in the lower left hand corner would have been much better had it been put in a type mortise. The Valentino cut is an atrocity. If we were the Grauman press agent and had that artist under us, the Los Angeles papers would be filled with stories of a murder that for brutality and the refinement of torture would be unparalleled in the annals of crime. Just plain killing is too good for a man who will take money for perpetrating the advertising butchery that is shown in many of the Grauman spaces.

Helped "Grandma's Boy" to Clean Up

Although Harold Lloyd will sell himself Roy Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., knew that intensive work would sell a lot more tickets, so he waded in.

All grandmothers were admitted free the first matinee between one and three, and for the same performance he permitted a local druggist to sell one hundred tickets at one cent each. In return the druggist carried a three tens in the local paper and gave over his best window.

Several furnishing stores also gave windows and in return were permitted to advertise that all men wearing one of their new fall hats would be admitted free. This also brought merchant advertising to back up Mr. Smart's displays.

The usual routine stuff and some smaller extras were used, and at a cost of $17.50, he put it over to a 65% increase.

GLASS HOUSES. Typical Viola Dana picture which went over good. They like the star here. Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

PEACOCK ALLEY. (Mae Murray, star). The first Metro picture we ever ran that did not lose us money. Exploitation: window cards, billboards, photos, liberal newspaper space, heralds and slides. Patronage: mixed. Attendance good. Big Ben Theatre, Ilion, New York.

PEACOCK ALLEY. For me, just mediocre. Did not come up to the expectations. Too much so-called acting. Pleased the women mostly. Advertising: twenty-four sheet, newspaper, slide. Patronage: college town. Attendance: fair. O. T. MacMillan, Crescent Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

SHERLOCK BROWN. Bert Lytell is falling rapidly. In my opinion story very impossible. In fact, so poor it was funny. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

Paramount

BLOOD AND SAND. Very good picture in every respect. Advertising: big. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

BLOOD AND SAND. Got bit with this as it flopped hard on week's stand. Picture good but not exceptional. Advertising: heavy, all types. Attendance: poor. L. R. Barhydt, Empire Theatre, Salem, Massachusetts.

BLOOD AND SAND. Can hardly express this picture's value, as I broke all attendance records with it at raised prices. Everyone pleased: came to see it a second time in several instances. Stars draw. A box office magnet, a money maker if exploited right. Advertising: lobby display, threes, regular advertising, cut outs, 2,000 heralds. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: biggest ever. W. H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

BORDERLAND. Pleased about sixty per cent. of patrons. Well produced and acted, but many opinions were "too much of the beyond stuff." Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: fairly good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

BRIDE'S PLAY. A rather ordinary story very splendidly staged and produced. It failed to get usual patronage. Advertising: regular, mailing list, etc. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

BRIDE'S PLAY. A good Paramount picture but this print was ruined by cutting; absolutely ruined the picture. Advertising: ones, newspaper, photos, etc. Patronage: country town. Attendance: fair. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

FOR THE DEFENSE. Not up to the standard set by Famous Players. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

THE GOLEM. For me, the biggest piece of cheese I ever ran. Don't boost it. Advertising: lobby, newspaper. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very poor. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

HELIOTROPE. A good picture that really lived up to the press boo-. I went out after it strong and sure got results. It pleased in our town 100 per cent. Advertising: extra heavy. Patronage: small town. Attendance: very good. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

HER HUSBAND S TRADEMARK. A wonderful story and well acted. Miss Swanson is very popular here. Pleased 100 per cent. Advertising: lobby, newspaper, twenty-fours and cutouts. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

HOME STRETCH. Somewhat old but a very good picture of the regular program variety. Horse race is a thriller. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

LADIES MUST LIVE. Entertaining:

well acted, but story rather far fetched. Needs good music: will not likely go over on it's own merits. Advertising: lobby only. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good (fair in town). L. A. Hoover, Allen Theatre, Farmington, New Mexico.

LAW AND THE WOMAN. .A mighty good melodrama that will please everyone. Don't be afraid of this one; it's among the best. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. Excellent comedy drama. Everybody pleased and satisfied. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. F. S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

RED PEACOCK. People went out of their way to tell me how rotten it was. I had been dodging it for some time. Did not advertise much. Attendance: poor. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

SATURDAY NIGHT. Some exhibitors' reports were not favorable, but for us, the picture was accepted by our patrons as being exceptionally fine. Advertising; extra. Patronage; better class. Attendance; good. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, O.

SATURDAY NIGHT. .A-1 picture from every standpoint. Pleased the better class. Book this. Advertising, heralds, cards, etc. Attendance, fair. J. I. McCarthy, Majestic Theatre, Charleston, Tennessee.

SHEIK. A beautiful picture. The scenery and setting were wonderful. Advertising: window cards, heralds, slide, photos. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

SIREN CALL. Satisfactory production, not as good as her "Moran" or "Woman Who Walked Alone." A fair program picture with good photography and a trite story. Don't promise that it is the "greatest." How the "dizzy" press agent that edits the press sheets you get overworks the superlatives! Can't you see them putting out the bunk? Don't it sicken you to look their efforts over when you, the exhibitor, have to set advertisements for, say four shows a week? Patronage: rural town. Attendance: fair. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

SOUTH OF SUVA. Very poor picture: Minter losing out. Needs stronger cast around her to keep up Minter prestige. Attendance: fair. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

LOVE IS AN AWFUL THING. A splendid picture featuring Owen Moore, and one of his very best. This picture was screened before a large number of invited guests and the Oklahoma Theatre Owners and Managers Association by Selznick and Select Pictures Corporation, with the compliments of Manager Touchton, of the Oklahoma City Local Exchange. The picture was good, very good, and a good buy for any theatre, no matter where located, and would bear a return date later. William Noble, Skirven Roof Garden, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THE MOTH. Unsatisfactory Norma Talmadge revival. Lots of adverse criticism from patrons. Advertising: regular. Patronage: average. Attendance: fair. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

LOVE LIGHT. Quite old, but somehow or other I had never booked it, but am glad that I finally showed it. It is one of the finest pictures ever seen here and men, women and children all told me it was great. Mary Pickford did some real acting in this. If any other exhibitors have passed this up as I did, they will make no mistake in booking it—and step on it heavy. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair (stormy weather). A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

THROUGH THE BACK DOOR. Mary Pickford usually good. She seems to go over good with my patrons, and the above picture pleased all. Patronage: mostly ladies. Attendance: very good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Haynes Says It All

"Dear Van: I say dear because you have endeared yourself to we exhibitors with your Straight From the Shoulder Reports, and take my pen in hand (or rather, typewriter), to say how much I appreciate these reports and the good they accomplish.

"I think more of one of these reviews, straight from the exhibitor, than all the salesmen put together. I keep pretty close tabs on these reports and find about 95 per cent. are right. Sometimes I find an exhibitor will "pan" a picture because he had a poor house; in my opinion it is not what pulls them but what makes them stay after you get them in, and tell you how they like it when they go out, and Oh! What a Glorious Feeling!

"Many a picture I have cancelled or substituted after reading the comments.

"I take another trade paper which makes an attempt to give the exhibitor's views but it does not say how the exhibitor or his patrons liked it, which, in my opinion, is the most important; and this paper is very seldom read by me but goes in the files and becomes covered with dust.

"Not so with the World. I have now every issue for three years and same is often referred to and when it comes the first thing I do is to turn to the Straight From the Shoulder Reports." Thos. L. Haynes, Old Lyme Amusement Co., Old Lyme, Connecticut.

Exhibitor friends, you have made this letter possible.

THROUGH THE BACK DOOR. Very pleasing picture. Liked better than "Three Musketeers." One you can step out on. Ran two days to good business. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glascow, Montana.

Universal

DANGEROUS LITTLE DEMON. A fine program picture; was well received. Advertising: regular. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

DAUGHTER OF THE LAW. Not as good as I expected and could not see much to it. Really would not recommend it. Put this on as a Commercial Club benefit; naturally had a full house but that did not help us much. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

DOCTOR JIM. Pretty good, but by no means a special, for me, as some of the reports claim. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

MAN WHO MARRIED HIS OWN WIFE. Frank Mayo is very good and his support is excellent. A good story. Advertising: newspaper, slide. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. Arthur G. Pearson, Melrose Auditorium, Melrose, Massachusetts.

MAN WHO MARRIED HIS OWN WIFE. Judging from what my patrons said in regard to this one, it must be a humdinger and should rank as a special feature at advance prices. I did not see it so cannot comment. Prices right on this, as they always are on Universals. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

MAN WHO MARRIED HIS OWN WIFE. A pretty good program picture. This one could have been done in three reels. Pleased about 50%. Some good comedy which helped to put picture over. Advertising: slides, ones, threes. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MAN WHO MARRIED HIS OWN WIFE. A pleasing program picture. Frank Mayo does fine in this. Advertising: usual. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Jno. W. Creamer. Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

NOBODY'S FOOL. A new star for me that got over very good. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Leslie Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

THE STORM. House Peters, Matt Moore and Virginia Valli. Very few pictures surpass "The Storm" either in cast, plot, direction, photography or continuity. I venture to say that this picture will suit all persons seeing it, with no regrets for having done so. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TRIMMED. A Hoot Gibson Western picture and for us ranks with the real good drawing cards. This one is in line with Gibson's former pictures and is a dandy in its class. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Vitagraph

BRING HIM IN. Good program picture, nothing more. Advertising: lobby and daily papers. Attendance: fair. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOON. Very good picture but think seven reels a little long. Curwood pictures always take here. Advertising: ordinary. Patronage: rural. Attendance: good. H. G. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. This is a very good comedy-drama from beginning to end. Book it; you can't go wrong. Everybody liked it. Advertising: ones, threes, photos. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

Comedies

GOLF (Vitagraph). A two reel Larry Semon comedy that is a complete knockout; house in an entire uproar. Plenty of vim and vinegar. Advertising: posters. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Exhibitors depend on these reports for their booking tips. Producers read them. Make your reports honest, impartial, just. They will help exhibitors and exert an influence for better bookings and better pictures.

HANDLE WITH CARE (Pathe). Pleased fifty per cent. J. Kendrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

SHENANIGAN KIDS (Goldwyn).—A good cartoon comedy also a good half reel of topics of the day. Advertising; one sheet. Patronage; small. Attendance; good. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pa.

TORCHY'S BIG LEAD (Educational). Decidedly inferior to Torchy's other comedies. Advertising: usual. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

Serials

BUFFALO BILL (Universal). Ran two episodes and it is fine—running special school children's matinee at 3:30 p. m. Pack the house. Advertising: Buffalo Bill hats; regular advertising. Patronage: everybody. Attendance: good. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

HOPE DIAMOND MYSTERY (Cosmopolitan). For me, this is a lemon serial. Misrepresented to us; did not please. Vincent J. Votalats, Myrtle Hall, Thornton, Rhode Island.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). Started this October twentieth. Stars right and everybody pleased. Played it with "Hills of Missing Men," also splendid picture. Showed to fourteen hundred people on opening the serial; theatre only seats 250. Advertising: gave a two-cent flash package of candy with every ten-cent ticket. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

State Rights

BETTER MAN WINS (Standard). This is one of the cleanest Western-Society dramas run for a long time. It's something different. You can play it as a Western or as a Society drama. It's got action, good moral. Good enough for the better class houses. You can't go wrong on this one. Business good first day; off, second day. Get a six sheet on this. Will pull business. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

BLACK SHEEP (Pinnacle). Just another Neal Hart with the usual punch and pep. Neal Hart goes over big here. Advertising: six, three, one, slide. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: extra good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MADONNAS AND MEN (Jans). Pleased all who saw it. Several patrons praised it highly. Film in fair shape; photography poor in spots Advertising: ones, three, six, screen ad. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

TAKING CHANCES (Goldstone).—Dick Talmadge is going to be a success. He is at his very best in this picture, and will bear plenty of boosting. I don't think any audience will dislike this one. Mrs. J. D. Dunaway, Arcade Theatre, Summerville, South Carolina.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Mixed Faces

(William Russell—Fox—4,400 feet)

M. P. W.—Follows a popular trend and arouses enough curiosity to make one forget almost completely the implausibility of the tale.

F. D.—Russell good in dual role, but story is a bit weak.

T. R.—A story with a dual role that is none too convincingly told but nevertheless supplies fairly good entertainment for those who are not overly critical.

E. H.—Fair entertainment.

N.—If "Mixed Faces" had stuck either to its comedy or its melodrama it would have been more convincing.

The Man She Brought Back

(Featured Cast—Playgoers Pictures—4,792 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture is entertaining and the emphasis upon ideals and sentiment will have a strong appeal to some.

E. H.—Add to the list of Northwest mounted stories this Playgoers Production, in which the hero runs true to form and brings in his man.

F. D.—Just another northwest mounted police picture.

N.—The production's redeeming features consist of some very attractive wood land exteriors.

T. R.—An exciting picture with a romantic plot, liberally spiced with thrills, well directed and handsomely photographed.

Till We Meet Again

(Mae Marsh—Associated Exhibitors—5,822 feet)

M. P. W.—Has the popular note.

E. H.—It is richly staged, holds the interest and should prove satisfactory entertainment.

F. D.—Will offer very good entertainment for those who like a variety of situations and atmosphere.

N.—Thrills, romance, mystery, a very fine cast, excellent direction, photography of a very high quality, elaborate settings, a stirring climax.

T. R.—The numerous admirers of fast moving crook melodrama will find entertainment exactly to their taste in this picture.

On the High Seas

(Dorothy Dalton—Paramount—5,050 feet)

M. P. W.—Plenty of sea thrills, a sharpness in character contrasts and an absorbing story.

F. D.—A thoroughly live production, consistently good action and realistic atmosphere and thrills make it a sure-fire entertainment of its kind.

T. R.—Rather light romantic fare buoyed up to level of agreeable entertainment through the efforts of Dorothy Dalton, Jack Holt and Mitchell Lewis.

N.—Positively the most exciting story of the bounding deep that has ever been shown.

E. H.—A sea adventure story of more than usual interest.

Skin Deep

(Milton Sills—First National—6,500 feet)

M. P. W.—In "Skin Deep," Thomas H. Ince has produced a film that, in its straightforward manner of story telling, stands alone in the field. There is real drama and life throughout the six and a half reels, and plenty of moments of suspense.

T. R.—It is full of action, has some humor and pathos, and should not only satisfy but win real praise from the majority.

E. H.—Presents exhibitors with unique combination of a satisfactory picture and a ready-made, high grade exploitation opportunity.

N.—This is a picture with punch plus. . . . It's different. . . . It grips.

F. D.—Patriotic melodrama that will draw big business in the right house.

The Bond Boy

(Richard Barthelmess—First National—6,902 feet)

M. P. W.—Barthelmess again scores a great personal hit and does some exceedingly fine work.

N.—Belongs to the better class. Henry King doesn't make any other kind.

T. R.—Exhibitors cannot afford to overlook "The Bond Boy," which registers as one of the season's best attractions.

F. D.—Barthelmess deserves better material, but it may please his admirers.

E. H.—It is a great drama and one that will win further honors for this star.

"One Week of Love"

Selznick Feature With Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle is High Class Box-Office Picture

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

There are several points of interest in "One Week of Love," the new Selznick special, featuring Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle, that should make it a big box-office bet. First, there is a closely knit dramatic story which holds the interest with a large portion of the footage involving only the two leading characters. Then, there is a very well handled railroad wreck scene where the onrushing waters, resulting from a mountain flood, wash away a high trestle. This is spectacular and thrilling, and is decidedly unique in that the train on which the heroine is riding, does not stop at the edge of the broken part, but falls about a hundred feet into the stream, from which she is rescued by the hero after a desperate fight against the raging torrent.

Added to this is the fact that it is a picture with a variety of atmosphere. It starts off like a light and airy society comedy drama set amidst scenes of wealth and social splendor. This is followed by an exciting aeroplane race in which the heroine is lost in a fog, a scene which is well photographed. Then a thrill comes when a wing of her machine breaks and it crashes into a hut in the mountains of Mexico, where she is taken prisoner by three rough men who cut cards to see to whom she shall belong.

The scenes in the lonely mountain hut, to which the renegade American takes her, and which result in his regeneration and her awakening to the fact that she loves him instead of the society swell to whom she is engaged, are dramatic. Then follows a scene with a punch where the stranger shows his nobility and her fiance shows himself to be a cad. The action then takes an unexpected twist and ends in thrilling melodrama with the wreck and flood scenes.

This is a showman's picture, containing as it does, situations of a type which have proven their box-office worth on the speaking stage. They have been skillfully combined into a coherent story, embellished with the additional effects possible only in screen productions so that they should get over with even greater punch, which is accentuated by the unexpected thrill that comes when the train plunges into the stream instead of stopping "just in time to save the heroine."

Credit is due to E. J. Montagne and George Archainbaud for a smooth-running scenario, to George Archainbaud for his skillful direction and to Jules Cronjager for his excellent photography.

A feature of this production is the unusually small number of major characters, which naturally concentrates the interest. There are really only three of any importance, while only a few more have any individual work. Elaine Hammerstein is attractive in the leading role, acts with intelligence and gives one of the best portrayals of her career. Conway Tearle gives a noteworthy performance as the American who became a renegade because of disappointment in love and is also regenerated through love. Hallam Cooley gives a thoroughly satisfactory performance as the girl's fiance, who proves to be a cad, and Kate Lester is well cast as her aristocratic aunt.

The Story

Beth Wynn, pampered and blase society belle, after an exciting party agrees to marry Francis Fraser if he beats her in an aeroplane race. Becoming lost in fog, the wing of her machine breaks and she crashes into a hut in the mountains of Mexico. Three men claim her as a prize and cut cards for her; a Mexican wins, but the renegade American, with a spark of pity, buys her and takes her to his isolated cabin. Loathing him, she gradually brings about the awakening of his finer qualities long dormant and in the end comes to love him. Regenerated, he gives her back to her fiance, but just as their train leaves word is brought that a mountain flood is sweeping down on the railroad. A high bridge is washed away, the train plunges into the swollen stream. The girl is rescued by the regenerated American who has reached the scene by means of a short cut, while her fiance is washed away by the raging torrent. With this crisis the definite realization of their love comes to the happy pair.

"WONDERS OF THE SEA" IS FILM OF FEATURE LENGTH, 4,500 FEET

Through a typographical error, the length of "Wonders of the Sea" was shown in review in our issue of November 4 as two reels. This is a feature production, and the exact length is 4,500 feet, and in justice to Williamson Brothers and Submarine Films we are pleased to make this correction.

The exact length of this picture as shown on Broadway was 4,100 feet, and it was shown on the same bill with a seven-reel feature and two-reel comedy; but due to the unique and intensely interesting nature of the film, which holds the spectator's attention throughout, seemed to be very much shorter than its real length.

This feature should prove a big box-office attraction. It has just completed a three weeks' run at the Reisenfeld theatres on Broadway and enjoys the unique distinction of being the only feature attraction that has ever been presented at the Rialto, then switched to the Rivoli and the following week returned to the Rialto for a further engagement.—C. "The Village Blacksmith"

Fox "1923 Melodrama," Based on Longfellow's Poem, is Effective Entertainment for the Masses

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Using as a basis Longfellow's immortal poem of the same title, William Fox has produced "The Village Blacksmith" which is now in the second week of an indefinite run at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre, New York, and which is described on the program as "a 1923 melodrama." This expression aptly describes it, for it is dashing, well-made, up-to-date, with plenty of heart interest and touches of comedy, and several thrills, and frankly melodramatic. It is excellent entertainment for the masses and contains the kind of material which audiences have shown that they like.

Practically everyone is familiar with the poem and this furnishes an excellent exploitation angle to build on and attract patronage. Naturally it was necessary to elaborate on the poem which only furnishes the main character, the village blacksmith. Around him has been constructed a story which in some respects resembles the big Fox success, "Over the Hill," but in this instance it is the father who, through his children, meets with various vicissitudes fashioned by fickle fate. He has three children, one boy who is crippled while still quite small, another who is injured in a train wreck, and while both are unable to help her, his only daughter wrongly accused of making way with church funds, decided to end her life and leaves home in a terrific storm. Father rescues her after she is struck by lightning, brings her traducer to justice and all ends happily with the final recovery of both boys and the happy marriage of his daughter.

The picture starts with a prologue which is quite long and shows the children when quite small, plants the atmosphere, embodies many quotations from the poem as sub-titles, accounts for the injury to little Johnnie and explains the enmity on the part of the village squire. Then the action changes to the body of the story, in which the children are all grown up and the main action takes place. In this section a different set of actors portray the children who were little tots in the prologue.

There is a fine collection of small town types in this production, including the rascally squire, his scapegrace son and shrewish wife, the heroic blacksmith, which is the embodiment of the character described in the poem, a he-gossip, two or three typical melodramatic "rubes." There is also one extremely modern city type, an up-to-date vamp flapper.

The entire cast is well selected. We doubt if a better choice could have been made for the role of the village blacksmith, portrayed by William Walling. He is the "mighty man" with "large and sinewy hands" and "brawny arms" as described by Longfellow. Not only does he fit the role physically, but he gives a fine performance, acting with sincerity and holding your sympathy. Little Pat Moore is appealing in the role of the little boy who becomes crippled by a fall and George Hackathorne gives a good performance as the same character grown up. Ralph Yeardsley is excellent in the unsympathetic role of the squire's son. Tully Marshall is well cast as the "heavy" and Virginia Valli is attractive as the blacksmith's daughter. In fact, the entire cast, including such well-known players as Dave Butler, Gordon Griffith, Francis Ford, Bessie Love, Eddie Gribbon and others, all give fine performances.

There is an exciting train wreck preceded by an unsuccessful dash by the blacksmith to save the train, and an effective rain storm, during which the climax to the picture occurs. A particularly telling piece of work occurs in the scene where George Hackathorne, as the boy who is unable to use his lower limbs, drags himself through the rain and mud and denounces the villian. He is beaten with a whip and rescued by his father.

The Story

The village blacksmith has two boys and a girl. In the prologue they are shown as small children. Through a dare on the part of the Squire's son, little Johnnie, in climbing a tree, falls and is crippled. The squire is an enemy of the blacksmith, who married the woman he loved. After the children have grown up the main story commences. Bill, the other son, goes away to school and learns to be a doctor. Alice, the daughter, starts a clandestine love affair with the squire's son, a scapegrace, who has just returned from college. The blacksmith discovers this and rebukes her. Bill is injured in a train wreck and confined to his bed. The squire's son steals money which Alice has and which belongs to the church. Alice is accused, and starts out in a terrific storm to end her own life. The two boys cannot help her, but Johnny does drag himself to the squire's house and denounces him. The blacksmith goes out and finds his daughter who has been struck by lightning. Returning he also rescues Johnny, who is being beaten by the squire. He finds out that the squire's son has stolen the money and drags him and his father to the church, where they confess. Alice marries the blacksmith's helper and Bill cures Johnnie of his lameness, and Johnnie also get married.

"Good Men and True"

Good Entertainment Provided by Harry Carey and Cast in F. B. O. Release

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Harry Carey has an excellent role in this Western which F. B. O. is releasing. The picture has been well-planned and well-acted and holds live entertainment for many. It includes almost everything that makes a Western sure of success, spectacular physical action, comedy touches bordering on burlesque, and melodramatic intrigue.

The suspense starts when the horse and his rider are pitched over the cliff, one of the big thrills. This is one of the several melodramatic events that balk the political ambitions of the hero who is running for the office of sheriff. His enemy's plots are revealed in exciting sequence. Wallace Beery's vivid performance intensifies the effect of these heavy scenes, particularly those in the deserted shack. The drama culminates in the big scene in the road-house where Carey routs a whole army of villains in a spectacular encounter on the stairs.

Tully Marshall is the chief comedy exponent. He shows the funny as well as pathetic side of the type of man for whom one wife is too many. As a symbol of hard luck, he gets a surprising number of laughs and his awkward plunge down the chimney to the scene of need is a happy interruption in the course of the melodrama.

Length, 5,400 feet.

The Story

Pringle and Thorpe are rivals in the race for sheriff. Thorpe realizes the other's popularity and discards all scruples in planning to destroy it. Pringle is thrown off a cliff while pursuing Thorpe and is believed by his enemies to be dead. When he reappears later Thorpe decides to make a thorough job of defeating him. He imprisons him in a deserted shack, after framing him to appear suspicious in a murder for which Thorpe himself is responsible. An unfortunate man whom Pringle has befriended turns up in time to help him and free him. He hears of his sweetheart's danger in a rough roadhouse and arrives in time to offer dramatic protection. Incidentally he is elected sheriff.

"The Love Gambler"

John Gilbert's Attractive Personality the Popular Feature of this Fox Western

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"The Love Gambler" relies upon romantic and sympathetic situations that have indicated their popular appeal in times past. Presented as John Gilbert's first definitely starring venture, it is interesting chiefly for this reason.

It is his attractive appearance and personality that stands out as the most appealing feature of the production. His opportunities for impressive acting are few. There is practically no incentive for originality. But the fact that he is a comparatively new type, especially in the class of Westerns, and the conviction that he is capable of really worth-while acting as substantiated by past records, holds, in spite of the limitations here.

The man who can tame wild horses and unruly women by whistling a weird, hypnotic tune, seems at times unconvincing. This character is the hero of the story. It seems like an attempt at novelty with doubtful results. The horse-taming scene is one of the most effective, and, while not especially new, has a force and realism that is lacking in other parts of the picture. Carmel Myers shows too little variety in facial expression to be entirely convincing.

Length, 4,682 feet.

The Story

Dick Manners is famed for his romantic powers over women. He infuriates Jean McClelland, by beating up her sweetheart, Tom Gould, because he was abusing his horse. Taunted by the other men, Dick makes a bet that he will kiss the girl before Monday and also tame the wild horse on her father's ranch. Dapper Dan, the horse that has baffled them all, acts friendly toward Dick when he whistles a peculiar little tune. He rides Dapper Dan to the admiration of them all. He makes good the rest of his bet, but the love affair has some difficulty from then on, due to Dick's kindness to an unfortunate woman, which involves him in some exacting obligations. Eventually Jean's love for him adjusts everything.

Exploitation Angles: Play up the whistling. It will get attention, and stage a girls whistling contest for a novelty.

"The Young Rajah"

Paramount Offering with Rodolph Valentino is Sumptuous Production of Many Moods

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Similar in style rather in motive to the productions which have made Rodolph Valentino the screen hero of the hour, "The Young Rajah," makes an appeal that is slightly new. It is a sumptuous production of many moods.

Compared to his recent achievement in "Blood and Sand," it leaves a decided impression of being less virile, although none the less attractive to many of the fans. Instead of relying upon an intensely physical theme, as this did, the picture resorts to mysticism as the strongest appeal. This touch of the supernatural has not found expression in religious passages, but rather in spectacular features such as have proven very popular in other pictures.

The young Rajah is a boy of Indian birth, educated in America and endowed with the gift of seeing into the future, as indicated by a white light on his forehead. His predictions are infallibly and sometimes amusingly correct. His final vision of the attack to be made upon his own life, just before the day of his wedding, comes to pass in a scene that is intensely vivid.

There are a number of brilliant episodes executed with a dash and finesse that do the director and the entire cast credit. The production is a pompous spectacle with many contrasts, as for instance, the simple New England home scenes and the elaborate construction of the Maharajah's palace in India. The picture opens with an unusually effective slant on college sports and youthful rivalry.

Valentino's performance is remarkably smooth. The close-ups are many, and his art in emotional expression was never more accomplished. Less vigorous than his roles in the past, he gets fine results with more subtle effort. One of the most vivid personalities in the excellent supporting cast is Joseph Swickard as the Indian mystic.

Scenario by June Mathis.
Direction by Philip Rosen.
Length, 7,705 Feet.

The Story

Amos Judd, heir to the throne of India, is kept in ignorance of his rights until manhood, and is reared by Joshua and Sarah Judd, Americans. His strange gift of seeing into the future puzzles his friends and particularly the father of Molly Cabot, whom he loves. Amos proves the truth of his predictions, but fails to see the fate which is about to befall him at the hands of a jealous rival of college days. He is wounded but recovers after Molly's care, and in carrying out his visions is forced to go to India without her, after narrowly escaping his enemies. In a vision later, however, he sees himself wedded to her in his own India.

"The Danger Point"

American Releasing Production on Love vs. Business Theme is Picture of Average Interest

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

How an attractive young woman deliberately set out to win a man whose only thought was his business, and after succeeding becomes convinced that she made a mistake, that her husband cares more for his work than he does for her, with the result that she leaves him only to have unforseen circumstances bring about a reconcililation, is the theme of the American Releasing production, "The Danger Point."

While this basic theme of a wife being neglected in favor of business has been used many times in motion pictures, the manner in which Director Lloyd Ingraham has handled this subject and the little twists given to the story have resulted in a production that should satisfy the average audience. The story is not at all times convincing, and the wife leaves her husband on what seems to be a very slight pretext, but at least she does not leave him for another man. There is another man, however, and when he appears on the train and tries to force his attentions on her, while a wreck conveniently disposes of him and leaves her unharmed, it is refreshing to find that the husband is quick to understand the real situation.

W. P. Carleton is satisfactory in the leading role and while Carmel Myers is attractive to look at she has a trick of showing varying emotions simply by opening her pretty eyes wider and also appears as if she is continually conscious of an audience. The remainder of the cast is entirely adequate and considerable comedy, which is amusing, is furnished by Harry Todd as a bald-headed man who is continually proposing to Margaret Joslin. There is a good human interest element introduced in the character of Jos. J. Dowling as a blind violinist, though it has little bearing on the main theme. There are some good photographic shots and the railroad wreck scenes are satisfactorily handled, and there are spectacular scenes of a burning oil well.

The Cast

Alice Torrance.....Carmel Myers
James Benton.....W. P. Carleton
Duncan Phelps.....Vernon Steel
Benjamin.....Jos. W. Dowling
Sam Biggs.....Harry Todd
Elvira Hubbard.....Margaret Joslin

Story by Victor H. Halperin.
Directed by Lloyd Ingraham.
Photographed by Ross Fisher.
Length, 5,807 Feet.

The Story

James Benton, founder of a Western town that bears his name, is so engrossed in business that he pays no attention to women. Alice Torrance, niece of his oil expert, visits the town and sets out to bring him out of his shell, with the result that they are soon married. After the honeymoon Benton often appears preoccupied and engrossed in business. When just as a big oil well catches on fire, Alice phones Benton and is informed that he cannot talk to her, she concludes she has made a mistake and leaves him. Phelps, who was also a suitor for her hand, gets aboard the same train and is forcing his attentions on her when a wreck occurs and he is mortally wounded. Alice is uninjured, and Phelps before he dies assures Benton of her innocence. Then a reconciliation occurs and all ends happily.

Playgoers Picture With Charming English Settings is Based on Elinor Glyn Story

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

This is a picture based upon a story that is highly typical of its author, Elinor Glyn. It belongs to the class of entertainment that is probably more extreme than others in its differing effects upon the spectator. To some it will appeal as a welcome diversion, while to others it will seem like froth.

As is usual with her stories, the theme is devoted to youth and youth's reaction to a more or less transitory phase of love. In this particular case the idea has been developed with a little more strength. A moment's fancy becomes a sincere affection that grows with time and separation. In this way the author has avoided leaving any taste of unwholesomeness and has offset to a considerable degree an effect of cheap frankness, suggested in one of the early scenes.

The mood of the picture on the whole is somber. The suspense is carried, not entirely successfully, through scenes where there is not always enough action to keep up the interest. Hayford Hobbs and Minora Thew, in the two leading roles, are pleasing types. The settings are unusual. An English castle and many charming interiors form an impressive background for the action.

The Cast

Michael Aranstoun.....Hayford Hobbs
Sabine Dalberg.....Minora Thew
Samuel Greenbank.....Charles Ashley
Henry Fordyce.....Charles Vane

Based on the Novel of the Same Name by Elinor Glyn.
Scenario and Direction Not Credited.
Length, 4,470 Feet.

The Story

To escape forced marriage, Sabine Dalberg and Michael Aranstoun agree, at their first meeting, to marry each other and then part. The marriage takes place secretly in the chapel of Aranstoun castle. At the wedding supper Michael, intoxicated by Sabine's loveliness and the knowledge that she is his, crushes her in his arms. In the morning she is gone. Michael searches for her for many months, but without success.

Michael's closest friend is Henry Fordyce who, while knowing of Michael's strange marriage, does not know the girl's name. Fordyce is engaged to be married and takes Michael to meet his fiancee, who is Sabine. Each thinking it is for the others' happiness, a divorce is agreed upon. Then Fordyce accidentally discovers that Sabine is Michael's wife and that they love each other and he brings them together.

Gladys Walton Gives One of Her Best Performances in Universal Comedy-Drama

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

An attractive combination of light comedy and melodrama offers pleasing entertainment in this Universal production. Gladys Walton is at her best with plenty of chance for gayety and now and then an appealing moment. The production is more impressive, from the standpoint of material effects than her previous vehicles. It should give her an advanced position in the estimation of the fans, and should satisfy those who have wanted to see her in a more representative performance.

It is her personality and a notable skill in the construction of the drama that makes the picture entertaining. The theme is inspired by an old idea, the Cinderella tale. But the continuity prepared by George Randolph Chester realizes the art of keeping the average spectator so constantly interested that there is little chance for reflecting on the familiarity of the story.

The poor little waif in this case is a shop girl who stumbles onto a crooked conspiracy and good fortune simultaneously. She plays an important part in protecting her good friends from an abduction and burglary. This particular scene is an unusually successful example of a melodramatic climax managed with suspense and an appreciation of comedy values.

The Story

Mamie Conroy danced on the roof between her boarding house and the Gregory mansion. The heiress to the Gregory millions and the girl became fast friends. Then one night two men stole through a window into the Gregory mansion and Mamie saw them. She slipped out of her window and across the roof. Inside, she was grabbed by the men, who thought she was the heiress they intended to abduct. Mamie was rather loud in her protests and the crooks had to drop her. Gregory and his granddaughter arrived a moment later. He told Mamie she was his granddaughter from then on. The papers announced she was to go to the Gregory country home. One night Mamie was the centre of a weird battle of running servants, detectives and crooks. She was even arrested as she clutched the family jewels to save them . . . but Grandfather Gregory appeared and Mamie was explained satisfactorily to the young chief and detective, who promptly told her what day she would have to appear . . . in the church!

"Just Dogs"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Here is a decidedly novel and very clever comedy in which the entire cast consists of animals. There are several dogs and one monkey, the latter having the leading role. It is a two-reeler that will tickle the kiddies immensely and will also please the older folks. There is a real story concerning a tramp dog and his pal, a monkey. They wander to Barktown, meet a flapper and help her. The flapper's father gets the dog a job with the aerial police. The police dog and monkey chase some burglars and capture them and the film ends with a wedding between the monkey and the flapper. Al Herman deserves credit for the manner in which he has handled this subject and the infinite patience in making it, and although it is interesting, it would be more so if it were shorter.—C. S. S.

"The Price of Progress"

(Pathe—Special—Two Reels)

From several different angles this special short feature on the logging industry should appeal. It leaves vivid impressions of certain features of the processes of felling and handling giant trees, that have not been included in other films devoted to the same subject. A slight story with heart interest value is blended into the scenes. There are thrilling moments of danger, bits of comedy and rare picturesque shots. The picture is rich in educational value, but vivid and entertaining enough to appeal to almost everyone.—M. K.

"Harvest Hands"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

This comedy will be extremely popular where slapstick is appreciated. It is a fast succession of lively scenes showing the star, Paul Parrott, in one amusing situation after another. An inexperienced farm-laborer is the leading role and the manner in which he constantly pays the penalty for being a new hand brings plenty of laughs. Jobyna Ralston's charming personality helps to make the scenes interesting.—M. K.

The Pep of the Program

News and Reviews of Short Subjects and Serials

"The Big Scoop" and a Two-Reel Novelty Heads Pathe Program of November 19

Johnny Jones and his compact company of juvenile actors in the two-reel comedy called "The Big Scoop," heads Pathe's November 19 release program of eleven subjects. This program also presents "The Price of Progress," a two-reel novelty from the Kiser Studios, producers of the Oregon Trail Series, and which is the subject of Trail Series.

"The Big Scoop" is another juvenile business enterprise film of the sort which has lifted Johnny Jones and little Gertrude Messinger into the front rank of short subject stars and leading ladies.

All of the reviews of West Coast previews of "The Price of Progress" place that picture in a class by itself for the exciting drama it presents of the triumph of man and machinery over Nature's most stupendous obstacles. The human actors in the story are seen as Titans in courage and endurance and as Pygmies in relation to the ponderous, yet almost life-like machines which whisk the giants of the forests from rugged mountain sides to the great river whence they float into the jaws of saw and planing mills.

The Patheserial, "Speed," with Charles Hutchinson, reaches its fifth episode, called "Fighting Mad."

"Harvest Hands," with Paul Parrott, presents a new wrinkle in screen comedy—a caterpillar motor car, which brings the hero to the scene of farm labor prescribed for him by an irate father, and at the finish, plows its way resistlessly through haystacks, barns, houses and everything else on the place.

"I'm On My Way," is the Harold Lloyd re-issue—with Snub Pollard and Bebe Daniels aiding and abetting in the comic consequence of the hero finding it desirable to go away from there.

Pathe Review No. 182 illustrates the "Majesty of Magnetism" in its popular science series, presents photographic gems of the falls of the Catskills, depicts Midwinter Follies as seen by Hy Mayer in "Travelaughs" and shows beautiful Pathecolor in the homeland of the Armenians.

In Screen Snapshots No. 13 screen favorites are seen in unconventional settings.

The Aesop's Film Fable of this program is called "The Rolling Stone," with the addition to the famous moral—"But gets a great polish."

Leading Houses Book Fox Educationals

Though but a short time has elapsed since the establishment of an Educational Division by Fox Film Corporation, it is announced that already the first six subjects are being booked by leading theatres throughout the country and are proving welcome additions to the programs, combining as they do, information and amusement, and are helping to build up a high class of patronage.

It is said that the Fox Educationals are appealing, particularly to the class of wide-awake showmen who realize that short subjects are not merely fillers but form a very essential part of the entertainment, and account of being interesting and novel and furnishing enjoyment and knowledge at the same time, they appeal to the theatre public who are showing their appreciation at the box office.

Buddy Messenger Signed

Twelve-year-old Buddy Messenger, who has gained notice for his splendid work in "Shadows" and in the Universal-Jewel production, "The Flirt," in which he played the part of the small brother tease, Hedrick, has been signed by Julius and Abe Stern for several pictures of boy life. He will start on his new affiliation next week.

New DeHaven Comedy

"Keep 'em Home," Carter DeHaven's fourth two-reel comedy under the contract with P. A. Powers, will be given an early release on the Film Booking Offices of America short subject program. "Keep 'em Home" features Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven and is another domestic comedy built around a novel situation in the lives of newlyweds. The picture was directed by Mal St. Clair.

11 Exclusive Items in Kinograms Reel

The current issue of Kinograms, Educational's news reel, contains no fewer than eleven exclusive subjects, which is believed to be the largest number of exclusive items ever included in any one issue of a news reel.

The subjects thus illustrated only in Kinograms are the following: Preparation for winter time at the New York Zoo; the Minnesota-Ohio State football game; the Missouri Fox Hunt; M. Marcel's 70th birthday celebration (long may he wave); latest Parisian creations for Milady; orphan kiddies in Cleveland laying siege to a helpless pie wagon; an athlete who can walk seven miles an hour; a winsome Eve surrounded by U. S. gobs and plenty of tempting apples, making a pretty battleship pageantry; thick growth of lilies on the St. John Bayou in Louisiana, preventing the passage of river craft; the submarine that is supposed to be the first ever constructed, and used during the Civil War days; E. C. Yellowley, whose drastic methods of prohibition enforcement have ta en some of the color from the exploits of bootleggers, at work in his New York office.

Start Work on Second of Witwer's Series

With the completion of "Fighting Blood," the first of H. C. Witwer's twelve stories which are now being filmed at the R-C Studios, production of the second, "The Knight in Gale," has been already started by Mal St. Clair, who is directing the series. The entire series takes its name from the first picture and will be known as the "Fighting Blood" series.

To date eight of the ewelve stories have been published in Collier's magazine and it is probable that F. B. O. will release the first picture shortly after the appearance of the last story in this magazine.

Baby Peggy Doing a Spanish Film

Baby Peggy, the tiny star of Century Comedies, has been on location at the San Fernando Mission filming her newest Century Special Production. "The Senorita."

She has been surrounded with a bevy of beautiful girls for this production. Her principal supporting lady is Lillian Hackett, while Inez MacDonnell plays a dark-eyed vamp.

Newsy Notes About Short Subjects

The popular series of modern detective stories, "The Further Exploits of Yorke Norroy," by George Bronson Howard, are now being filmed by Universal with Roy Stewart as the star. Duke Worne is making them into two-reelers, with Lucille Rickson, Fontaine LaRue, Jack Perrin and Hayden Stevenson in the cast.

Joe Brandt, of C. B. C., spent several days in St. Louis, recently, where he sold to Sam Werner, of United Film Service, the rights to the 1923 series of Hallroom Boys Comedies.

S. E. Levis, of the Francesca Theatre, San Francisco, who has been running the Ruth Roland serial, "The Timber Queen," on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, reports to Pathe that as a result Tuesday's business is better than Saturday's, and Wednesday's is running it "close up."

On his return from abroad, Julius Stern brought many press notices on Century comedies. Among them were clippings from prominent Berlin newspapers which highly praised the Baby Peggy pictures.

"The Split Outfit" is the next subject in the series of Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce, which will be released by Educational. It is a whimsical story of two prospectors who disagreed while deep in the wilderness.

A comedy featuring the Century Beauties and called "Farmerettes" has just been started by Al. Herman. The cast will be headed by Joe Bonner, supported by Blanche Payson and Betty May.

Nine members of one family, from grandmother to a little shaver, appear in Lloyd Hamilton's forthcoming Educational comedy, "The Educator."

Among the prominent exhibitors who have praised the new Baby Peggy productions made by Century and distributed by Universal is Dave Bershon, of West Coast Theatres, Inc. Mr. Bersbon, after viewing "Little Red Riding Hood" and "Peg of the Movies," states they are the kind needed for high class houses and will make Baby Peggy one of the best bets in the business.

In the ninth of the Plum Center Comedies for F. B. O., Director Robert Eddy has revived the old-fashioned street dentist who pulls teeth promiscuously. This episode will, of course, start Pop Tuttle (Dan Mason) on a series of humorous events.

Among the films approved by the National Board of Review and listed in connection with the Motion Picture Book Week Campaign are the following Educational short subjects: Sherlock Holmes two-reel dramas and Robert Bruce's Wilderness Tale, "And Women Must Weep." Only approved films based on literature are included in the list for Book Week, which is November 12 to 18.

Theatre Gives Educational "Short" Greater "Ad" Display Than Feature

"BARB WIRE"
A Whirlwind Drama of the Western Plains and Cattle Country.

Charles M. Olson, of the Central Amusement Company, operating the Lyric and Isis Theatres in Indianapolis, knows how to get full value out of his short subjects. After booking Educational's series of Sherlock Holmes two-reel dramas, being a hustling showman, he immediately got to work to put them over in great shape. In connection with the first release, "The Devil's Foot," he arranged a tie-up with the Indianapolis Star and gave a special performance for the newsboys. A large crowd of them gathered in front of the newspaper office and marched to the Lyric Theatre, attracting much attention. As a result, the Star carried a story and two photographs of the crowd under a three-column head, and also carried advance stories.

To cap the climax, as shown in the accompanying cut, in advertising the Isis program in the newspapers the two-reeler was given more prominent display than the feature.

"Cameo Comedies"

(Educational—Comedies—One Reel)

Educational announces that this new series is being issued in response to requests from exhibitors for single reel comedies with plenty of snap, made with the same care and on the same scale as the two-reel slapstick comedies. They are rough and tumble comedies and judging by the first two, should fill this demand and prove an attractive "buy" for exhibitors. There is an unusual amount of action in them, something doing every minute and will keep the average audience in roars. Both start off with a bang and are filled with laughs. Jimmie Adams does good work in the leading roles.

"Crash"

The first of this series is built on a clever idea, well developed for comedy purposes. A young couple and their child are dispossessed and invited to demonstrate a new aeroplane which is a complete "house on wings." They do so, but hubby finds it unmanageable and the result is that the "house" does nose dives, loops-the-loop, and other stunts causing confusion. The manner in which the machine swings around with hubby hanging on to the steering wheel and wifie racing across the walls and ceiling will get many laughs. The "voyage," of course, ends in a crash.—C. S. S.

"Pitter Patter"

Several good comedy ideas have been combined and crowded into this reel with the result that it is full of action, stunts and laughs. There is a terrible rain storm with the roof leaking, a trick flivver, the girl who has to be married by a certain hour and her fiance who is quarantined and has difficulties in getting to her in time. Of course, everything comes out O. K., but in the meantime the hero has all sorts of exciting experiences.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 181

Subjects that should be appealing to anyone comprise this group. The average sights on a busy street of a big city, inspired by William Cullen Bryant's poem, "The Crowded Street," have been photographed with more than a mere superficial interest and create an atmosphere that has a favorable effect on all that follows. How to make a wax frog by using a live model, without injuring him, is the educational feature and some attractive nature studies in color, the scenic contribution.

"Pirates of the Deep"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

This is the third of the series of two-reelers based on Jack London's "Tales of the Fish Patrol," and is one of the most interesting of the series so far. It deals with a raid by a gang of thugs on an oyster bed. The hero, a member of the fish patrol, learns of it and follows the raiders, catching them at work. There is a good fight between the occupants of the two boats, resulting in the capture of the raiders. There is also considerable heart interest supplied by Jack Mulhall and Louise Lorraine in the leading roles.—C. S. S.

"Ginger Face"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is a juvenile comedy starring little Johnny Fox which will prove especially pleasing to the children because of the pranks into which this little freckle-faced star gets when he wanders away from his parents and meets a little colored boy. They go fishing, try to blow up the pond, but their dog retrieves the bomb and chases them. Johnny gets so black he looks like a negro. Returning home his parents fail to recognize him at first, but all ends satisfactorily. For adult patrons there is not as many laughs as usual in Universal-Century comedies.—C. S. S.

"The Rolling Stone"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

An entertaining but rather far-fetched version of the famous "Rolling Stone" proverb is furnished in this Aesop fable. It starts out with an engine making a few uncanny ascents and detours. One of the unfortunate passengers, a dog from the upper classes, never reaches his destination. In escaping the engineer, he is attracted by the fumes of flapjacks and it is the pursuit of one of these that illustrates the proverb, which has been augmented to read: "A rolling stone gathers no moss but gets a great polish."—M. K.

"Washed Ashore"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Paul Parrott spends most of his time on a cannibal isle in this subject, a revel of slapstick. Much of it is hilarious burlesque, and will go well where this is in demand. His houseboat is an original contrivance, the remnants of a shipwreck, that brings him to the shores of a savage island. Most of the action consists of showing him dodging the pursuit of the wild men and the wilder princess of the tribe, and concludes with a dramatic rescue of a beautiful girl they have imprisoned.—M. K.

"A Bully Pair"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

There have been many comedies with trained animals such as dogs, cats, horses, ducks, donkeys, etc., but this comedy is unique in that it has a trained bull in the cast. This bull does not do any unusually clever stunts but it does do all that can be expected. There is a chase in which the bull is the principal figure and in which the animal does its part well, and the film ends showing the hero and his pal calmly finishing their dinner with the bull also enjoying the situation. It is a rough and tumble comedy and aside from the novelty of the bull's antics, is of only average comedy value. Charlot Molina and Charles King are featured.—C. S. S.

"The Enchanted Fiddle"

(Pathe—One Reel)

The cat and the fiddle produce some irresistible strains that lure the mice to a swift doom in this latest of the Aesop Fables which Pathe is offering. The fiddle's magic is noted by the old farmer whose mule and pigs have strayed, and inspires him to win them back again by music. He succeeds, but the mule pays him back in the well-known way in which mules usually retaliate. The picture is an amusing demonstration of the proverb: "It's a poor rule that doesn't work both ways."—M. K.

"The Graphic"

(Educational—Magazine—One Reel)

Well up to the standard of interest and entertainment set by the previous issues, is the latest number of Educational's Graphic. One section shows an American society belle, who danced with the King of Spain, demonstrating with another partner European adaptations of America's popular dances. A novel subject shows a thrilling jungle fight with a lion which ends by showing it is being staged for a movie. An artist also draws scenes from memory and they are shown fading into pictures of the originals. Another section shows an unusually busy traffic cop in St. Louis whose work continues when he goes home to a family consisting of about ten adopted children.—C. S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Conditions Bad

From a projectionist in Jackson, Michigan, comes the following:

I note that many of the men are having trouble with bad splices and other faults in the films. I inclose three of the worst I have ever seen, which came to me recently.

When a chap says that he is a projectionist and demands thirty-five to forty dollars a week, with every other night off, and cannot make better splices than these he certainly needs some fixing.

In our town I believe we have the poorest paid projectionists in all the country. Would you you believe men would work in a "booth" seven days a week, with no nights off, for twenty-five (25) dollars a week?

Well, that is what Jackson men get. Some of them start at 10 A. M. and some at 1 P. M., but they are never through before 11 P. M. or midnight. I for one would appreciate your view of such a situation, and any suggestion you may be willing to make. If you use this in the department, please, for reasons you will understand, don't use my name.

They Are Corkers

The splices are corkers, all right. One is just five-eighths of an inch wide, another three-eighths and badly buckled, and the other more than half an inch.

As to the twenty-five-dollar-a-week, ten-to-thirteen-hours-a-day stunt, may I ask the Jackson exhibitor if he really believes this sort of thing pays? Just sit you down, Mr. Jackson Exhibitor, and reason it out for yourself.

You are employing men to project pictures, and in so doing to reproduce photoplays before audiences which pay an admission to see that reproduction. These men are NOT employed to sweep floors, which almost any one can do about as well as the next one, with just a little practice, but to reproduce photoplays, and you certainly must know that the drawing power of your box office depends not only upon the productions you show on your screen, but also in goodly measure upon HOW THEY ARE SHOWN ON YOUR SCREEN.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Ave., New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Even the most dense theatre manager will be forced to admit that any given production will be made to appear very much better on his screen if projected properly than if projected improperly, and that the difference in attractiveness of any given production to any audience may be made very great indeed by difference in excellence of projection.

Requires Brains and Skill

Do you not realize, Mr. Jackson Exhibitor, that the reproduction of modern photoplays on the screen at 100 per cent value in attractiveness, which means 100 per cent box office drawing power, requires brains, skill and knowledge of no mean order? Is it possible that you are blind to so very obvious a proposition as this?

DO YOU EXPECT OR HOPE TO OBTAIN BRAINS, KNOWLEDGE AND SKILL OF HIGH ORDER FOR TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS A WEEK? If you do you certainly are straining your "expecter." It is not done, and the attempt you are making to do it is very much worse than foolish, because it is reacting upon you at a cost of many times the difference it would cost to get real ability in your projection room, with ambition and enthusiasm back of it.

I have not even stopped to question the correctness of this man's statement, because I very well remember that when I was last in Jackson the conditions set forth prevailed in that city. If Jackson exhibitors feel themselves unjustly dealt with I will be glad to give them full space to explain their side of it.

Excellent Installation

From the new Palace Theatre, Wichita, Kansas, come the accompanying photographs. If I am not in error, a description of the room was sent in by another brother some time ago and was partly published. Anyhow, the pictures will be interesting, so here they are.

In Figure 1 we have a general view of the projection room, and in Figure 2 of a portion of the front wall.

Beyond the third projector, in Figure 1, is a dissolving stereopticon.

There are many commendable things in this installation. First and most important, I call your attention to the master cord and the method of port shutter suspension. All the shutters are hung by means of a chain to rod A, in Figure 1, by a ring in the end of the chain which hooks over a stud in the rod.

Rod A, Lever Controlled

Rod A is controlled by a lever at its right hand end, shown in Figure 3, which is held in horizontal position by means of the master cord, one end of which attaches to it. You will observe that the master cord is brought down to the upper magazine of each projector, and besides the magazine a metallic fuse is inserted in the cord. That is my only criticism. Projectionist Barnes has started on the right track, but did not go quite far enough, though that may not be his fault. Where the cord comes down by the magazine it should come down around the curve of the magazine and in the front of its base should be a slot just wide and thick enough to admit a film fuse, such as will be shown in my answer to the "Biggest Question," now running in the department. The trouble with the metal fuse, located as it is, is that it probably would not let go for at least several seconds, and in case of fire, if a panic is to be averted, the time of shutters falling is a matter of split seconds.

PROJECTION ROOM, MILLER THEATRE, WICHITA

Fixed as I have suggested, about the first thing the blaze at the projector aperture would strike would be the film fuse, whereupon the shutters would all fall instantly. You have started right, Brother Barnes, but have not gone far enough; also, the master cord should loop down over both the rewinder table and the film storage tank, with a film fuse over each.

Three Vent Flues

You will notice the three vent flues—good; also the lamphouse piped to them. In the second picture you will note that the lens port is stopped down and with a black shield. You will also notice the goodly dimensions of the observation ports. The panel board with ammeter and voltmeter seen in the second picture is duplicated between each projector.

Note the metal carbon receptacle in Figure 3. Notice the projection circuit outlets. Excellent! Beside the switchboard is the carbon stub receptacle. The shield enclosing the condenser beam is good. The front projection room wall should be a darker color.

My compliments to Brother Barnes. Aside from the film fuses and the too-light color of front wall I have nothing but praise for your installation.

Abusive Letters

On my recent visit to Ontario I was shown a letter written to a projectionist whom I shall designate as No. 1; by another projectionist whom we will name No. 2, as I do not care to disclose the actual names or locations. I was not told much as to the particulars, or if I was I have forgotten them. I, however, obtained permission to take the letter, and from it I gather that No. 1 had received films badly mutilated by change-over punch marks and had written the exhange manager, as it was perfectly right and proper for him to do, protesting against the outrage.

Perhaps he did and perhaps he did not say who had the films next before him. Anyhow the exchange would know that, and apparently, waking up, took No. 2 to task for the damage done to the films, whereupon he, No. 2, wrote No. 1 a letter, the like of which I have never seen the equal for pure abuse, rough and indecent language. Among other things he said: "You are a dirty sneak and a small-time liar;" "I don't care a damn who punched the film. That is the exchange's business."

These extracts are merely a sample of the body of the letter. After considerable deliberation I concluded to and did write the local union of which No. 1 is a member (and he is a corking good man too), inclosing the letter and suggesting that the local take the matter up with the local No. 2 belongs to. No. 2 signed his name John Doe, Local No. —. Of course the "John Doe" is fictitious.

Reason for My Action

My reason for taking this action is that it is outrageous for one projectionist to write such a vile, abusive letter to another projectionist for no other reason than that he merely did his plain duty to his profession, his fellow projectionists and to the theatre in which he is employed.

He had made a most commendable effort to stop abuse of the films which he and all projectionists in that territory must use. If it be true that No. 2 did not do the damage, then he certainly himself made no effort to apprehend the man who did. In fact, he frankly says he "doesn't care a damn who punches film." If it be true that No. 2 had no hand in committing the outrage then he could easily have said so and have rebuked No. 1 for his unjust suspicion without resorting to personal abuse. Certainly when he announced that he did not care a damn who damaged film he automatically put himself outside the pale of consideration by all decent projectionists who respect their profession and the property entrusted to their care.

I made no suggestion to the local beyond that the matter be taken up with the other union. I do firmly believe that the local No 2 belongs to should take him sharply to task and assess a substantial fine on the grounds of conduct unbecoming a union man, a projectionist and a member of the organization —language which tended to reflect upon the union he belongs to, because of the fact that he used the local union's number as a part and parcel of his signature. By so doing he made himself directly amenable to the union. or so it seems to me.

Duty of the Union

The function of securing better wages and better working conditions is only a part of the office of a labor union. The duty of the union does NOT end when these things have been accomplished, though I am sorry to say that very many unions stop short when those things have been accomplished

The further duty consists of insisting upon good and efficient work—work which will bring credit and not discredit upon the union. Also a union should be self respecting and certainly should not permit its name to be connected with such language as is contained in the letter in question.

I have refrained from publication of the letter solely because I do not wish to bring discredit upon the local No. 2 is connected with. It is a good local, with many high class men on its rolls; also I have many friends in its membership for whom I have the highest regard and respect. I would really like to publish the entire letter, just to show you to what depths men will go in using personal abuse—when its object is a hundred or more miles away.

Better Equipment

Conducted by E. T. KEYSER

Holding On to the Over Flow and Making Waiting Enjoyable

OCCASIONALLY one runs across an exhibitor whose attitude, reduced to words, is as follows:

"I'm running a picture theatre. I'm showing the best program suited to my clientele that I can afford. I'm putting my picture on a good screen, with the best projection apparatus that I can purchase and this apparatus is operated by skilled men. I'm giving good music, with the best musical instruments and skilled musicians, and my ushers are efficient and courteous.

"My house is well ventilated, cool in summer and comfortably warm in winter. I believe that lets me out, as I am giving all that my clients reasonably expect."

This argument, on the face of it, sounds reasonable at first. The attractions which the exhibitor quoted are considerably more than many of the old-time showmen once thought necessary and are as much as many showmen are offering today.

How About the Overflow?

But consider the subject from the viewpoint of the overflow.

Have you ever gone into a shoe store when every clerk was busy fitting foot coverings on prospective customers? No matter how busy they were, someone always pounced upon you, removed one shoe, and left you with a cheery assurance that your case would be attended to immediately.

Sometimes, the promise was kept, oftener, it was not, but the main idea was that you would not be quite so likely to hop away on one foot to try your luck elsewhere as you would if you had shoes on both feet.

The idea was to nail down the waiting list as effectively as possible and to hang on to the overflow of the establishment.

Now, this is just where the promenade, the rest room, the women's dressing room, the tea room and the men's smoking room do yeoman service to the picture house.

The seats may be full and the program half through when a busy shopper, with an impaired complexion, hits the ticket office. If she knows that it is a case of standing for another fifteen or twenty minutes on feet, which have already traversed many miles of shop aisles, until part of the audience files out, she may wander on to another house, or entirely give up the idea of attending a show.

On the other hand, if she knows that she can go to a comfortable furnished sitting room, sit down at an artistic dresser, and repair the ravages of a soft-coal atmosphere, while waiting for a seat, the chances are greatly in favor of her purchasing a ticket and, later on, getting more enjoyment out of the show than she would have experienced if she had crowded into a middle chair and sat down, hot, tired and knowing that she was not at her best as regards appearance.

Comfortable Waiting

When two or three women, who have engaged in a shopping orgy, agree upon a final meeting place before going home, they are much more likely to gather at a picture house which has a comfortable waiting room, or a well furnished promenade or lobby than one which is not so equipped.

The fact that one may drop into a house at any time and be comfortable while waiting for the next show, is a big advantage to the house furnishing such accommodations.

This is why we are finding more picture houses catering to the patient waiters with comfortably and artis-

A MODEL OF SPACIOUS COMFORT

The men's club room and the women's lounge of Loew's Memphis State tically furnished waiting and dressing rooms which would once have been considered a reckless extravagance.

Furnished to Harmonize

Such rooms may be furnished in wicker and cretonne at a moderate cost, or more luxuriously fitted with overstuffed furniture and with real leather upholstery in the men's smoking or club rooms.

In the residential sections, such portions of the theatre serve the purpose of community meeting rooms, where women may get together and exchange views and gossip, while the men hold experience meetings of their own in the smoking rooms.

The very fact that many of the most progressive theatres in the country have gone away beyond the original intention of the theatre and become, in addition, community centres and meeting places, in many of which babies may be checked and tea and light refreshments may be enjoyed by the patrons, shows that what was once considered a wonderful innovation has become a profitable extension to the theatre's activities.

And it depends entirely upon the neighborhood in which a house is situated, upon the price of its admission and its clientele, whether the foyers, waiting rooms and club rooms shall be equipped simply and comparatively inexpensively or with period furniture.

Provided for in Plans

Plans for many of the new theatres, of even moderate size, show provisions of this nature made for the comfort of the patrons both before and after the show, and the market which these portions of the theatre offer to manufacturers of floor coverings and furniture, to the designers of the lighting fixtures and to artistic decorators indicates that such service to the patrons is profitable for the enterprising house offering it.

This service can be charged off to advertising, with just as much reason as the electric signs, lobby displays, newspaper announcements, programs and the mailing list and it tends to hold the patrons which the other advertising efforts create.

The picture is always the main attraction of the picture house, but these added attractions go far to supplement a good show, to make patrons contented and appreciative and are factors with which to be reckoned in the planning of a new house or the renovation of an old one.

WHERE WAITING IS NO HARDSHIP
Inner foyer of the New Lindo Theatre of Freeport, Ill.

Will Soon Start on New Tivoli

Work on the new Tivoli Theatre, at 14th street and Park Road, northwest Washington, D. C., the newest link in the Crandall chain, will be started as soon as the Sacred Heart Church, which now occupies the site, moves to its new home. The complete plans of the theatre have been received by Harry M. Crandall.

The new church is expected to be finished within a few weeks and the construction of the new theatre will begin immediately after the congregation moves. The Tivoli will have a seating capacity of 2,500, and it is claimed, will be one of the most beautiful moving picture theatres in the country.

Automatic Ticket Register Secures Joe Hornstein as Its Sales Manager

THE outstanding event in the equipment field for the week ending November 4 was the announcement made on November 3 by E. S. Bowman, secretary of the Automatic Ticket Register Corporation, 1780 Broadway, New York, of the appointment as sales manager of Joe Hornstein.

Mr. Hornstein will still continue his management of and retain his interest in the Howells Cine Equipment Corporation, which has been appointed a sales agency for the Automaticket device, but the entire sales policy of the Automatic Ticket Register Corporation will be under his direct management and supervision.

Mr. Hornstein has just returned from a trip, during which he has appointed, as sales agents of the Automatic Ticket Register Corporation, the Exhibitors' Supply Company, with headquarters in Chicago and branches in Indianapolis, St. Louis, Minneapolis and Milwaukee; the Argus Enterprises, with headquarters in Cleveland, Omaha, Salt Lake City and Denver; Dwyer Bros. & Company, of Cincinnati; Exhibitors' Supply Company, of Boston; Hollis, Snith-Morton Company, Inc., of Pittsburgh; and the Washington Theatre Supply Company, of Washington, D. C.

JOE HORNSTEIN

Who smilingly assumes the sales management of the Automatic Ticket Register Corporation.

Change in Policy

The importance of the event is due not only to the prominence of the Automatic Ticket Register Corporation's new sales manager, but to the entire reversal of its former policy of selling direct to the ultimate consumer and substituting therefor the plan of having its product handled, in future, by representative supply houses with exclusive territory.

The new model Automaticket Cash Register, which was brought out in the fall of 1921, found instant favor among progressive exhibitors and is to be found in practically every theatre in Broadway's white light district, the Rialto, Loew's State, the Strand, Rivoli and the Capitol, all being equipped with these devices.

Among recent installations, those in the following houses may be mentioned:

Recent Installations

New Capitol Theatre, Detroit; New Eastman Theatre, Rochester; Lafayette Theatre, Buffalo; New Orpheum Theatre, Hannibal, Mo.; Richards & Nace, Phoenix, Ariz.; Joie Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark.; Loew's New State Theatre, Los Angeles; New Pantages Theatre, Los Angeles; Dawe Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn.; Poli's Theatre, Hartford, Conn.; Crandall's Circuit, Washington, D. C.; Ascher's Circuit, Chicago; Saenger's Liberty, New Orleans; Regent Theatre, Battle Creek, Mich.; Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Ozark Theatre, Webster Groves, Mo.; Strand Theatre, Omaha, Neb.; Stern's Castle Theatre, Irvington, N. J.; Keeney's Newark Theatre, Newark; Clinton Square Theatre, Albany; Manhattan Beach Bathing Company, Brooklyn, N. Y.; A. Schrader's Son (industrial plant), Brooklyn, N. Y.; R. H. Macy & Co. (soda fountain department), New York; Rye Baths, Oakland Beach, Rye, N. Y.; Alhambra Theatre, Dayton, Ohio; Dome Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio; New Blue Mouse, Portland; Wilmer & Vincent's Colonial Theatre, Allentown, Pa.; Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa.; Little's Opera House, Conshohocken, Pa.; Regent Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa.; Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia; Harrisburg Theatre, Pittsburgh; Miles Theatre, Scranton, Pa.; Comerford's Capitol, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Strand Theatre, Providence, R. I.; Victory Theatre, Charleston, S. C.; Winter Garden, Seattle; Capitol Theatre, Yakima, Wash.; Gimbel Bros. (soda department), Milwaukee, and Strand Theatre, Freeport, Ill.

The great popularity of the Automatic Seller and Register has been due to its reliability, the ingenious arrangement by which the operating keys are dropped below the table top, giving a clear flush surface for change making, and to the fact that it is built in four types which vend, two, three, four and five different prices of ticket, respectively.

With the appointment of the agents above mentioned, which gives the Automatic Ticket Register Corporation fifteen branch offices and service stations, this popularity will undoubtedly be greatly increased.

MOV-EZY

Means Ease at the Movies

Ten Stand Up While Two Sit Down

That's what it means with the ordinary type of theatre seat every time any newcomers arrive.

Why not eliminate this everlasting annoyance to your patrons by equipping your theatre with the Mov-Ezy Chair, the chair that "Means Ease at the Movies"?

With this remarkable seating arrangement, the spectator, without standing, simply swings his seat to either side to provide ample passageway between rows for those who are entering or leaving.

The Mov-Ezy is a chair in all sense of the word, with a high back and arm rests. It gives your patrons the luxury of watching the picture with as much comfort as if they were in an armchair—besides the extra convenience of never being disturbed by those who are constantly passing.

Theatre owners are amazed by the manner in which this chair has increased their patronage.

"Shadows" Stands Out Like The Woolworth Building

NOW and then a picture is produced that stands out above the others, just as the Woolworth building stands out above all the buildings that surround it. It is such pictures as these that prove beyond any doubt that picture-making is an art. Such a one is "Shadows"—a picture that stands out above all others.

With a worth-while theme as its foundation, masterfully directed and artistically acted, with its settings and general atmosphere realistic, the story creates in the mind an impression that lasts many days and weeks after one has seen the picture.

Though tragedy, the sad fate of the principal characters does not leave an unpleasant feeling. On the contrary, their fate so arouses the compassion of the spectator, that he feels regret for not being able to help relieve their sufferings.

The acting of Mr. Chaney, who assumes the role of a Chinaman, is remarkable. Better acting he has never done in his life.

Every one of the other players, too, acts well.

A Paramount Picture

Why?

1. Because everybody in Fossil knows all about Paramount Pictures. The national magazines, which have carried Paramount advertising for years, are read in the smallest towns as well as in the big cities.

2. Because the Fossil Theatre used plenty of Paramount accessories, which are as good as the pictures. Mr. Will Hebenton, the owner, used posters, heralds, newspaper cuts and mailing circulars.

Most theatres in towns that small would stick up two 1-sheets and trust to luck.

The owner of the Fossil wanted to make money—and he did!

Goldwyn Gleanings

DID YOU EVER touch a match to a kerosene-soaked pile of chips and watch the flames spread? Well that is the way Goldwyn's "Brothers Under the Skin," greatest of all exploitation stunts, is sweeping the country. Every newspaper of any consequence gave display heads to the story of the "Brothers Under the Skin Association" incorporated last week. New "Brother" Associations are being organized everywhere. There never has been anything like it. Danny, of The Film Daily, said we were lucky. Call it luck, or anything else that you want, but get your share of this wonderful publicity.

WONDERFUL IS A BIG WORD. It needs backing up. Here are the first returns: "Capitol Theatre, New York, Sunday, Nov. 11, Brothers under the Skin, $11,206." These figures look big, but they are even bigger than they look when you consider that it was a week of the strongest sort of opposition at neighboring Broadway theatres. A big picture more than half sold to your public in advance. That's an item to talk about on Thanksgiving Day.

TALKING ABOUT PUBLICITY, our books of clippings carry more than 100 columns of advance publicity on "Remembrance" in newspapers in all sections of the country. And this does not include New York City where Rupert Hughes' latest picture got a fine break. This is the sort of selling cooperation that Goldwyn is giving exhibitors.

UNGRY HEARTS

From the great book by Anzia Yezierska

Additional titles by Montague Glass

Directed by E. Mason Hopper

WE are proud to present this colossal pageant of human loves and sorrows that now takes its place with the few immortal works of the silent drama. Here is a living story of a vast metropolis where life's battle is thrilling, cruel, yet deeply fascinating, where the flower of love blooms sweetly and tenderly while the ceaseless parade of hates and passions, romance and adventure passes by in absorbing procession. Here is a true masterpiece. Here is a picture that will take its place with the greatest.

Ask Goldwyn

RUN OVER IN YOUR MIND the biggest box office stars of the day. Pola Negri is among them, isn't she? You don't have to answer, of course she is. Well, here is a big piece of news. GOLDWYN IS GOING TO RELEASE THE GREATEST PICTURE THAT POLA NEGRI EVER MADE. It is "Sapho," an adaptation of the world-famous novel and play. This is just one more reason for becoming a Goldwyn exhibitor.

"BEN HUR" is going to be a stupendous production. There is no doubt about that. But one important question remains unanswered and it is causing a lot of discussion in the trade. Who will be the director of Lew Wallace's masterpiece? It is rumored that a choice has narrowed down until it rests between three of the most famous directors in the world. "Ben Hur" will be the prize assignment of the year.

RUPERT HUGHES NEVER STOPS. With "Remembrance" going the rounds of first run theatres, and "Bitterness of Sweets" just completed, he has found time to finish the continuity of "Souls for Sale" and is assembling a cast of stars. A wire from the Goldwyn Studios at Culver City states that Claire Windsor, Richard Dix, Frank Mayo and Lew Cody have been engaged thus far. "Souls for Sale," is a story of life in the Hollywood motion picture colony. It is a "best seller."

A Star and a Picture That Build Up Business

This is a combination every exhibitor wants—And just what he gets with George Arliss in "THE MAN WHO PLAYED GOD." Here's a picture for every kind of theatre patron in any city. Philadelphia reports this: "Drew well throughout engagement, especially in latter part of week." "Business decidedly above average for seven days," is Dallas verdict.

A Big Star and a Big Picture For a Big Public

The great George Arliss, one of the foremost screen actors in America, in a great photoplay of dramatic intensity, gripping action, thrilling romance, sparkling comedy, and a plot that holds the interest to the end. A picture that keeps bringing them in right to the end of the booking.

The Crowning Achievement of Mary Pickford's Career

"The new 'Tess of the Storm Country' is the greatest picture Mary Pickford has ever made. It is more than that. It is one of the great pictures of motion picture history. It is the high water mark of the star's career. Miss Pickford seems the incarnation of eternal youth. She is wonderfully and profoundly satisfying."—N. Y. Evening Mail.

"Mary Pickford's re-creation of 'Tess of the Storm Country' surpasses infinitely most movies that are now in their first blush. It seems by far the best picture ever turned out by a film actress. For an extremely adroit fusion of comedy, pathos and melodrama it has all the other feminine pictures sinking for the third time. You will enjoy this picture."—N. Y. Sun.

'Tess of the Storm Country' is an excellent film, and one that cannot fail to please and entertain any audience. Your beloved Mary is there, charming as ever."—N. Y. Daily News.

"Miss Pickford is as winsome as ever in 'Tess of the Storm Country'—the last word in charm and attractiveness. Improved methods of filming have brought the new version up to the best standards of today."—N. Y. American.

" 'Tess of the Storm Country' is unquestionably a success. It is sure to be a highly profitable production. Miss Pickford herself is splendid."—N. Y. Herald.

" 'Tess of the Storm Country' was and Is the best thing Mary Pickford has ever done. Miss Pickford in her latest edition of the famous picture, far outshines the Mary Pickford of eight years ago. And that is the highest praise we can give."—N. Y. Evening World.

"The unusual Mary Pickford makes this an unusual picture. She is perfectly beautiful."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Mary Pickford makes 'Tess' real, for Miss Pickford acts. She scampers and skips in her old familiar way, but she also acts. She has intensely human moments. Her pantomime is subtle and finished."—N. Y. Times

"Miss Pickford probably has never acted a part more beautiful than she acts this one. The element of suspense is played upon with great effect and the plot so arranged as to arouse the utmost interest."—N. Y. World.

"Mary Pickford's beauty never has appeared softer or lovelier. The photography is superb. The direction ranks among the best. The production is splendidly cast. And Miss Pickford's characterization of the wild, madcap, tender-hearted squatter girl has been beautifully accentuated."—Morning Telegraph.

"The story of 'Tess of the Storm Country' is the kind of mixture of pathos, humor, drama and sentimentality which Mary Pickford always fits into perfectly."—N. Y. Call.

"Mary Pickford never has had, and probably never will have again so excellent a vehicle as 'Tess of the Storm Country' for the exploitation of her natural and dramatic talents. She, herself, was as effective as ever. She appeared more like seventeen than she did five or six years ago."—N. Y. Globe.

"The re-created 'Tess of the Storm Country is the finest achievement of Mary Pickford's career. The story is closely knit and the pictures as they melt before the eye, are rich in atmosphere and beauty."—Evening Telegram.

"Mary Pickford has a new success to her credit. One loves Tess for her sweet simplicity and unspoiled faith as much as for her spirit and spunk when viciousness peers in the window and villainy stalks through the door."—N. Y. Evening Journal.

THE MAN AND THE MOMENT
ELINOR GLYN

ELINOR GLYN'S name is synonymous with ravishing love stories and "The Man and the Moment" is a typical Elinor Glyn novel, read and re-read by her millions of followers.

It starts out with a marriage between a man and a woman who are utter strangers to each other. The heroine is being forced to marry a man she hates.

The hero can only be saved from an entangling alliance by marrying some one else. So they wed each other. But such a marriage of convenience offers complications, as this one does, in true Elinor Glyn style.

As a photoplay, "The Man and the Moment" can be played up strongly and, relying upon the fame of Elinor Glyn and the fascinating appeal of this sensational drama, it is sure to be a tremendous success at the box office.

Motion Picture News

Thrills, romance, mystery, a very fine cast, excellent direction, photography of a very high quality, elaborate settings, a stirring climax—these are the principal ingredients of this William Christy Cabanne contribution. If ever a picture boasted a wide variety of scenes, this one is it. The observer is carried through a maze of situations each more interesting than the big punch in a lot of average filmplays. In spite of this variety the continuity runs smoothly to the fadeout.

Mae Marsh is the star, and she does some of the finest acting of her career. As Marion Bates, who is tricked by her guardian, thrown into an insane asylum, escapes and finds refuge with a gang of crooks, Miss Marsh has ample opportunity to display some real emotional fireworks. Walter Miller contributes a convincing portrayal in the role of Jim Brennan, head of the gang. The remainder of the cast is adequate.

The picture has an overabundance of thrills. It starts with a leap and jumps along merrily right to the end, when there's one of the kind of climaxes that draw an audience to the edge of the seats. Marion's escape from the asylum, her adventures in the lonely house occupied by the crooks, the Spanish Inn moments, the attempt to kidnap her and the thrilling rescue at the end when a radio outfit is introduced to summon police aid are just a few of the dramatic situations. Its all very good and we predict for this entertaining picture real success at the box office.

IT IS A GOOD PICTURE. CAPABLY DIRECTED, WELL PLAYED & ALTOGETHER INTERESTING.

Variety

This is the first of the Dependable Pictures productions sponsored by Morris Kohn and directed by Wm. Christy Cabanne. It is a good picture. Just as good as a lot of those getting the big first runs. It is capably directed, well played and altogether interesting. The title seemingly is the only weak point about the picture from the box office standpoint.

The cast is a corking one, with Mae Marsh and Martha Mansfield featured. Miss Marsh runs away with the honors among the women, and Walter Miller, playing the secondary lead, does likewise with the men. Miller is a comer worth watching as a leading man.

The picture is effectively done with character bits contributed by Dick Lee and Tammany Young that stand out. The former does a "nance" crook that is a work of art. Cabanne has handled this portion of the picture most cleverly. Fred.

Regional in News Value; National in Service

Observed from any one of its several angles of appeal, this Associated Exhibitors' production, "Till We Meet Again," has the popular note. It brings back a charming star, Mae Marsh, after a considerable lapse of time. It has an appealing story treated with pathos, humor and a dash of the melodramatic, pictured against a variety of interesting backgrounds. It has been produced with a definite understanding of what is generally liked on the screen and should be satisfying on any program.

The star in one of her most characteristic roles again expresses an art that is peculiarly her own. Her moments of pathos are handled as no one else succeeds in doing.

Showing a keen sense of showmanship values, the picture includes several of the tried-and-true angles of interest. The heroine who escapes from an insane asylum wanders into a deserted country house inhabited by a gang of crooks. The romantic interest begins. An attractive cabaret scene appeals because of a Spanish dance and a display of fine lighting. When the beautiful home of the girl's protector is invaded by burglars, the call for help via radio and the response is a big thrill. The cast includes Martha Mansfield and Norman Kerry.

IT HAS THE POPULAR NOTE. SHOWS A KEEN SENSE OF SHOWMANSHIP VALUES.

WE PREDICT FOR THIS ENTERTAINING FEATURE REAL SUCCESS AT THE BOX OFFICE.

SHOULD WIN WIDESPREAD POPULARITY AND BRING THE SHEKELS STREAMING FREELY INTO THE BOX OFFICE.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

The numerous admirers of fast moving crook melodrama will find entertainment exactly to their taste in this picture. It is keyed up to top speed from the first to the final reel and punctuated with thrills enough to fill a serial. Not that "Till We Meet Again" is to be listed according to a serial standard of excellence, for it registers as an exceptionally high-class feature in point of fine direction, clever acting and skilled direction. Also, the plot, while furnishing constant surprises and a legion of totally unexpected situations, is so well constructed that it is easy to follow, in fact the perfect continuity achieved is one of the film's strongest points. Director Cabanne and his talented cast of players have done their work intelligently and with great effect, the result being an attraction which should win wide-spread popularity and bring the shekels streaming freely into the box office.

Points of Appeal.—It is seldom that such rapidfire action as distinguishes this production can be kept up for six reels without a jarring note or illogical sequence in the situations which arise. But there isn't a hitch in the progress of events, one incident blends into another with perfect smoothness, the tension never slackens and it is impossible to anticipate what is coming next. The persecuted heroine wins instant sympathy, the romantic phases and melodramatic punches are splendidly developed and a crashing climax is attained.

Cast.—Mae Marsh is excellent in the exacting role of Marion Bates, which calls for a dynamic display of energy and the star's ability as a forceful emotional actress has never been manifested to better advantage. Norman Kerry is a handsome and pleasing lover, Walter Miller, scores as Brennan, the outlaw chief, and the support is flawless.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—There are some charming exteriors, the interiors are well filmed and the lighting effects admirable. No break occurs in the continuity and the action never falters.

The Morning Telegraph

A swift moving and absorbing crook drama revolves about Mae Marsh.

It teaches the valuable lesson never to sign on the dotted line without reading the paper.

The picture is most interesting and pleasing and has an excellent cast.

Martha Mansfield is very pretty and attractive as the girl friend and Walter Miller is a handsome crook, who meets with an untimely end, and Tammany Young is very amusing as another crook.

A SWIFT MOVING AND ABSORBING CROOK DRAMA. MOST INTERESTING AND WITH AN EXCELLENT CAST

DAILY NEWS

Title of picture, "Till We Meet Again."

Story and direction by Wm. Christy Cabanne.

Featuring Mae Marsh.

Released by Associated Exhibitors.

Presented by Loew's State Theatre.

This picture has to recommend it to moviegoers an excellent actress in the person of Mae Marsh, a delightful band of burglars of the Gilbert and Sullivan type, quite the jolliest crew of criminals we have seen in some time, some original war scenes and a thrilling fight in the final reel in which Mae, thanks to Cabanne, the director, does not stand around and register horror but takes an active part.

AN EXCELLENT ACTRESS IN THE PERSON OF MAE MARSH. A THRILLING FIGHT IN THE FINAL REEL

EXHIBITORS HERALD

This is the first of a series of Dependable Pictures Corporation productions for Associated Exhibitors and is a pleasing romance with a cast that should go far towards attracting patrons to the box office. The players included are Mae Marsh, Norman Kerry, Walter Miller, J. Barney Sherry, Martha Mansfield, Julia Swayne Gordon, Tammany Young and others.

The production is well staged and the tale it unfolds is told against beautiful backgrounds, well photographed. It will hold interest and should prove satisfactory to the majority of theatregoers.

The story tells of Marion Bates, who, betrayed by her guardian, is thrown in an asylum under the pretext of insanity. She escapes and falls in with a band of crooks, the leader of which is Brennan, who protects her and becomes infatuated with her. After escaping from the crooks she returns to the Carter family, her only friends, where she meets Robert Carter, son of the family. Her guardian, she learns, is also the trusted advisor for the Carter family and has mulcted them of their money as he has done her.

Upon learning that she has escaped the guardian, she employs the same gang of thieves which she had formerly met to obtain a paper in which she had signed over her rights to certain property. Brennan is delegated to perform the robbery. Confronting Marion in her room he discovers that he is in the home of his former buddy and Captain who had saved his life in France. His manhood is roused and he determines to protect the girl. There is a terrific fight with the gang and Brennan is killed defending the girl and his friend.

The Fotoplayer which has been in daily use at The Empress for the past three years, has been more than satisfactory. I would not think of exchanging it for an orchestra, and the expense is not to be compared.

Do you, as a Theatre Owner, really know "What the Public wants?"

"There exists no doubt that suggestion — that is to say, the human word, or, to go back to its origin, the thought, as a species of imagination and faith — can exercise a quasi-magical action upon not only the faculties of our moral being, but also the functions of our organism."

—EMILE BOIRAC,
Academy of Dijon

"Let go your hold, resign the care of your destiny to higher powers, be genuinely indifferent as to what becomes of it all, and you will find not only that you gain a perfect inward relief but often also, in addition, the particular goods which you sincerely thought you were renouncing."

Dr. WILLIAM JAMES,
America's Greatest Psychologist

This advertisement is intended for the Exhibitor who is tired of making after-the-performance apologies in his lobby, of wearily repeating, over and over again, "I'm sorry; I know it's a poor picture, but it's what the public wants!"

The public no longer wants to hear this showman's alibi, for the public knows what it wants and isn't bashful about showing its feelings.

Just now, one of the uppermost thoughts in the public mind is the rapid acceptance of the doctrine that the Will exercises a more powerful control over the destines of the body than science has heretofore been willing to admit. Call it "psychoanalysis," if you will, or "mind over matter," or any of the thousand-and-one names that have been given it, but the fact remains that millions of thinking people today open the door of their mind before they open the door of the old-fashioned medicine chest.

Clara Louise Burnham wrote a book founded on this very theory. Many thousands of copies of it were sold all over America. It was called "Heart's Haven" and Benj. B. Hampton and His Associates have turned it into a motion-picture—a smashing good story of life, and love and little kiddies, with the big, new and moving impulse, the power of the human mind to direct our lives, back of it all.

Get into step with this new order of things by booking "Heart's Haven" and you'll escape lobby alibis. It's "what the public wants!"

SPECIAL CAST IN NIGHT LIFE IN HOLLYWOOD
(ARROW)

This picture, properly exploited, will cause many exhibitors to sit up late at night counting box office receipts. In addition to an alluring title it deals with a subject that every theatre-goer is deeply interested in and wants to know more about.

When the A. B. Maescher Productions conceived the idea of making "Night Life in Hollywood" it was with the idea of offsetting the harm done to the fair name of the California city by the custom of the newspapers of the country constantly picturing it in print and head lines as a modern Gomorrah—a Hades on earth, with many modern improvements over the original one.

While the conception of the production was one of propaganda, the result was a picture that is an entertainment feature of exceptional interest, and one that should fill every theatre in which it is booked.

Skilfully directed, with many beautiful and carefully chosen settings, enacted by a good cast, it shows many interesting places and people of Hollywood. A number of the most prominent of screen celebrities are shown in their own homes, surrounded by their families, and engaging in their customary pursuits and pleasures.

There is also shown in rather daring manner many of the orgies and near

"The Broadway Madonna"

F. B. O. Release, a Highly Sophisticated Drama Rich in Audience Appeal

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"The Broadway Madonna" is rich in audience appeal. It is unusually attractive to the eye and has a story that gets a firm hold on the interest from the start. A charming new actress, Dorothy Revier, makes the scenes definitely alluring. Action starts with a cabaret scene that is a masterpiece in its soft and brilliant lighting effects. The photographer and director have worked with an assured knowledge of what is appealing. Miss Revier's dance number is the stellar feature here, a graceful introduction to a picture with revelry and spectacle as one of its chief attractions. Harry Revier's directing has brought out the full spectacular value of the big scenes. He seems to understand the relation between the emotional and pictorial arts and gets some unusually successful effects. The costume ball is one of the most distinguished accomplishments and Miss Revier's performance has been artistically handled

AN HONEST to God Money Maker! That's what we are all looking for.

We've sure got it in "Brawn of the North." We all cleaned up with "The Silent Call," but we'll top those receipts with this one.

Every man, woman and child in the United States knows Strongheart. They'll want see him again—it'll be worth it.

For Strongheart hasn't just repeated. He has eclipsed—outdone his triumphs of "The Silent Call" in his latest.

We've seen it. We can promise you it's a 100 percent picture.

Here's another great story with Strongheart as the star—the dog that packed every theatre a year ago—a tale with the thrill of the Northwoods, peopled with figures of hate, love, courage and cowardice—and Strongheart leaping through drama and sensation—moments that make you choke or cheer.

And back of this picture are the dramatic genius of Jane Murfin and the creative ability and dog wisdom of Laurence Trimble. A picture that not only means big box office returns, but pleased audiences—people who will talk about the wonders of Strongheart and the theatre that ran the picture.

"A NEW Constance Talmadge Revealed To Packed Houses"

THE WASHINGTON POST:

"Constance Talmadge has brought many interesting character studies to the screen, ranging from a cleverly burlesqued Cleopatra to the most deadly type of modern flapper, but never has she done anything to approach her portrayal of Ming Toy, the Americo-Chinese central figure in the elaborate picturization of "East Is West," seen yesterday for the first time in Washington as chief feature of the excellent bill for the week at the Metropolitan.

"It was a new Connie Talmadge that revealed herself to yesterday's packed houses. In this, her first vehicle offering an opportunity for genuinely sustained characterization through eight full reels of lively drama, she disclosed a versatility, a deftness in expressing pathos and at times a dramatic fire that stamp her as something more than a mere comedienne. While her impersonation of the fascinating Shipman-Hymer heroine does stress the amusing qualities in that remarkable young woman's nature, the more serious moments of the play prove her an actress of heart and soul and feeling, capable of touching the sentiments and sounding the emotions that lie deeper than laughter."

And every other Washington newspaper critic agreed on merits of production that packed the big Metropolitan Theatre.

Presented by JOSEPH M. SCHENCK; by Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer, from the play by William Harris, jr.; adapted by Frances Marion; photographed by Tony Gaudio; art direction by Stephen Goosson; directed by SIDNEY FRANKLIN, director of "Smilin' Through."

A Day With an Editor

Nine A. M.—The first mail. Let's see whether the day starts off with a smile or a grouch.

First Letter. From Jim Dandy, advertising and publicity director of the Whoozis Film Company.

"Dear Editor: I have been in the publicity game a long time, as you know. And you also probably know that never before have I complained to an editor about the space given my publicity.

"But in last week's World I didn't get a single line! The boss is yelling blue murder. And you gave the Whatzis Company fourteen big heads and all kinds of space.

"I wouldn't mind it so much only the other papers are giving me such wonderful treatment."

Ten A. M.—Telephone buzzes. Even the ring sounds ominous. More trouble. No—I guess not. The girl says it is Jack Frost, of the Whatzis Company and we have just heard how well he is being treated.

He is on the wire.

"Hello! Is this the editor? Say, listen—I've been in this publicity game a long time, as you know. And I'll bet you a sixty-day print against a negative you never heard me chirp about publicity before.

"But you just compel me to kick. In last week's World I didn't get a single line! The boss asked for my resignation this morning and only I like the old boy so much I'd get sore and quit. The worst part about it is you had the Whoozis Company plastered all over every page.

"The other papers appreciate the quality of my stuff and they run it for all it's worth. Wassamatter with the World?"

Eleven A. M.—"Mr. Peter Patter outside to see you," says the office boy. "Send him in!" Always glad to see good old Peter.

Peter comes in with a face as glum as a censor's the day after election. Finally consents to take a seat, clears his throat and edges up to the subject.

"Listen, old scout, I don't know when I ever hated to do a job as much as I hate to come in here this morning. We've known each other a long, long time and we never had any trouble before.

"Besides, you know I've been in the publicity game a long time—and you know I've never done as much kicking as a bottle of home brew.

"But last week's World just broke my heart. I didn't get a line! The boss went home sick. What got to him was all the space you had for the Whoozis and the Whatzis companies—and they have never done half as much for this business as the boss has.

"Personally, I don't care to kick. You've been such a good pal all these years it hurts double. Especially when all the other papers just hand me white space on a silver platter."

Eleven-thirty, Eleven-forty-five and Twelve—Ditto, ditto, and ditto from the Bul-Bul Company, the Bang-Bang Company, and the Bow-wow Company.

One o'clock—Lunch. The editor of the Motion Picture Blues at an adjoining table. "How's tricks?" we say. "Rotten," says he without a pause between words. "Lot of kicks this morning?" we coax. "You said it," from him. "Who were they?"

And we chorus: "Jim Dandy of the Whoozis Company, Jack Frost of the Whatzis Company, Peter Patter, the Bul-Bul Company, the Bang-Bang Company, and the Bow-wow Company."

"I wouldn't have so much trouble handling them," he adds. "Only they all tell me how you give them everything they ask for. They say your name is Santa Claus."

Back to the office—First afternoon mail. Letter from an exhibitor. Well, here's one place we won't get a kick.

"Dear Sir: Enclosed find the renewal of my subscription. I have to do this because there are lots of things in the World that I want. But I also have a kick. Why do you run so much publicity bunk? Why do you——."

The Editor has gone for the day. Tell any callers he is in conference.

Changes Name and Broadens Activities

Widely hinted at in the industry for many months, the expansion of Distinctive Productions, Inc., into a broader field of production has come about with the official announcement from 366 Madison Avenue of the change of the corporation's name to Distinctive Pictures Corporation, and the election of Arthur S. Friend to the presidency. Henry M. Hobart becomes vice-president of the enlarged institution, and Richard Whitney, Winthrop W. Aldrich, Arthur S. Friend, Henry M. Hobart and Charles S. Hervey have been elected directors.

Plans for a studio are under executive consideration, and meantime work has commenced on the company's first special production. President Friend states: "No production will be too ambitious for Distinctive to attempt. And we will only make outstanding ones."

Arthur S. Friend, president of the corporation, was one of the organizers of the Jesse L. Lasky Pictures Co. When it was merged with the Famous Players Film Company and became the present Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. Friend became treasurer. Later, with Henry M. Hobart, Mr. Friend formed Distinctive Productions, Inc., in April, 1921.

Distinctive Pictures Corporation's next picture will be "Backbone," from the Saturday Evening Post story by Clarence Budington Kelland. It will be the first of a new series of Distinctive specials, and Director Edward Sloman has been engaged to make it.

Charles S. Hervey has been elected treasurer of Distinctive Pictures Corporation. H. N. Marin is general manager. Bert Adler is traveling representative of the president. Dorothy V. Cleveland has the publicity desk.

Praise for Pictures

Wardens Say They Are of Great Aid in Prisons

That motion pictures are a great force for good is the conclusion arrived at following a survey of the penitentiaries in the United States conducted by the Statistical Department of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Prison wardens and chaplains told of the beneficial effects that pictures have upon their charges. The survey shows that motion pictures tend to make imprisoned men more patient in their surroundings, more amenable to discipline, and instills in them the urge of ambition and an eagerness to do right.

Warden Lawes, of Sing Sing Prison, said: "The cinema is the greatest blessing mankind has been given since Magna Charta. Constant picture-going creates a brain activity which leads to a knowledge of things along many lines; it creates a demand for books, and a wish for knowledge."

"The benefit derived by the men from motion pictures cannot be estimated," said Warden McKenty, of the Eastern State Penitentiary, Philadelphia.

Newsy Briefs

Arthur Leslie, the well-known motion picture publicity man, established a new world record for a man of his years by lifting six-hundred pounds at the recent Physical Culture Show, held in New York. Physical Culture Magazine for December has sixteen photographs of Mr. Leslie performing his feats and a six-page article.

Ellis Parker Butler, noted author and special ad writer for First National, has been elected president of the Authors' League.

Justice McEvoy in the New York Supreme Court has vacated an injunction restraining Lewis J. Selznick and the Select Pictures Corporation from exhibiting or distributing certain motion pictures, which had been obtained by Edward M. James.

The Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., announces that more than 150 agricultural subjects have been covered in a series of farm movies produced under the supervision of Government experts by the Office of Motion Pictures in cooperation with other agencies. These films are available to the public generally, and cover subjects ranging from silo construction, cattle dipping, and fighting forest fires to demonstrations of cottage-cheese making.

The First National Club, composed of the employees of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is planning an elaborate entertainment at Kismet Temple, Nostrand avenue and Herkimer street, Brooklyn, December 8. The production will be known as "The Follies of 48th Street."

Twenty-eight young women applicants for positions as reviewers, or censors, of film under the New York State Motion Picture Commission, took the Civil Service examination at Albany the past week.

Universal Changes Name

Universal has changed its name. That company hereafter will be known as Universal Pictures Corporation instead of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it has just been announced. The adoption of the new name was brought about by a desire to embody in the corporate name a true indication of the company's business—the making of motion pictures, rather than the ambiguous title "film manufacturing company," which more truly indicates the manufacture of raw stock.

Laemmle Orders Search For Missing Chilean Manager

David Souhami, Universal sales manager in Chile, cannot be located, and officials at 1600 Broadway fear he is a victim of the earthquake. Meager reports filtering up from Chile, through Universal's South American headquarters in Buenos Aires, indicate that the Chilean manager last was reported in Vallenar, the Chilean city now in ruins. He had gone to that place to establish a branch.

Will Urge Repeal of Censorship Law

GOVERNOR-ELECT AL. SMITH, on his return to New York on Monday of this week, briefly outlined in interviews to newspapermen the program that he will adopt when he takes office again on New Year's Day.

Among the many things the Governor said concerned a number of reforms sought by the motion picture industry for some time.

Mr. Smith, in no uncertain terms, announced that he would "start a program of economy by wiping out the Motion Picture Commission." Asked if the Administration would seek to repeal the censorship law, the popular Governor-elect said:

"The first thing to be taken up will be this obnoxious censorship measure. It is unpopular and entirely un-American. Every effort will be strained to repeal this law and there need be no fear that it will not be done."

Senator James J. Walker, counsel of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and Democratic leader of the upper branch of the Legislature, will introduce the repeal bill, it was announced in New York this week.

The bill will provide for the repeal of the censorship law and the abolition of the Commissioners.

T. O. C. C. Discusses Circuit Booking Problem

Marcus Loew Tells Meeting He Will Not Stop Expanding

WHAT had been expected to be a storm session with radical action taken turned out to be a tame star chamber affair, for the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at its meeting at Hotel Astor in New York on Tuesday afternoon, November 14, while consuming four hours in discussion, aside from touching on the syndicate booking proposition, comparing it with the booking plan of the A. B. C. and giving Marcus Loew an opportunity of informing them that he "will not stop expanding while I am alive," did nothing of material interest to the exhibitors throughout the country in general.

Prior to the meeting certain members allowed rumors that threatened to bar Marcus Loew from the organization to become circulated. However, this rumor and others heard before the meeting proved farcical, for Mr. Loew was made a hero by seemingly every member; he was allowed to discuss the booking proposition and at the close his remarks were enthusiastically applauded. After the meeting, which started shortly after 2 and adjourned at 6 o'clock, groups of members gathered about the "Napoleon of show business."

Despite the fact that Secretary Moross and President Landau had broadcasted a notice to the trade press, representatives of the latter were told that "they could not get in." This stand came as a surprise to the reporters for the reason that prior to the meeting there was not a single member of the T. O. C. C. who had intimated that charges made by its officials publicly would be thrashed out behind locked doors, in star chamber, and that the trade press would have to satisfy itself with a version of the meeting dictated by Secretary Moross.

This, however, was unnecessary, for the trade press representatives obtained a complete report of everything that was done and said behind those supposedly barred doors. Nothing that was done or said was not recorded, for while the members did not know it at the time the trade press was well represented at that meeting and there was no need for the issuance of any statement.

Prior to the meeting Secretary Moross sent out the following call:

"Our organization is a body composed of independent theatre owners, almost exclusively so. When we say almost, we say so, advisedly, because of minor exceptions which otherwise would have made it absolutely exclusive. It must be obviously clear to you that the above remark is directed against the circuits. The activities of the latter and their spreading out in almost every zone and locality in Greater New York, has grown to such abnormal proportions that it endangers the very existence of every independent theatre.

"The situation thus created by them has made conditions intolerable with respect to the buying and playing of pictures. Their co-operation and syndicated purchasing power of pictures, their colossal numerical seating capacities, their presentation of first run features with unreasonable protection against you, have created an unfair competition in the face of which no individual independent theatre owner can remain in business very long.

"This menace is still growing and it is permitted to exist and to grow still more menacing because of our apparent or actual indifference. This matter must be given very serious thought and this will be the main subject under discussion at this meeting.

"Can you afford to be absent from this meeting and miss the opportunity to give us the benefit of your thought and opinion on this matter, or if you haven't any, to listen at least, to those who have? If you do, then you deserve to be driven out of business.

"This is only one of the subjects to be taken up at this meeting. Another subject which is of almost equal importance is that of the Double Feature evil now in vogue and in practice, which has shown a tendency of a fictitious demand for pictures and at the same time, create a shortage of pictures.

"A constructive remedy for the above must be found and the Chamber needs your aid and counsel in the matter."

Marcus Loew was singled out when the discussion on the circuit booking proposition started. Meanwhile pleas had been made by several to President Landau to admit the trade press representatives, but he ruled against admitting them. Lee A. Ochs then took up the discussion of the booking problem, detailing the expansion of Marcus Loew interests. He referred to the Peekskill case and charged that the Loew circuit had intimidated the exchanges. It was further explained that the A. B. C. had been organized to protect the independent exhibitors against this syndicate booking. Loew Circuit was bitterly assailed and this was accepted by some as a cue for radical action, but nothing of the sort happened, for Marcus Loew, after discussing his case, had defended himself apparently successfully, for none of the moves reported would be taken were resorted to. Instead, after the meeting many members grouped about Mr. Loew and congratulated him.

Mr. Loew, in replying to Mr. Ochs, said that so long as he was alive he intended to expand his interests. He said he will continue building and operating theatres so long as he finds that a profitable venture. He said, too, that he was perfectly agreeable to any equitable arrangement that would not injure his interests. He emphasized that he would personally take care of any grievance any independent theatre man had against any of his organization.

Later, after the meeting Mr. Loew, in a statement made to the trade press in the presence of some members of the T. O. C. C., said "any man, big or little, who doesn't protect himself is a darn fool."

Senator James J. Walker followed Marcus Loew in the discussion. He pointed out the fallacy of attacking any one individual. He said the evil in the situation was confined to no one individual, but instead to corporations in general. He charged that the exhibitor organization had become disintegrated because of action taken at the convention in Washington.

He referred to Will Hays, saying that his usefulness had been hampered because of the differences between his organization and the national exhibitor body and as the result of the Washington meet.

Senator Walker's remarks closed the session or oratory without any action being taken on the booking situation nor any means suggested or ascertained to relieve the situation.

Embodied in Secretary Moross' version of the meeting which was communicated to the trade press on Wednesday, the day after the meeting, was the following paragraph:

"There was no direct mention made that the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce is about to launch a boycott against the Metro Pictures Corp., but there was an inference or an implication, that to support the producer and distributor who is also an exhibitor, is simply helping one who is destroying the welfare of an independent exhibitor."

Harold Lloyd, a Real Showman, Discusses Comical Comedy

HERE'S an American dollar to a million Russian rubles that no star of the film world can talk more intelligently about comedy making than Harold Lloyd, Associated Exhibitors' great comedian, now on a visit to New York. Charlie Chaplin and perhaps another have this young man's knowledge of technique and possibly can claim more experience, but they can't be more intensely interested in the work, or be giving it more deep, conscientious study, or be forging ahead faster.

These thoughts predominated after an hour's conversation this week with Lloyd, a meeting, by the way, arranged by energetic "Joe" Reddy, formerly of Gotham, but now a convert of the California chambers of commerce.

Every interview, of course, is likely to be hailed as "different," but this one was. In the first place, in the words of our own Roger Ferri, Lloyd is "a regular fellow," who doesn't erect a barrier of formality; secondly, he is one of the most eager persons we have ever met. He is absolutely dominated by an absorbing eagerness to learn things and put them into practice. To Lloyd, the making of clean, entertaining comedies is the greatest thing in life; it's the one outstanding ideal that dictates all he does; and so Lloyd is a man of whom the industry may well be proud, for he is a true artist in that he is always striving for perfection.

What is Lloyd's first thought in planning a picture? Laughs, of course; he's a comedian. And aren't there other comedies with just as bright, mirth-provoking complications? Right. Then where is the difference between Lloyd and most of the others? It is this—Lloyd develops a definite characterization as well as comical situations, and plays on a theme and creates an atmosphere, so that an audience gets a single, unified effect from his pictures. As he said this week, he avoids inconsistencies—in being funny the character must do things that are acutely typical of his nature. That is a common rule in the field of fiction, but it's often ignored in motion picture comedies that attempt to be coherent.

Lloyd's latest pictures have each had a kind of unity. The characterization of "Grandma's Boy" is an achievement that adds immeasurably to the picture without detracting from its comic aspect. When the last reel has been run off, the audience does not remember merely a "gag" here and there that was especially funny, but while laughing at the humor still retains a clear idea of and a strong sympathy for the character. Therefore, "Grandma's Boy" will live as a human picture although its primary purpose was to make you laugh.

Lloyd likes to talk about his work and he welcomes criticism. But he has no patience with a few people who pretend to see in his work a reflection of Charlie Chaplin's personality. Both comedians are individualistic, unique. We talked about Chaplin comedy and his, and Lloyd proved his point by telling how he thought Chaplin would have made "Grandma's Boy." "Charlie and I," he said, "could take the same theme and same settings, and when we got our pictures made you wouldn't dream that we had begun with the same idea."

Just one more thought: In everything that Lloyd said it was apparent that, in making a comedy, he does not think, first of all, of what he himself must do to be entertaining, but what he must do to make the picture entertaining. There's a big distinction, if you figure it out—the picture, not himself, is at all times uppermost in his mind. And so his pictures are steadily gaining in unity.

Lloyd ends his second trip east on November 19, when "Joe" Reddy and he return to the land where sunshine and boosters' clubs hold sway. He has been having a great time seeing as many as possible of the New York shows, but remains faithful to California.—SUMNER SMITH.

"Brothers Under the Skin" Year's Best Stunt

THE year's prize in a publicity way goes to Goldwyn. Howard Dietz, Eddie Bonns, and William R. Ferguson pulled the strings. "Brothers Under the Skin" is the picture concerned.

Last Saturday morning New York newspaper readers picked up their favorite breakfast visitor to be greated with big headings—two columns in the hard-boiled World, almost a column in the staid and conservative Times, and so on—telling about the formation by three harried married men of the National Brothers Under the Skin Society.

Never a mention of a press agent in any of the stories, nor the slightest taint of suspicion. And the Associated Press carried the same thing out over the country.. Editorial on the "Brothers Under the Skin" movement followed.. Comment spread. .Then on Sunday the theatrical ad pages told a laughing world that "Brothers Under the Skin" was at the Capitol.

A great stunt—in its conception and its results. And a great stunt in is execution. Not a line was sent out from Goldwyn. The society was incorporated in legal form, papers filed, the court reporters picked it up, interviewed the incorporators, and did all the work.

Hats off to Messrs. Dietz, Bonns and Ferguson.—THE EDITOR.

Pictures Are Said to Cast Slurs on Mexicans

The Post Office Department, Washington, D. C., has been advised by the Mexican government that by a decree of the president of Mexico no films produced or distributed by the Paramount Pictures Company, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Metro Pictures Corporation or the Educational Film Exchange, Inc., may be imported into Mexico.

The order barring the films of these organizations was issued as a result of the release of films in which discredit is cast upon Mexico, it is stated in the communication from the Mexican government.

Postmasters throughout the country have been instructed by the department not to accept parcels destined for Mexico which contain films produced or released by the four companies banned by the by the four companies banned.

John C. Flinn, of Famous Players, left on Monday, Nov. 13, for Mexico, to investigate the situation.

Vaudeville Gains Popularity in Chicago Picture Theatres

Vaudeville is being gradually introduced into the picture houses in Chicago. The Chateau Theatre at Broadway and Grace has been running five acts for some time past, the Balaban and Katz houses have all been using presentations and musical numbers to put their shows over, the new McVickers is doing the same, now come some of the smaller houses to use vaudeville on Sundays and holidays to help fill the seats. The latest addition is the Bryn Mawr Theatre, which will use five acts of standard vaudeville beginning next week, and the Covent Garden on North Clark street, using four acts each Sunday.

Lou Weil, manager of the Bryn Mawr Theatre, announces that beginning next Sunday the policy of the house will be changed on holidays and Sundays and in addition to the photoplays five acts of high class vaudeville furnished by the Western Vaudeville Managers Association will headline the bill. The symphony orchestra under the direction of Samuel Leviton will also be enlarged.

The Adelphi Theatre at 7074 North Clark street has been sold by the Ascher Enterprises to the management in control of the Howard Theatre. Some changes will be made in the policy of the house.

Aaron Jones, of Jones Linick & Schaeffer, says that the new McVickers showed to 120,000 people during the first two weeks the house was open. The firm was pleased with the generous response of the public.

Dr. Sam Atkinson, one of the best known managers in the city and foe of the censorship bureaus, is now manager of the Calo Theatre at Clark and Balmoral avenue. Dr. "Sam" was one of the organizers of the Rogers Park business mens' association and in honor of his work the members made him a life member of the association.

E. D. Hopson has been made manager of the Commercial Theatre of the Ascher chain of theatres. He was formerly at the Calo Theatre.

George K. Spoor, of the Essanay Film company, is now one of the big real estate builders of the city. His latest project is the beginning of a $5,000,000 improvement program at Ainslee and Argyle streets, which will consist of five fourteen-story apartment buildings when the job is finished. Work on the first unit will begin this month and before long the north shore will begin to look like Riverside Drive along the Hudson.

The Onatoga Theatre has been opened at Upper Alton, Ill., under the management of M. Holland.

Max Jesselsen, owner of the Olympia Theatre on South Ashland avenue, has bought a three-story building on Harrison street for $32,500, subject to a mortgage of $5,500.

The run of "The Kentucky Derby" at the Randolph Theatre will end this week. Three weeks of good business was registered by this film at this big loop house.

Jack Mason, well known as a producer of several Broadway hits, is the new manager of the McVickers, succeeding S. Barrett McCormick.

The new LeClaire Theatre at Moline will soon be ready for its opening. The house and its furnishings will represent at least a quarter of a million dollars and will be operated by the management as the new fourteen-story hotel of the same name. Moline people are heavy stockholders in the company.

Abe Gumbiner, F. Trilling and Alfred Beck have formed the Supreme Amusement Company, with a capital of $10,000 to deal in theatrical enterprises and motion pictures, with the main offices at 10 South LaSalle street.

The Valley Amusement Company of Moline, Ill., has changed its name to the DesMoines Orpheum Company.

Preliminary plans are being made by architects for a $1,000,000 theatre and office building to be located on the block bounded by Chicago, Monticello, Lawndale and Huron streets. The theatre will seat 2,500, with 263 feet of frontage on Chicago avenue and a depth of 130 feet. Samuel Miller and H. Kaplan are the owners of the property.

"Oliver Twist" is being carried over into the second week by the Barbee Loop Theatre. Manager Barbee says business is fine.

The Panorama Theatre, at 715 Sheridan Road, has been sold again to Harris S. Krensky for $65,000 cash and a purchase money mortgage. The house seats 800 and will be remodeled and has been leased to the M. and P. Amusement company for five years at a term rental of $40,000. The house will be a part of the M. and P. chain of picture theatres.

Progress is being made on the plans for the new picture theatre projected for corner of Madison street and Austin boulevard.

Topeka Compared to Syracuse

THE call of Syracuse, N. Y., exhibitors for suggestions from brother exhibitors for the improvement of business in that northern New York city has been heeded by E. D. Keilmann, manager of the Grand Theatre, Topeka, Kans., and "Ki," as he is popularly known, surely dashes off an interesting and "meaty" letter.

"Far be it from me to butt into other people's troubles," he writes, "but if what I have gleaned in the few months I have been connected with the show business be of benefit to anyone, or if my observations as a newspaper man covering several years be of light in the dark, well, here's the light.

"Topeka is a town of 52,000, the seating capacity of the houses showing first runs is 2,800 and at no time has any of them been taxed to the extent that extended runs have really paid good money. A week is about all that any good picture will stand up. On the same ratio, Syracuse, N. Y., with 10,000 seats and 175,000 population, would be just about as well looked after as need be, if Topeka business and Syracuse business are anywhere nearly the same.

"There is exploitation and exploitation. There are kinds that really do cheapen a house and kinds that advertise the house as a live one. It all depends on the conditions in the town and the patrons' viewpoints, as well as the way the campaigns are carried on."

Mr. Keilmann goes on to describe a float showing an igloo and a real Eskimo that he used for "Nanook of the North." It was a timely stunt because it came in the middle of August, and it was neatly and not flashily done, so it brought the business, packing his house for a week. On the other hand, an exploitation man put on a melodramatic street stunt for another picture that was overdone and ill-advised because of a local scandal, and so the theatre lost "several hundred good dollars" it might have had.

"Summer is no exception when it comes to the public liking amusement. If you supply the right kind, the public will be in your theatres. If you look after the public's comfort in the way of iced drinking water, cooling systems, etc., you will find the public in your theatre; but if not, Mr. and Mrs. Public will be out in their cars seeking coolness and relaxation elsewhere.

"That they do not find the kind that satisfies is easily apparent when one sees them coming back even to the hot theatres late in the evening. I made business this last summer not alone by the cool theatre, but by advising my patrons, 'After the cool evening drive, stop at the Grand for the second evening performance.'

"I have never tried girls as ushers, but I am about to. Seems as if I cannot get any sort of discipline with boys of high school age. Whether 'flappers' are better than 'cake eaters' remains to be seen. If they are not, I am going to try negro boys and then negro girls.

"Hope there are some few gems of wisdom in this letter and that it will in a small part help the Syracuse men."

Howard Left Show to Pitch Movie Tent in Wilmington

EXACTLY three years before John Karzin stopped slinging hash long enough to go out and start an argument with Harry Miller which resulted in their partnership in the first permanent picture theatre in St. Louis, Mo., another pioneer in this budding field of "pictures that move" gave St. Louis possibly its first view of motion pictures. Karzin started in 1905, according to the best authenticated historical data; this other Daddy of the Cinema presented a full-fledged motion picture show in Lynch Park, St. Louis, in the fall of 1902, appearing as one of the sideshows with the Gaskell-Mondy Shows, a tented carnival attraction—and at this time this pioneer had been in the picture game already two years!

Gentlemen, we nominate James Howard, secretary-treasurer of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company and president of the Bijou Amusement Company, which two corporations control the destinies of all the theatres in the hustling North Carolina metropolis of Wilmington, for a position, at least, among the Daddies - of - Them - All! And as a side remark it might be interpolated right here in the beginning that he's still young in the game and expects to remain active until his two-year-old son is old enough to take his place!

To get this story in chronological order we must start in at the beginning, which was in the early fall of 1900 when Mr. Howard took out a print of "Sappho," a Pathe Freres production, as a side attraction with the Mondy Carnival Company, opening in West Superior, Wisconsin. M. J. Morley, known to every old-line showman, was promoter of this travelling organization. After a country-wide tour, which brought him to St. Louis and on down South by the year 1902, he joined, at the beginning of the 1904 "road season," the Hatch-Adams shows, opening in Little Washington, Indiana, and closing in Tarboro, North Carolina, Howard later taking his show to the Raleigh state fair and then on a tour through Florida.

At this time the reigning sensations of the film world were "The Bold Bank Robbery," an Edison production, and "The Great Train Robbery," and Howard usually ran the show in connection with either an illusion act or a serpentine dancing act, the films being rather short in those days and not available to make up a complete show alone.

The season of 1905 Mr. Howard joined up with the Jones-Adams Carnival Company. This season film became more plentiful and he added to his repertoire Edison's "Personal." Pop Lubin's "Mrs. Murph and Baby" and Colonel Selig's "Traced By Bloodhounds." By way of parenthesis it might be inserted that he and "Bill" Selig had been cronies in Chicago ten years before this time, when the latter was employed by the Western Railroad to make photographic views of their railroad scenic route to the West Coast, from which Selig gradually drifted into the "movies." They both ran "photograph galleries" away back in the nineties in Chicago.

In 1906, still with the Hatch shows, "The Life of an American Cowboy" and pictures of the San Francisco Earthquake" were added to the show, and all down the line the natives fell over themselves getting in and the moving pictures were the best graft on the whole lot.

Howard stuck to his little projection machine and bag of worn-out film until the company reached Wilmington in the early fall of 1906. The town looked ripe to him and he had accumulated a whole vault full of film—at least twelve reels! So he dropped off the show train in Wilmington, pitched his tent right on the main street, built an imposing front that looked like a million dollars to hide the tent, covered the floor with sawdust and installed 200 folding camp stools therein, dubbed it the "Bijou" and commenced to gather in the nickels that later bought control of all the theatres in that thricing seaport city of today. Percy W. Wells, who had been with the Hatch shows several seasons, stopped off with him and they pooled their capital, started as partners and have been fifty-fifty ever since that day.

This new Wilmington enterprise started by putting on one reel for a complete show, running this show three days and changing program. Thus the twelve reels of pictures they owned furnished their program for six weeks—and capacity business every day! Booking arrangements were then made with Miles Brothers, New York, to furnish them two reels a week. The old tent survived for several years and made a lot of money, but one winter night a heavy snowfall crushed it to the ground, and upon its ruins, in less than six weeks, arose the Bijou Theatre of today, a Wilmington institution which mothers, fathers and children swear by to this day.

It has never gotten away from the "goose that laid the golden egg"—the short reel program, having through all the later years of big features stuck to the serial, western and slapstick comedy type of program, and it has never gotten above 10 cents admission—on top of which it has always, and does today, make more cash profit each and every year than any other theatre in Wilmington—even the largest house charging as high as a half dollar and playing the super-special productions. It was one of the last theatres in the country to forsake the old "nickelodeon" price, the admission price finally being raised to 10 cents.

Finally the Royal was built, a commodious feature house. Five years ago the Grand and Victoria, the only two, out of possibly twenty-five opposition theatres that the Bijou outlived, to survive, were purchased. These four theatres, which they now operate, control the field in Wilmington.

THE ORIGINAL BIJOU THEATRE, WILMINGTON, N. C.
The front is wood, but only a tent stood behind, with folding camp stools and long benches promiscuously set in a floor of sawdust. James Howard, the pioneer, is standing with hands on the dog. Second from him, on his left, is Percy W. Wells. In the center, the tall man leaning on the box office is Harry T. Coolen, operator at that time and now. Note the crease in the photograph—even that's old.

Sentiment vs. Publicity

This may read at first like publicity, but it isn't. If you need proof, ask the people of Niles, Ohio, if it was the need for publicity that brought Warner Brothers' big advertising float to the town. And if you are still in doubt, ask Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Warner, who manage the Warner Theatre there.

Here's the story, briefly. In 1921 Harry M. Warner built the Warner Theatre in Niles for his parents. It wasn't a commercial venture on his part, but a tangible expression of his affection for his parents and the "old home town," a recognition of what he owes to them and to Niles. So it wasn't publicity at all when the float showed up the other week in that small town, but sentiment pure and simple. And recognizing that, all the city officials and the police turned out as escorts, and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Warner had a great time playing host and hostess at the theatre. Here's congratulating them on having a son like Harry M. Warner.—S. S.

First Atlanta Film Theatre Opened by Murray in 1912

Among the men who are entitled to honors as the "Oldest Exhibitor," the name of Manager W. T. Murray, of the Alamo No. 2 Theatre, Atlanta, must be mentioned. Mr. Murray has been in the exhibiting game for more than ten years, actively engaged, all that time, as an exhibitor.

His first house was the Alamo No. 1, and this was in 1912. At that time, Atlanta had a brace of "shot-gun" movies, but of them all the Alamo No. 1 was the most popular. It was the first theatre to be built in Atlanta, with a screen that had its back against the box-office, so that, as one entered the theatre, one looked towards the projectionist, instead of at the screen, and, at the time, it was a startling innovation and created a great deal of comment—both pro and con.

With the building of the Criterion Theatre, of which he was third owner, he sold out his interest in the Alamo No. 2, and concentrated on the Criterion—which was a failure from its opening day, for several months—in fact, until just before the entrance of America into the World War brought revised conditions to Atlanta.

Mr. Murray has been associated with Adolph Samuels, well-known Atlanta capitalist, whose movie interests are quite heavy, practically continuously since the days of the Alamo No. 1, and when the late George Schmidt left the Alamo No. 2 to assume the managerial desk at the Strand, Mr. Murray came back to the Alamo No. 2.

A man who can pack a house seating between 700 and 900 people at an hour of the afternoon when nine houses out of ten are "playing to the seats," with a picture two years old, and a fifth or sixth-run, deserves credit. Manager Murray is such a man, the Alamo No. 2 is such a theatre, and the picture was Mary Pickford's "Suds."

Come on, you oldtime exhibitors, let's have your histories; we're out to find "The Daddy of Them All."

Buffalo's Strand to Stage Striking Gala Revival Week

Commencing Sunday, November 19, the Strand, Buffalo, will stage a Gala Revival week, changing its bill each day and offering the following pictures, "Through the Back Door," "The Mollycoddle," "Dream Street," "Humoresque," "The Sheik," "The Miracle Man," and "Something to Think About." Manager A. Pfeil figures that there are many thousand Buffalonians who want to see these masterpieces who did not see them when released. He is making arrangements for overflow audiences.

Jim Cardino, manager of the Kensington Theatre, Buffalo, is preparing plans for a new theatre at Georgetown and Bailey avenues in the Queen City of the Lakes. The house will be ready next spring. It will show pictures.

Former Senator Cole, former Geneva, N. Y., resident and Hobart college's oldest living alumnus, who recently celebrated his 100th birthday, has entered the motion pictures. Senator Cole will help one of the leading film companies at Hollywood, Cal., produce a motion picture of the life and times of Abraham Lincoln. Senator Cole is said to have known Lincoln better than any other man, not excepting Robert T. Lincoln, who was only a youth of 20 when the president was assassinated.

T. Cecil Leonard, manager of Buffalo's New Olympic, pulled a good stunt when he presented a film, "Devastated France," showing the tour of the Good Will delegates through France last summer. Mrs. Sarah J. Ehrmann, Buffalo's delegate, was invited to occupy a box as guest of the management. The French consul and his wife were also invited. The papers gave the film much publicity.

With everything new but the name, the Cataract Theatre reopened in Niagara Falls, N. Y., November 13 with a vaudeville and picture policy, under the management of Ralph W. Thayer, who also manages the Strand, adjoining the Cataract. Ernest W. Whistler is the conductor of the orchestra. Both theatres are owned and will be operated under the Cataract Theatre Corporation, of which A. C. Hayman is president and general manager.

The Comerford Amusement Company of Scranton, Pa., through J. R. Caderet, has practically completed arrangements for the construction of a new picture theatre on the National bank plot in Liberty street, Bath, N. Y., to seat 1,400. Work will begin in a few weeks.

Arthur L. Skinner sure did put over "The Old Homestead," at the Victoria, Buffalo. In addition to a big barnyard display with a specially painted rural landscape background and toys from the William Hengerer company, he put in a stage setting filled with rural touches and beautifully lighted. Then he engaged the Criterion Quartet, who sang in country costumes. He arranged a number of special window displays in the neighborhood.

E. O. Weinberg, former manager of the Buffalo Strand, is now in Schenectady arranging for the opening of the new State Theatre the week of November 26. He has just returned from a two weeks' vacation at Atlantic City.

Al Beckerich, manager of the Buffalo Loew State, has tied up with the Buffalo Express in staging a local Follies show the week of December 4. The Express is using much publicity on the stunt. Local girls are asked to appear.

Bill Van Dyne, assistant manager of the Lafayette Square, Buffalo, is planning to take a course in organ playing. After looking over the pay roll he notes that C. Sharpe-Minor is getting much more than he and only works a couple of hours a day.

Buffalo exhibitors are well pleased with the election of Al Smith as governor, forseeing an end of censorship and less interference with their business. Many local film men worked hard to bring about the election of the former governor.

Fred M. Shafer, managing director of the Lafayette Square, Buffalo, has booked "Skin Deep," and is planning a big exploitation campaign, including an airplane flight over the city and special performance for the local American Legion posts.

Business has picked up wonderfully in Buffalo picture houses. If exhibitors put on the goods, they get the crowds. The downtown theatres are enjoying capacity business every night. This is especially true of Shea's Hippodrome, Lafayette Square and Loew's State. The neighborhood houses are drawing much auto business. Cars are parked for blocks around most of the larger theatres, such as the Elmwood, Regent, Shea's North Park, Capitol, Rivoli and Emblem.

Elmer C. Winegar, new manager of the Elmwood, is planning a number of innovations at that house. Patrons are due for some real surprises in film entertainment, according to Elmer. Mr. Winegar made an enviable reputation for himself in putting over novelties at the Central Park and Premier.

THE WARNER THEATRE, NILES, OHIO

Erected by Harry M. Warner some time ago for his parents, and now boasting the presence of Warner Bros.' float.

Albany Exhibitors Provide Fine Armistice Day Program

All the exhibitors in this section took advantage of Armistice Day and provided special programs which brought additional business. Many of the houses carried appropriate musical programs for the day and the majority were decorated with American flags and bunting. C. C. St. Clair, director of Community Hall in Mineville, paid a visit to Albany the first of the week and picked up film appropriate for Armistice Day.

Elmer Crowinshield, who has leased the Hudson Theatre in Watervliet, is encountering a little difficulty these days after ascertaining that "Doc" Hall, of Troy, has a lien on some of the fixtures in the theatre. It is expected that matters will be adjusted within a week or so in a way satisfactory to all concerned.

Walter Powers, formerly managing the Colonial here, and now owning the Pearl, reports business as excellent.

The Pine Hills Theatre, which has just changed hands, announces a policy of double features from now on. The house is located about two miles from the business centre of the city.

Patrons of the Mark Strand are protesting these days against the wholesale cutting of many of the news weeklies. In some instances, these weeklies have been "boiled down" to a fraction of their original length. Fred Elliott, owner of the Clinton Square Theatre, believes that news weeklies occupy an important part of his program, runs them full and claims to be drawing trade because of that fact.

The Strand in Carthage, formerly the Colligan, just acquired by the Schine Theatrical Enterprises, opened Friday with "Under Two Flags." For Armistice Day the house was liberally decorated in American colors. Interior decorators and electricians have been at work for several days, redecorating the house.

An addition is to be built to the Olympic Theatre in Watertown at once.

Thomas J. Joy has been named manager of the Strand Theatre in Carthage and also of the Hippodrome in the same place. Both houses have been taken over by J. M. Schine of Gloversville, the Hippodrome only the past week.

A radio has just been installed in the Avon Theatre at Watertown. It will be used in connection with the showing of a special feature, "The Radio King," in the near future. It was given its try-out on election night.

Stock will no longer prevail at the Palace in Watertown, according to an announcement just made by Dr. J. Victor Wilson, resident manager for the Robbins Amusement company, owning the Palace, Olympic and Antique theatres in Watertown. From now on, straight motion pictures will prevail.

George Roberts, managing the Colonial and Hudson in this city, is spending a few days in New York.

William Berinstein, who left Albany a month or so ago, for New York, dropped in town this week, making the rounds of his theatres here and in Elmira.

There may be an effort to secure Sunday picture shows in Albany in the near future. Harry Lazarus, who disposed of the Pine Hills Theatre, was never in favor of the exhibitors seeking Sunday shows in the Capital City. Lazarus will no longer have a say in the affairs of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association. At the present time, Albany is perhaps best expressed through an assertion made this week by one of the exhibitors that "the Hudson river was the only thing which runs on Sunday in Albany."

At the present time, there are eighteen theatres in Troy and seventeen in Schenectady and a like number in Albany. Of the three towns, Albany has 113,000 population, Schenectady 88,000 and Troy 72,0000.

Detroit's Biggest Crowds Turning Out for Pictures

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" opened at John Kunsky's Adams Theatre, Detroit, on November 5, to the biggest crowds ever known in Detroit's film history. The line started to form at noon and maintained an unbroken length of two blocks until after 10 o'clock that night. Six extra police were assigned to keep the sidewalks clear.

"Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" opened to huge and enthusiastic crowds at the Orpheum Theatre, Detroit, on November 6. The production proved very popular. Two shows daily are being given, with all seats reserved. Prices for evenings and Saturday and Sunday matinees are 50 cents to $2.

"Grandma's Boy" closed at the end of its third week at the Fox-Washington owing to other bookings. It is expected to bring the picture back into Detroit at a later date, as the public is clamoring for it, and a run equal to that one in Los Angeles can be duplicated here.

Schreiber Brothers, who operate the Blackstone Theatre on Michigan avenue, Detroit, have booked "Some Wild Oats" for an indefinite run.

The Michigan Screen Club, a strictly social organization, whose membership is restricted to those having a connection with the industry, was organized in Detroit the week of November 5. Club rooms have been established at 47 East Elizabeth street, and the officers are as follows: President, J. O. Brooks; Vice-president, Jacob Smith; Secretary, W. E. Wilkinson; Treasurer, W. D. Hurlbut.

Harry Irons, who has been manager for the last three years of Butterfield's Franklin Theatre at Saginaw, has tendered his resignation, to become effective December 1. He will then locate in Detroit as manager of a new theatre now being erected on Joseph Campau avenue.

Phil Gleichman, manager of the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, has booked "The Sin Flood" for a showing starting November 12.

The Capitol Theatre, Kunsky's newest and most modern theatre in Michigan, is now equipped with Power Projectors. Three new machines were installed there some time ago by the Service Theatre Supply Company of Detroit, who are exclusive Power dealers in Michigan.

The Seattle Strand engagement opens November 11. It will play the Rialto in Tacoma and the Weir, Aberdeen, the 25th.

G. T. Woodlaw, president of the Circle Theatre, Portland, and Mrs. Woodlaw, with Fred Normand, vice president, are spending three or four days in Seattle lining up bookings until the first of the year. The Circle was the first house in the Northwest, it is said, to inaugurate the "open all night" policy.

Seen on Film Row this week, were the following exhibitors: F. F. Wesp, of the Rialto, Wenatchee, who was looking for "My Wild Irish Rose" and found it; R. L. Ruggles, Jr. The Ruggleses own two houses in Chehalis and one in Pee Ell, Wash.; William Ripley of the Bijou, Aberdeen; Henry Newman, Hoquiam Arcade; Fred Mercy, who owns three houses in Yakima, and the regulars, who wear a well beaten path every week.

Captain Lathrop, Alaska pioneer picture man, is down for a month's visit.

Cleveland Government Bans Dancing at Picture Houses

Dancing and picture performances won't mix in Cleveland. The new Lexington Theatre, on East Fifty-fifth street, announced in all its ads before opening that after the screen show each evening, the audience would be permitted to dance on the stage. However, someone neglected to get a license to have dancing, and when at the last minute application was made, the authorities refused to issue one. The city contends that a picture show is a picture show and a dance hall is a dance hall, and there will be no such "combination" places in Cleveland. However, no objection has ever been made by the city to the restaurants which have orchestras and dancing.

Book Week will be celebrated in Cleveland the week of November 12, with the Cinema Club and theatre owners co-operating. An effort is being made by the club to have theatres show pictures based upon books from a list chosen by the Book Week committee. There is a big drawback because this list has but a few books, from which pictures were adapted, and most of these are old releases.

The Heights, Monarch, Circle, Alhambra and Liberty Theatres have already announced their intention of co-operating.

One of the pleasant surprises of November, in Cleveland, was the way "The Old Homestead" went over at the Stillman Theatre. The Stillman put on an extra big publicity campaign, including a hook-up with the high school cadets for a special performance, and a hook-up with the Electrical League, on its modern electrical homestead. The picture did a big business and played two weeks.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" has been booked by the Stillman for an extended engagement, beginning November 26. A big publicity and advertising campaign was started November 1 and efforts are being made to establish a record.

An original state novelty was presented in the Allen Theatre, Hallowe'en Week, during the run of Rupert Hughes' "Remembrance." It was a costume revue staged by Francis A. Mangan, in which about twenty-five fancy dress and Hallowe'en ball costumes were exhibited by girl models. A runway was placed in the theatre and there were four beautiful tableaux. Newspapers paid a great deal of attention to it and the store which co-operated reported many sales.

Jensen-Von Herberg Lighten Portland, Ore., Restrictions

Slight concessions are said to have been made by the Jensen & Von Herberg interests, of Portland, Ore., who recently placed a restriction of from ninety days to six months upon feature bookings. The restriction is now reported reduced to sixty days, with three houses excepted. These houses are claimed to have offered unfair competition by advertising in their monthly programs feature numbers not yet shown, or still running, at one of the four J. & V. theatres. It is alleged they ran slides to this effect: "Why pay down-town prices when this attraction will soon show at your family theatre at regular prices?"

The second run exhibitors, of which there are forty-nine in Portland, urge the counter claim that there were but three of these offenders, and had the matter been properly taken up with the exchange releasing these pictures, the trouble could have been remedied without the placing of unfair restriction upon all.

The three boycotted exhibitors feel they have grounds for claiming unfair discrimination if the restriction is reduced to others. They also hold that the exchanges meeting the demands of Jensen & Von Herberg will ultimately lose money, as the number of changes J. & V. can give on a weekly basis amounts to but 208 changes a year in four houses, as against 312 changes a year by one house with a six-change policy. A number of the exchanges have not taken part in the controversy and are furnishing the same service as heretofore.

So far the trouble has not been made public, except that the four J. & V. theatres are said to show slides promising that the picture won't show here again this year.

Considerable interest is being displayed here regarding Children's Book Week, which will be observed November 12 to 18. The event is being anticipated by exchangemen and exhibitors who will be guided partly by the recommendations and wishes of patrons who have been invited through a newspaper announcement to indicate their choice.

"Sherlock Holmes" is booked for the leading key towns in the territory for November screenings. It opened in Portland at the Majestic, October 28, to business that looks like a holdover.

A First National Release

COAL STRIKES DO NOT WORRY NORMA

She has "The Eternal Flame." The Strand Theatre, Milwaukee, made this cutout banner over the lobby doors. The flames which vignette the bust are of lighted chiffon worked by a fan.

Los Angeles

Manager Harry Davies, of the Mission Theatre, has signed up for the Harold Lloyd features with Pathe. He outbid all other first run theatres in booking Lloyd's latest, "Doctor Jack." The Lloyd features have heretofore been shown at the Symphony.

Manager Bostick, of Loew's State Theatre, is smiling broadly these days. The smile has been firmly fixed ever since the theatre discontinued vaudeville and concentrated entirely on "The Picture Program." Incidentally, the theatre receipts have shown a jump since the continuous vaudeville was discontinued.

Manager Fred Miller, of the California Theatre, stated that from the manner in which the critics panned Lady Diana Manner's picture, "The Great Adventure," he did not expect to do any big business, but the attendance kept increasing daily and toward the end of the week it was going like a house afire.

T. L. Tally booked "The Eternal Flame" into his Broadway theatre after it had a two weeks' run at the Kinema and did a remarkably big business.

A "Youngster" in the Northwest

Looking for the "Daddy of Them All," the "youngster" of the Northwest was located. At that he can boast of ten years of active contact with pictures. He is Mack DeLong, owner of the Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Mr. DeLong is not yet twenty-one, but he owns one of the prettiest little houses in the territory. He has been everything from janitor, doorman, operator on up since he was a kid in knee breeches, and has a brilliant future ahead of him.

It's always open house for the film salesman who calls on "Mack," although his is 100 per cent. Universal, as he figures his town is just right for that particular product. Following this policy has contributed largely to his success, he says.

You Might Call Louisville the Paradise of Exhibitors

Although there have been a couple of theatres added in the downtown district inside of the last couple of years, the city could undoubtedly support another big picture house, as during good weather all of the leading picture houses are constantly jammed, and it means long waits for seats on Saturdays and Sundays, as well as the last two night shows. Right now the local houses showing good pictures at 30 cents for adults, including war tax, are packing them in. The Alamo Theatre put its prices up to 40 cents for a short time but dropped back to 30 cents.

There has been discussion concerning the possibilities of remodeling a fine new building on Fifth street, erected for a big general market house and of fireproof construction, which made a dismal failure as a market house and was closed. This building could be converted into a picture theatre at relatively low cost. It is within a radius of three blocks of seven theatres, and only a block and a half from Fourth and Walnut, the busiest corner in the city.

City officials of Louisville started a movement the past week to condemn ten feet or so of property on the east side of Fourth street, from Chestnut to Broadway, for widening the street. This would affect the Kentucky Theatre, recently completed, but it is not believed that there is much danger of any condemnation plan being adopted, as the city hasn't the necessary money to undertake any such movement.

Work is progressing on the new Baxter Theatre, in the Highlands, which will cost about $50,000 and which will seat 1,000.

Both the Alamo and Walnut Theatres, of Louisville, have been issuing $5 and $10 ticket books, or coupon books, the tickets from which are transferrable at the box office for tickets. The idea of issuing the books was in connection with a voting contest, to establish popular brands in Louisville, in which a $5 book covers 10,000 votes and a $10 book 20,000 votes, while a 25 cent matinee ticket is good for 250 votes and an evening ticket, 300 votes. Fred Dolle stated that he believed it was the first time a picture house here had issued a coupon book, and that the idea has possibilities for holiday gift use, and could perhaps be worked out to advantage on a discount inducement plan under normal conditions.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kentucky haven't held a meeting since the State meeting last April, when there were some legislative conditions up for discussion. Indications are that the usual spring meeting will be held next year, but as it will not be a legislative year there will be no rush work, as any work undertaken will be for 1924 when the legislature again meets. The Louisville Photoplay Association, composed of the exhibitors, meets regularly for discussion of general conditions as they arise.

The buildings on Walnut street occupied by the Walnut Theatre, the Apollo Apartments and four shops, have been purchased by local theatrical interests. All of the stock in the buildings was purchased by Joseph L. Steuerle, Fred J. Dolle, Louis F. Steurle and Adolph Reutlinger.

The purchasers announced that they will continue to operate the Walnut Theatre as previously, handling the building as well as the show house. The other buildings will be rented as at present. Extensive improvements in the theatre building are to be made next spring, it was said.

The amount involved in the deal was understood to be in the neighborhood of $100,000.

Kansas City

The Wichita, Palace, Miller and Princess theatres of Wichita, Kas., were merged last week with the formation of the Consolidated Amusement Co., which will operate all four theatres. Officers of the company are: L. M. Miller, president; M. B. Shanberg, vice-president, and Stanley N. Chambers, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Chambers also is managing director of the four theatres. Beginning the last of November, the Princess Theatre will house a stock company.

Phil Ryan, vice-president of the Capitol Enterprise Corporation, is reported to be improving from his recent illness. Mr. Ryan has been confined to his home for about three weeks with pneumonia, and for a while he was seriously ill, but the crisis was soon passed and we are glad to hear that Mr. Ryan is on the road to recovery. Capitol Enterprises control several theatres in Kansas City.

John Donovan Still Managing Pittsburgh's Regent Theatre

Rowland and Clark's Regent Theatre in East Liberty, Pittsburgh, celebrated its eighth anniversary during the week of November 6, with Thomas Meighan, Pittsburgh's own star, in "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow." John P. Donovan has been manager of the Regent since its opening.

J. P. McGovern is no longer manager of the Victoria Theatre, Altoona, Pa. The George Brothers, Jimmie and Athens, are managing and buying the pictures themselves. McGovern is back with the Supreme Productions of Pittsburgh, in the distribution end of the business.

By a deal just closed, Isaac and Jake Silverman of the Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa., have purchased a plot of ground directly opposite the Gable Arcade, Altoona's largest department store. The consideration was not made known. The Silverman Brothers announced that the acquisition was acquired for the purpose of assisting in the development of Twelfth avenue as a business thoroughfare.

Charlie Richlieu of the Richlieu Theatre, Bedford, Pa., was one of the earliest of the hunters in Pennsylvania. He was accompanied by Dr. Tims, also of Bedford.

William Walker, formerly treasurer of the Gayety Theatre, Pittsburgh, has purchased the Sheridan Theatre, Sheridan, Pa., from Mr. Stanbough.

John Zwick, of the Olympic at Finleyville, Pa., is another of our exhibitor friends who has heard the call of the wilds and shouldered his gun. Don't know yet whether or not he has had any luck.

James Steele, proprietor of the Bellevue and Avalon Theatres, accompanied by his wife and daughter, is going to Stewart, Florida. Mr. Steele expects to build a winter home in that town.

S. Pearlstein has sold the Regent Theatre at McKees Rocks, Pa., to M. Akselrad, the new owner having taken charge the first of November. Akselrad was the original owner of the house, and two years ago sold it to Pearlstein. The latter says he is going out of the theatre business for good. The Regent seats 400.

Monday, November 13, was reopening day for the rebuilt Virginian Theatre, Charleston, W. Va. For the present, First National pictures are the exclusive attractions.

Under roof by December 1 is the goal set by the West Virginia Amusement Company, Fairmont, W. Va., in the construction of the new $300,000 theatre adjoining the Watson Hotel on Main street. Since M. S. D. Brady, secretary of the company, took over the construction work of the theatre, the building has been rising very rapidly. Plans are by Fred W. Elliot, of Columbus, Ohio, and the theatre will probably be the finest in the state, as well as the largest building in Fairmont.

Frank Fairgraves, of the Regent and Princess theatres, Erie, will have his new 1,100-seat State Theatre there ready for opening about December 1.

Wm. I. Forrey, manager of the Exhibitors Film Exchange, who has been absent from his office for seventeen weeks owing to a serious illness, is recovering slowly and it will probably be some time before he will be able to again resume his duties.

St. Louis

The Rivoli Theatre, Sixth, near Olive street, is scheduled to open November 18 with "The Storm." The program will also include International News and a Century comedy. Barney Rosenthal, Universal manager, has spent $25,000 in improving this theatre, which was purchased recently from Harry Koplar.

Henri Chouteau plans to spend $50,000 in improvements at the Odeon Theatre, Grand boulevard at Finney avenue. The entrance will be enlarged by abolishing two of the four stores on the Grand boulevard frontage. The improvement also includes a covered run way along the north side of the building with an opening into the foyer. When the decorations and improvements are concluded the Odeon will be re-opened as a picture theatre.

Yes, It's the Same Dibble

"The name of Dibble brought back memories of my kid days," writes Arthur M. Bowler, assistant manager of the Rialto Theatre, Amsterdam, N. Y., referring to a recent mention, in Regional News and Gossip, of John P. Dibble, of Branford, Conn. Mr. Bowler recalls the days when "Dibble's Moving Pictures" used to play Amsterdam and wants to know if John P. is the same Dibble. He is, as Mr. Bowler must have learned from Mr. Dibble's history published in the last issue, which he evidently hadn't seen when he wrote us.

"Mr. Dibble and I became friends after several visits," he says, "and on one trip, when he played Gloversville, fourteen miles away, he took me with him and I worked the 'effects' in such pictures as 'The Vendetta.' I was not over 8 or 9 years old then. I am thirty now."

Posters Get Baltimore Men in Trouble With the Censor

Benjamin and Milton Caplan, who operate the Clover Theatre, 414 East Baltimore street, and Anthony Moralto of New York, were arrested on warrants sworn out by Miss Marie Presstman, of the Maryland censor board, on October 31. They were charged with having displayed improper posters at a picture theatre. The case came up before Magistrate John H. Stanford in the Central Police Court. Milton Caplan was dismissed, but Benjamin Caplan and Moralto each were fined $50 and costs.

A benefit picture performance was given at the Garden Theatre, Baltimore, on Sunday night, November 5, for the benefit of the Volunteers of America. The playhouse was loaned by William M. Whitehurst, manager.

Religious meetings were held at the Parkway and New Theatres on Sunday, November 5, through the courtesy of Howard S. Jefferson, manager of the former, and Louis A. DeHoff, for the latter.

Through arrangements made by Louis A. DeHoff, booking agent for the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests, all orphans in Baltimore were entertained at the New Theatre during the week beginning Monday, November 6, when "Forget-Me-Not" was the attraction there.

Eugene N. Daly, manager of the New Theatre, went to New York on November 7 to attend to some special work.

Nixon's Victoria Theatre, 415 East Baltimore street, will reopen to the public on November 20 under the management of A. M. Seligman, who managed it before it was badly damaged by fire. The theatre has practically been remodeled at great expense. It is now being operated by the Nixon-Nirdlinger Interests and the Stanley Company of America.

The opening of the New Metropolitan Theatre, North and Pennsylvania avenues, is scheduled to take place on Thanksgiving Day. This house is being built by the Metropolitan Amusement Company of which Frederick W. Schanze is president.

The Echo Theatre, which is operated by J. Zimmerman and booked by Walter Pacey, manager of Pacey's Garden, reopened to the public on November 6.

The Sound of Smacking Lips Is Now Heard in Schenectady

Employes of the Barcli Theatre are already beginning to smack their lips in anticipation of the annual dinner which J. J. Walker, owner of the theatre, gives on Thanksgiving Eve to those on his payroll. The house was opened by Mr. Walker two years ago Thanksgiving. Last year, without saying anything to his employes, Mr. Walker went ahead and planned a fine Thanksgiving Eve repast, with turkey and all the fixings, and then invited those associated with him. The whole affair came as a complete surprise. This year, Mr. Walker has already announced that the affair of a year ago will be an annual one, and to look forward to the biggest kind of a dinner two weeks hence.

William Shirley, manager of the local Strand, is overjoyed because his house will be allowed to retain the name under which it has gone for several years, and which Mr. Shirley believes to be one of its best assets. For a time there was a contention between Mr. Shirley and Max Spiegel, as to who had the legal right to the name "Strand" for their respective Schenectady houses.

Double features are being played up strong in some of the Schenectady houses these days in securing additional patronage. At the Barcli double features prevail with every other bill and the Albany has also swung into double features. Both houses have been watching Fred Elliott's house in Albany, and the effects of double features. At the Barcli this past week, "The Moth" and "The Referee" were coupled up.

Joseph L. Gale, who is known as "Max Spiegel's Man Friday," is spending his time in Schenectady looking after the construction and opening details of "The State."

Miss Janet Moon, only woman manager of a theatre in Schenectady, and who has been handling the Crescent with success for seven years past, is in New York buying film.

"If you have got the pictures, you will do the business," remarked William Shirley, manager of the Strand, to the representative of Moving Picture World this week, when asked as to business conditions in the Electric City. Mr. Shirley is running nothing but feature pictures, straight week runs, from Sunday to Saturday, and when occasion arises increases his prices of admission. And what is more, Mr. Shirley's house is doing a whopping good business these days. For "Orphans of the Storm" admission prices went from 35 to 50 cents, with 65 cents for the loges. Coming attractions at the Strand include "Oliver Twist," "Tess of the Storm Country," "Peg O' My Heart" and "One Exciting Night." Incidentally, it might be stated that "Quincy Adams Sawyer" will have its premiere at the Strand.

Max Spiegel, Walter Hayes, Eugene Falk and Moe Mark, were in town this week, looking over the State Theatre, the latest in the Strand chain. Before leaving, they took a swing over to Troy and inspected the house which is being built there and which will open some time in January.

The Strand believes in good music. One of the leading conductors in the musical world is now directing the twelve-piece orchestra at the Strand. He is Professor Phil Pelz, leader of the band at the San Francisco Exposition in 1915, one time director of the Russian Court orchestra, and a musician known the world over. With him is George Bosliko, a Russian celloist, who also came from the West Coast. There is probably not another city the size of Schenectady in the country, which can boast of an orchestra equaling the Strand's.

NUMBER SIX OF THE SEVENTEEN WINDOWS

That's what Jackie Coogan, in "Oliver Twist," got when he played the New York Strand on pre-release. Some of the largest stores on the biggest street were glad to get these appealing paintings.

San Francisco Exhibitors to Oppose Music Union Demands

The demands of the Musicians' Union for "swing" orchestras and for seven days' pay for six days' work, as well as the payment of the salaries of the "swing" men, will not be granted by San Francisco theatre owners, according to representative members of the industry. The first indication of resistance to the demands is seen in the sudden ending of the Sunday morning concerts of the California Theatre and the reduction of the orchestra of this house by ten men. Other theatres are cutting down the size of their orchestras, and going back to the use of organ music exclusively, and if no agreement is reached with the musicians before the end of the year, when the present wage agreement expires, a lively fight may be expected.

The world's premiere showing of "The Forgotten Law," a picture made in San Francisco by the Graf Productions, Inc., and distributed by Metro, was made at Loew's Warfield Theatre on November 4, and crowded houses at once became the rule.

The Century Theatre on Ellis street, which has been idle for several weeks, will shortly be added to the list of San Francisco's down-town picture houses. It is being remodeled, a projection room built on the ground floor, and will be opened on November 24 with the world premiere of the thrilling Snow production, "Hunting Big Game in Africa With Gun and Camera," controlled by Eugene H. Roth.

The Portola Theatre, one of San Francisco's pioneer houses, is to be closed at an early date, following a showing of the scientific production illustrating the transplanting of glands. About $75,000 will be spent in alterations and redecorations and the house will be reopened the middle of December as the New Portola, with an extended run of "Dr. Jack." The Pompeiian treatment is to be followed out in the new decorative scheme and a theatre of exceptional beauty is promised.

Bargain prices in admissions are being offered by the management of the Francesca Theatre on upper Market street, San Francisco. The regular price of admission is 10 cents for any seat any time but books of twelve tickets are to be had for a dollar.

The Strand Theatre, San Francisco, is installing a $40,000 Robert-Morton organ and is making use of a Fotoplayer temporarily.

Charles Pincus, of the California Theatre, announces the engagement of Harry Thorn as first organist. Thorn recently was with the Liberty Theatre at Portland, Ore.

C. O. Davies, of the Wigwam Theatre, Reno, Nev., was a visitor on San Francisco's Film Row early in November on one of his rather infrequent buying trips. The boys on the avenue would like to see C. O. D. more frequently.

A fire broke out recently on the upper floor of a film exchange building at 292 Turk street but the blaze was confined to two small rooms and the loss was light.

Eugene H. Roth, managing director of the California, Imperial, Granada and Portola theatres, in conjunction with Jack Partington, has moved his offices to the Granada Theatre building.

Hodkinson Makes Changes in Sales Force

An announcement comes from the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of several important changes in their organization. C. L. Peavey has been promoted to the position of branch sales manager of their Cleveland Exchange. He succeeds C. E. Holah, who will come to New York to work out of the big city as special representative on "Fun from the Press," the "Literary Digest" release of ribtickling comment from the press of the country.

It is said that Mr. Holah's appointment is in recognition of his good work on "Fun from the Press" in the Cleveland territory.

The following changes have also been made. W. F. Marshall, who was booker at the Washington, D. C., Branch, is advanced, because of his knowledge of the territory, to office manager, taking the place of H. A. Gillespie, who has been transferred to the home office to do contract work. P. G. Morris has succeeded L. E. Hobson as office manager of the Denver branch. Mr. Hobson has been transferred to the Los Angeles sales force.

Gerety with Universal

Thomas W. Gerety, assistant advertising manager and art director for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been engaged to fill an important position in the advertising department of the Universal Pictures Corporation.

Many Aids to Put "Dr. Jack" Across

Pathe announces that every exhibitor playing the Harold Lloyd feature comedy, "Dr. Jack," will be supplied with a wealth of exploitation accessories that will enable him to live up to his best showmanship ideals. These include standard aids and novelties as follows:

Beginning with posters, there will be an augumented supply in two 1-sheets, two 3-sheets, two 6-sheets, and a distinctive 24-sheet. These are in addition to the stock 1-sheet and 3-sheet, which are especially well adapted for cut-out purposes.

Coming to the "Dr. Jack" campaign book—its front cover and inside of cover will be available in either cut or mat form. It will contain many exploitation suggestions which will be in picturized form.

Sixteen black and whites are furnished for newspaper layouts, as well as an augmented array of newspaper advertising cuts and mats, size 1, 2 and 3 columns, plus two quarter-page and one half-page ads; also an extra press sheet, besides the regular stories, on which will appear two halftone illustrations, available in mat form, and a large pen-and-ink combination available in the same way.

A "Dr. Jack" thematic music score will be furnished. The Harold Lloyd novelty "specs," which have sold so well in connection with other releases, will be furnished for use with "Dr. Jack."

A genuine novelty in the form of cabinet size photographs of Lloyd, autographed by him and which the exhibitor can give away as souvenir portraits, will create a new exploitation field in connection with his productions. A 100-foot trailer will be available.

For lobby display purposes in first-run houses, each Pathe branch office will have at least one set of two oil paintings, size 40x60, on "Dr. Jack."

The Pathe home office is prepared to mail direct to exhibitors a novelty broadside, having the appearance of a doctor's travelling bag, and which, when opened, will tell the story of "Dr. Jack." Besides these, other novelties are in preparation, which are said to make the whole list in a class by itself in the way of screen comedy exploitation.

Service and Your Box Office

Either your box office is a place to collect profits from the showing of pictures, or it's a little coop made to house the ticket seller and keep her on the pay roll with nothing much to do but be decorative.

It's up to you which it is to be.

It is always the aim of Moving Picture World to give you service that will help the box office to fulfill its proper mission as a target for ticket purchasers.

Not the least of our exclusive service-for-exhibitor departments is the Rotogravure Section.

One man said, not long ago, "Yes, very pretty set of stills. But I don't want to look at pictures."

BUT THE PROSPECTIVE PATRON DOES!

That's what those pages of neat and attractive pictures are published for.

Frame them when the films they illustrate are due in your theatre. Put them in your lobby. Use them in window displays. They are pullers; people will look at them, and when you've caught attention you've started a sale; people will remember the title of the pictures they display, and that will back up your other exploitation when the time comes to drag the dimes or quarters in through the little window in the box office.

Rotogravure display, framed and displayed, means dollars.

USE IT AS HUNDREDS OF OTHER EXHIBITORS ARE DOING.

Geo. Beban Honored by Big Officials

George Beban, touring the larger cities with his stage and screen combination of "The Sign of the Rose," was received in Topeka, Kansas, for his appearance at the Orpheum Theatre, under unusual conditions.

Because of the political convention which overcrowded the city, hotel accommodations could not be provided for the star and his company. Whereupon a suite was placed at his disposal in the executive mansion by Governor Henry J. Allen.

Beban's arrival in the city was made noteworthy by the presence, on the capitol steps, of Mayor Herbert J. Corwine and the Governor who presented the actor with a floral key to the city in sight of a great crowd.

Manager C. H. Hooper of the Orpheum had cause to congratulate himself on the result of this official recognition. "The Sign of The Rose" is an American Releasing attraction.

Jones in New Vehicle

The negative of "The Boss of Camp Four," Charles Jones' latest starring production for Fox, has reached the New York offices. The picture is heralded as the most thrilling production Jones has ever been seen in. When one stops to consider that he also played the feature role in "The Fast Mail," that is saying a good deal. Jones has started work on "The Footlight Ranger," his next production.

MARY THURMAN

Who is co-starring with Henry Hull in "Midnight," a Syracuse Motion Picture Company feature, to be handled through Producers' Security Corporation

Universal Starts Work on "Bavu"

The strangest film play in the history of Universal City has entered production.

"The Attic of Felix Bavu" is a weird mystery drama founded on the sensational play of that name written and staged by Earl Carroll in the Earl Carrol theatre in New York. With a masterly hand Carroll pictured the devastating effect of revolution on human morals in the case of the downfall of the orderly state of things in Russia.

"Bavu" is a remarkable character and Wallace Beery will play it.

Forrest Stanley and Estelle Taylor will handle the romantic leading roles. Sylvia Breamer and Martha Mattox will play two important feminine characters.

Nick de Ruiz, "the bad man" of many Universal pictures, has started the portrayal of his biggest role, and Josef Swickard, the French father of "The Four Horsemen," is cast in a principal part, while Harry Carter and Jack Rollens enact two important roles.

Stuart Paton is directing the production from a continuity prepared by Albert G. Kenyon. It will be a Universal-Jewel special.

Named Head of Goldwyn's St. Louis Branch

Goldwyn announces the appointment of J. B. Dugger as manager of its St. Louis branch exchange, succeeding J. Weil, resigned.

Mr. Dugger has had long experience in motion pictures. For the past four years he has been manager of Paramount exchanges in Detroit and in Indianapolis. Goldwyn feels that he is exceptionally well qualified to handle the business of its St. Louis exchange.

Moving Picture World Reviews Are the Best

Five Fox Films for Week, November 13

"My Friend the Devil," another special production, heads the list of five pictures scheduled by Fox Film Corporation for release during the week of November 13, according to announcement this week. The other four include a Tom Mix feature, a Dustin Farnum drama, a Lupino Lane special two-reeler, and an Al St. John comedy.

"My Friend the Devil," directed by Harry Millards to whom goes the credit for direction of "Over the Hill," is a screen adaptation of George Ohnet's famous French novel, "Dr. Rameau." The scenario is the work of Paul H. Sloane, who also wrote the scenario for "Over the Hill," "The Village Blacksmith," "The Town That Forgot God" and "If Winter Comes." Charles Richman, star of the spoken stage, is the featured actor.

"Tom Mix in Arabia," is a melodrama which carries the versatile star from the wilds of the west to the wilds of the East. The story is by Mix and Lynn Reynolds, who also directed.

Dustin Farnum's picture is "While Justice Waits." It was directed by Bernard J. Durning, who directed "The Fast Mail." Irene Rich plays the feminine lead.

Lupino Lane, English pantomimist, comes in the third picture of his first series for Fox, "My Hero." It is a two-reel special directed by Jack Blystone. Al St. John plays his unique pranks in "Out of Place."

Prominent Players in "Midnight" Film

Henry Hull, the young Broadway star, and Mary Thurman started work last week as co-stars in "Midnight," a new comedy drama for Syracuse Motion Pictures Co.

Hamilton Smith, who directed "The Isle of Doubt," and "The Inner Man," in which Wyndham Standing starred for the same company, is directing the feature. Arthur Caldwell is the cinematographer.

The signing of Henry Hull and Mary Thurman is considered an important event in film circles and stamps the Syracuse Motion Pictures Co. as one of the most important producing units in the industry. Henry Hull is one of the most popular stars Broadway ever knew and his present legitimate vehicle is attracting thousands.

Mary Thurman's beauty is a topic in artists' circles and many proclaim her the most beautiful actress on the screen.

The releasing arrangements are in the hands of Producers Security Corporation, which has not yet announced the distribution channels.

Producers Security also handled the former Syracuse productions.

Mayer Film Chosen to Show at Benefit

"Hearts Aflame," Louis B. Mayer's latest film, which Reginald Barker directed and staged, was shown publicly at the Ritz-Carleton grand ball room, last Sunday night, before an audience that packed the big room and which was composed of society people, journalists, statesmen, film personages and the entire membership of the Canadian Club. The event was a benefit for the sufferers of the recent terrible forest fires which wiped out almost an entire province in Northern Ontario. The event was under the auspices of the New York Globe.

"Hearts Aflame," which is from the book "Timber" by Harold Titus, was chosen by the Globe as the chief event on the big programe owing to excellent reports from that paper's Los Angeles correspondent. S. L. Rothapfel of the Capitol Theatre staged the entire show for the Globe.

Governor-elect Alfred Smith headed the list of patrons and patronesses. The patronesses included Mrs. Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, Mrs. Charles H. Sabin, Miss Mary Garret Hay, Mrs. Arthur Livermore, Mrs. E. L. Doheny, Miss Helen Varick Boswell, Mrs. Walter J. Salmon and other prominent society women.

Mr. Rothapfel staged "Hearts Aflame" in a most ambitious manner, a vivid forest fire effect preceding the picture. The music, a special score assembled by Rothapfel, accentuated the high spots in the film.

The Canadian Club co-operated with the Globe and made an outright purchase of two hundred tickets at five dollars each. The entire capacity ball room was sold at that price.

More than fifteen hundred dollars was realized from the sale of tickets, the entire amount of which was forwarded at once to the Canadian sufferers through the Globe.

David Powell Chosen

David Powell has been selected to play one of the principal male roles in "The Glimpses of the Moon," an Allan Dwan production which will be started soon at the Paramount Long Island studio. Bebe Daniels and Nita Naldi will have the leading feminine parts in the picture.

The Doctors

When it comes to Harold Lloyd in "Dr. Jack," Producer Hal Roach doesn't "present," he "prescribes"—as all the screens of all the lucky exhibitors in the country presently will show. The "prescription" is put up and marketed by Pathe. "Administered" by exhibitors who get in early with their orders, their "patients" will be guaranteed a sure cure for anything that ails them.

Pathe declares, on the verdict of authorities who saw "Dr. Jack" in West Coast previews at different types of theatres, that Lloyd's forthcoming feature comedy will prove even a more popular "prescription" than his current success, "Grandma's Boy." That is because its "ingredients," while equally human, are more numerous and varied.

Cosmopolitan Scene in Dalton's Next

A most cosmopolitan assemblage of people is seen on the stage at Paramount's Long Island studio, where Victor Fleming is directing Dorothy Dalton's newest production, "Dark Secrets." The scene of this meeting place for the various races of humanity is a gorgeous hotel in Cairo, Egypt, with its picturesque courtyard and terraces, its lily-pond and statuary, romantic looking balconies and distant palm trees.

This exotic atmosphere is further enhanced by birds of gorgeous plumage and the foliage of the country which abounds there. The scene is rich with the color of interesting costumes and unusual uniforms as contrasted with the conventional garments of the Americans.

Universal's Gibson Film Completed

Under William Worthington's direction Universal has completed the filming of Edward (Hoot) Gibson's starring vehicle, tentatively titled "Kindled Courage."

Beatrice Burnham will be seen opposite Gibson. She recently appeared in support of Priscilla Dean in "The Flame of Life." Harold Goodwin, Harry Tenbrook, James Gordon Russell, Albert Hart and J. Russell Powell have other important roles.

F. B. O. Exploitation Men in Exchanges

The work of enlarging the exploitation field force of the Film Booking Offices of America is nearing completion. Before the end of the present month each of the twenty-eight F. B. O. exchanges will be operating with an exploitation representative. The announcement of the policy of stationing an exploiteer permanently in all exchanges was made several weeks ago by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O. when "In the Name of the Law," a widely exploited production was first released.

To date eighteen men have been added to the staff. These men are working on all of the F. B. O. product and are preparing advance campaigns on "The Third Alarm," the second Emory Johnson production which will be issued as a special early in the new year.

The personnel of the exploitation staff to date is: Herbert Weill, stationed in Albany; Gilbert P. Josephson, stationed in Buffalo; Louis P. Kramer, in Chicago; Harold Wendt, in Cleveland; Geo. Vivian Smith in Cincinnati; A. L. Mitchell in Dallas; Jesse Weil, in Detroit; E. C. Hull, in Indianapolis; Preston Hickey, in Minneapolis; H. W. Fisher, in New Orleans; Chas. Heath, in Sioux Falls, S. D.; and Wallace L. Rockwell, in Washington, D. C.

Screen Star Club

Six among the screen's best known feminine stars have organized a Texas Club for "purely social purposes," according to word from First National. Florence Vidor, Bebe Daniels, Hope Hampton, Corinne Griffith, Jacqueline Logan and Madge Bellamy are the six charter members of Hollywood's latest organization.

Czech Prince Watching Production at "U" City

Prince Sascha, a member of the ancient house of Thurn-and-Taxis, of Czecho-Slovakia, and a captain in the Czecho-Slovakian army, is now enroute from New York to Universal City, Cal., where he will study motion picture production with a view to the establishment of his own producing company in Czecho-Slovakia.

"My plan embraces gaining all knowledge possible of the American motion picture industry," the prince explained to Universal officials upon the eve of his departure from New York. He had received unqualified welcome to all parts of the vast Universal organization.

"My stay, of course, will be somewhat indefinite. Luckily, I am financially fixed so that I can 'bum around a bit,' as you Americans say, for several months in quest of information and accurate and actual experience. Then, I hope to revolutionize completely the motion picture industry in Bohemia.

Tour of Private Car Advertises Studios

The Hampton Del Ruth studios, formerly known as the Balboa studios, where early motion picture history was made in Long Beach, California, were recently sold to a syndicate of Eastern capitalists.

The present policy of the studios, adopted when Hampton Del Ruth assembled his notable cast for "The Marriage Chance," will continue, and the productions will be distributed by American Releasing Corporation under the Hampton Del Ruth name.

Plans of the new company include the production of four feature pictures with casts as distinguished as that of "The Marriage Chance." Twelve two-reel comedies are also scheduled for production under the supervision of Del Ruth.

A tour of the country in a private car has begun, the object being to publicize not only the name of Del Ruth but that of Long Beach by means of photographs of the city and surrounding country. These will be distributed en route. The car will be thrown open to visitors everywhere it goes and the wonders of Southern California and Long Beach will be described and shown.

Alta Allen, Milton Sills, Henry B. Walthall, Tully Marshall, Irene Rich and Mitchell Lewis—the cast of "The Marriage Chance"—will accompany the touring party for a portion of the journey.

J. Held, Jr., Draws for Big "U" Joy Week

J. Held, jr., famous caricature artist, has been engaged by Universal to make a series of drawings for use in material being put out by Universal for the Universal Joy Week, advertised for December 24 to January 2.

These drawings will include humorous sketches of the various Universal comedians, including Neely Edwards, Lewis Sargent, Lee Moran, Baby Peggy, Joe Martin, Brownie, Queenie the horse, and Maudie the mule.

Many exhibitors already have signified their intention of putting over Universal Joy Week, during the holiday season, and of taking full advantage of Universal's gratis accessories, and the extraordinary booking facilities offered for the showing of Universal comedies during the week.

Margaret Clayton Plays Opposite Carey

Marguerite Clayton is making her first appearance in a California made production in "Canyon of the Fools," in which she plays the leading feminine role opposite Harry Carey. This will be the fourth Carey production for release through the Film Booking Offices of America. Others in the cast include Carmen Arselle, Mignonne, Fred Stanton, Murdock MacQuarrie, Vester Pegg, Charles LeMoyne, Joseph Harris and Jack Curtis.

"Canyon of the Fools" is adapted from the novel of that name by Richard Matthews Hallett, published recently by Harper Brothers, after running serially in the Sautrday Evening Post. It was put into scenario form by John W. Grey. The story has a mining locale.

Title Is "Dark Secrets"

The title of Dorothy Dalton's latest Paramount picture now in production at the company's Long Island studio has been changed to "Dark Secrets." The working title of the picture was "Black Fury." It was written by Edmund Goulding.

A scene from initial Daniel Carson Goodman Special, "What Wrong with the Women?" Distributed by Equity Pictures Corporation

Compson Company Returning

After six weeks in Honolulu, Betty Compson and her company, making "The White Flower," will return to the Hollywood Paramount studio the last of this month. Excellent weather and lighting conditions have made it possible to complete their island and tropical scenes well within schedule.

The beach at Waikiki, the volcano at Kilauea, the famous cliff of the Pali, and other noted Hawaiian beauty spots will be seen in the finished production.

Ruggles to Direct Reid's Next

Wesley Ruggles, one of the most successful of the younger directors on the west coast, has been engaged to direct Wallie Reid's next Paramount picture, according to advices from Los Angeles. Ruggles is peculiarly fitted to direct Reid by reason of his past successes in the comedy-drama field.

Ruggles has lately been engaged in producing two pictures starring Ethel Clayton. Announcement was made a short time ago that the director had purchased Owen Davis' famous play, "Blow Your Own Horn," for production as an indepent release. Ruggles states at this time that he will carry out his original plans upon the completion of his present Lasky contract.

Completing Editing of "Drummond" Film

The final editing and titling has been finished on the production "Bulldog Drummond," which will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on December 3, and according to those who have witnessed a prerelease showing of this feature, it is one of the best that this organization has released.

Carlyle Blackwell plays the role of Captain Hugh Drummond, while Evelyn Greeley plays the part of Phyllis Benson. The balance of the cast consists of such names as Gerald Deane, Harry Bogarth, Horace Devere, Warwick Warde, William Browning and Dorothy Fane.

"Bulldog Drummond" was produced by the Hollandia Film Corporation and directed by Oscar Apfel. It will be distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Vidor Film Is for Release Dec. 10

December 10 has been definitely announced as the release date of the next Associated Exhibitors-Florence Vidor feature, "Conquering the Woman." It was adapted from Henry C. Rowland's big fiction success, "Judith the Conqueror."

Florence Vidor has in her supporting cast such well known players as Peter Burke, Mathilde Brundage, David Butler, Roscoe Karns, Bert Sprotte and Harry Todd. King W. Vidor directed.

Gets Big Reception

The Hippodrome, at Miami, Fla., was the scene of an unusual ovation for Alice Brady, who is in the southern city taking exteriors for her newest Paramount photoplay, "The Leopardess." Miss Brady made a personal appearance at the picture theatre in conjunction with the showing of one of her recent releases, "Dawn of the East." The audience was given a rare treat when the stage and screen star enacted an emotional scene from "Cassie Cook of the Yellow Sea," in which she has scored a distinct hit in New York's leading vaudeville theatres.

Bonns Gets Over Big Stunt for Goldwyn

Goldwyn is receiving congratulations these days on all hands, by word of mouth, by letter, by telephone and by telegraph on what is probably the most original and successful publicity stunt ever pulled for a motion picture. It was to exploit the Peter B. Kyne picture, "Brothers Under the Skin," showing this week at the Capitol Theatre, New York. The stunt was flashed the middle of last week and won front page space not only in the newspapers of New York City but was carried by the Associated Press, the United Press and other associations for the dissemination of telegraphic news to every newspaper in the United States. no matter how small as long as it subscribed to a press service.

Every exhibitor in the United States who has booked "Brothers Under the Skin" will benefit from this stunt. That the exhibitors are appreciating its publicity value is proved by the number who have contracted within the past few days for the picture, frankly admitting that the unusual and widespread publicity which the film was receiving was the immediate incentive to book it now.

On Thursday morning of last week every newspaper in New York carried at least a column story telling of the formation of the "Association of Brothers Under the Skin"—a League for married men who refused longer to be henpecked. Papers of incorporation had been filed in a local court. The newspapers listed the rules and regulations of the new order.

The chiefs of the Society were announced as Edward Bonns, William R. Ferguson (another Goldwynite) and Hugh J. Connelly. Supreme Court Justice Robert M. C. Marsh was asked to approve the organization's certificate of incorporation. There was one of those "leaks" by which carefully guarded court stories get into the hands of an inquisitive reporter and—well, the evening newspapers picked up the story, and all the sob sisters interviewed Bonns. The Daily News ran a picture of Bonns and Ferguson mopping and dusting, as good husbands should do. The Mail, the Telegram, the Telegraph and other papers carried a second day story on the stunt.

The members of the "Brothers Under the Skin" League had an official song, which was printed in the New York Times and other dailies. This song was written by Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for the Goldwyn organization.

On Sunday the Goldwynites advertised their picture, "Brothers Under the Skin" at the Capitol and tied up all the big clippings which had been received.

It was a real break, and credit is due to the whole Goldwyn publicity crowd, including the president of the Society—and exploitation manager for Goldwyn—Edward Bonns, his assistant, William R. Ferguson, not to mention the director of advertising and publicity, Howard Dietz.

Illustrates Movies' Growing Popularity

The growing popularity of motion pictures, says First National, is strikingly illustrated by an elaborate booking sheet of screen plays which is published each Sunday in the Baltimore News. This is a new departure for a newspaper. According to the film expert who prepares the booking sheet, it has proved a good circulation getter for the News.

The motion picture "fan" who wants to know where and when a certain attraction is to be shown during the week, has only to scan the booking sheet. The sheet for the week beginning October 30 gives, it is said, a striking instance of the popularity of First National Attractions, showing that first National has about 75 days out of approximately 288 days in Baltimore theatres.

What is said to be a remarkable engineering feat has been successfully achieved in Nevada for the James Cruze Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," and when it is considered that the work was attempted ninety miles approximately from a railroad in a location accessible only by narrow mountain and desert roads, with available materials hard to get, much having to be shipped from Salt Lake or Los Angeles, the task assumes even larger proportions, it is stated.

Two feats that deserve especial mention, performed under the supervision of Walter Reed, location manager, in co-operation with technicians at the location and at the studio and with Tom White, superintendent, are the building of the two Indian ferry landings, supposedly on the Kaw River; and the reproduction on a large scale of Fort Bridger, the famous old trading post of pioneer days.

Hold Trade View of Film in London

Wardour Films, Ltd., British distributors of American Releasing's product, held a trade showing of unusual proportions when Pyramid's "Queen of The Moulin Rouge" occupied the big stage of the London Pavilion on November 1.

Henry Hibbert, managing director and J. W. Thorpe, general manager of Wardour, made a further departure from precedent by staging an elaborate prologue in the form of a dancing number requiring twenty girls.

At the same time, Will Bradley's "Moongold," another American Release, was shown and repeated its impression as an uncommonly artistic and original short subject.

Says Suspense Is Most Important

"The most important quality in a motion picture is, I should say, suspense," said Robert G. Vignola, director of "When Knighthood Was In Flower," who is leaving shortly for a six months' tour of the world.

"Without suspense the most carefully produced subject would fail to hold the attention of the speculator," continued Mr. Vignola. "The best production would be merely a succession of pictures which, however beautiful, would displease the audience because it would deprive them of the joy and thrill that go with a production where suspense is heightened.

"To my mind this is the most important quality in a motion picture and it is the first thing I look for when reading a story preparatory to production.

It must be remembered that motion picture audiences come to the theatre to be entertained with the least possible expenditure of mental effort. Therefore there must be some quality about the entertainment that will key them up to a high pitch of interest, and that quality is suspense."

Novel for Gilbert

George Barr McCutcheon's novel, "Truxton King," will be the first starring vehicle for John Gilbert under his new contract with William Fox, which was signed a few days ago, according to announcement by the Fox Film Corporation. The picture will be directed by Jerome Storm. "St. Elmo," Augusta Evan's novel, recently was completed at the Fox Western studios.

Actors of Note in Goldwyn Film

Goldwyn is again giving author-director Rupert Hughes a cast of well known players for his new production, "Souls for Sale," the continuity for which he has prepared himself from his novel of that name dealing with life among the motion picture colonists in Hollywood.

Frank Mayo, who has for years been a star for Universal, has been engaged for a feature role. Others who have prominent parts are Richard Dix, Claire Windsor and Lew Cody.

Small - Town - Folk in Paramount Film

More than one record is being broken in the photoplay, "Back Home and Broke," which George Ade wrote for Thomas Meighan. The picture, which is now in process of production at the Paramount Long Island studio under the direction of Alfred E. Green, is said by officials to have more laughs to the reel than any film ever made in the Eastern studio. It also has more well-known small-town characters crammed into it in true Ade style than most pictures of a more or less rural type, it is stated.

Expect Great Fight in Fox Picture

New York officials of Fox Film Corporation are eagerly awaiting an opportunity to see the next William Farnum production, "Brass Commandments," inasmuch as real "fireworks" are expected, since it has been announced that Tom Santschi will play the heavy in the picture. Santschi, it will be remembered, also played the heavy in "The Spoilers," which featured one of the most sensational fights ever seen on the screen.

Signs to Distribute Four Evans Features

Edgar Selden, acting for Worth While Pictures Corporation, closed a contract this week with John C. Ragland, secretary of Associated Exhibitors, under which the latter organization will distribute four productions starring Madge Evans.

Preparations for this production have been under way about six months. The cast, Mr. Selden declared, will be composed only of players who have wide reputation.

"On the Banks of the Wabash" is in six reels, with continuity by Forrest Halsey. The story is described as of the homey, human, grass roots type, but with its thrilling moments also, giving Miss Evans opportunity for a full display of her wide versatility as an actress.

Before beginning his activities in the picture field, Edgar Selden devoted several years to the production of his own stage plays throughout the United States, in houses controlled by Klaw & Erlanger. He is chairman of the American Dramatists Club.

Fox Has Many Films Nearing Completion

Fritzi Brunette will play opposite Jones. Shirley Mason will appear in "Pawn Ticket 210," from the stage play by David Belasco and Clay M. Greene.

Among the comedies for the next few months are Clyde Cook's "The Cyclist," Al St. John in "The Alarm," "Cupid's Elephant," "The Fresh Heir," "The Poor Fish" and "Rides and Slides," Sunshine Comedies.

Mary Miles Minter's next Paramount picture, based on an original story by Hector Turnbull, adapted by Percy Heath, and as yet untitled, was scheduled to start October 23. This has meant only a few days' rest for the star, following the closing of her last production, "Drums of Destiny."

At Universal City

"His Good Name" will be filmed as an all star special production at Universal City. The William Slavens McNutt story was published serially in Collier's Weekly and later as a novel.

Woman's Magazine to Present Movies

As part of its program in the interest of better films, the Woman's Home Companion is presenting a series of two-reel dramas and comedies of American home life, which it is said, reflect in plot and artistic standards the spirit of the magazine. The entire plan of production is unique from plot to treatment, it is stated.

Each month the editor selects a big and vital idea set forth in the pages of the magazine in a special feature article, an essay or an editorial, written by an authority or expert on the topic. On this idea or theme, a motion picture scenario is written. These plays are not educational, neither do they offer propaganda. They are entertainment based on some big idea or theme.

The first of the series is "This Wife Business," a comedy drama, based on a special article written by Alice Ames Winter, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs which will appear in the Woman's Home Companion for January under the title of "What is Your Market Value, Madam?" It is based on the survey of the work done by women in the home, now being made by the U. S. Census Bureau, and it deals with the economic value of the home-maker.

The second film is called "Disposing of Mother" and deals with the influence of modern thought on the middle-aged woman. It will be of special interest to those who have been worrying over the prevalence of the flapper type and the disappearance of home life in America.

Another feature in which these films differ from their predecessors is in the method of production. Associated with the technical producers are experts from the editorial staff of the magazine whose knowledge is utilized in the stage settings, the selection of furnishings and fittings, and the costuming of the roles. The object is to present home-like settings in good taste.

The films are being produced at The Estes Studios, West 125th Street, Manhattan, by the Aralma Film Co., Inc., whose president is Albert St. Peter. The director is Arthur J. Zellner, who has been identified with the production of motion pictures on the Pacific Coast and in New York, particularly with the Metro Company.

Two Paramounts for Release on Nov. 20

William de Mille's production, "Clarence," with Wallace Reid, Agnes Ayres and May McAvoy, and Alice Brady in "Anna Ascends" are the Paramount feature releases scheduled for November 20.

Clara Beranger wrote the screen adaptation of Booth Tarkington's "Clarence," which was produced on the New York stage in 1919 and enjoyed great popularity. The picture is said to be packed with laughs from beginning to end.

"Anna Ascends" is an adaptation by Margaret Turnbull of the stage play by Harry Chapman Ford. The director was Victor Fleming, who directed Douglas Fairbanks in "When the Clouds Roll By" and whose experience dates back to the old Fine Arts days.

Miss Brady is seen in the role of a Syrian girl who has come to the United States to try to realize her ambition to be a successful author.

Miss Brady's leading man is Robert Ellis, while David Powell, Nita Naldi and Charles Gerrard are seen in semi-heavy roles. Others in the film are Edward Durand, Florence Dixon, Frederick Burton and Grace Griswold.

Fred Santley with Cosmopolitan

Frederick Santley, brother of Joseph Santley, and who himself has been featured in many of Broadway's biggest successes, returned to the silent drama this week, after an absence of more than ten years, when he began work in "The Go Getter," a Cosmopolitan picturization from a Peter B. Kyne story, featuring Seena Owen and T. Roy Barnes, and directed by E. H. Griffith.

Playgoers Film for Release Nov. 19

"The Man Who Waited," is the five-reel drama which Playgoers Pictures has set for release November 19. It is said to be a combination of a heart-throbbing romance with a succession of thrills and action in every scene.

In the cast are Frank Braidwood, Inez MacDonald, Vonda Phelps and Jay Morley.

Miss Vidor Selects Cast for Film

Word received at Associated Exhibitors offices in New York from the west coast tells of the selection by Florence Vidor of the cast for her forthcoming production of Booth Tarkington's novel, "Alice Adams." Claude Gillingwater, Margaret McWade, Harold Goodwin, Vernon Steele, Thomas Ricketts and Fay Holderness have been engaged.

Rowland V. Lee is directing.

Reproduce Board of Trade for Film

Ranking in size and elaborateness of detail with the largest sets ever made for a motion picture, is the reproduction of the Chicago Board of Trade, the present scene of Cecil B. DeMille's activity in his new Paramount picture, "Adam's Rib," by Jeanie MacPherson. As there was not sufficient space at the busy Lasky studio for this setting with its thousands of square feet, the former Realart studio was re-opened for its accommodation. Two complete stages were thrown together at the Realart plant to provide sufficient space.

It is in the Chicago Board of Trade that Milton Sills, a wheat broker, plays out strongly dramatic situations which also involve Elliott Dexter, Theodore Kosloff, Anna Q. Nilsson and Pauline Garon. The modernity of the Board of Trade is well set off by Mr. DeMille's earlier settings in the production which shows a Natural History Museum and its towering skeletons of prehistoric dinosaurs which roamed North America something like fourteen million years ago.

Company Back from Europe

The Cosmopolitan Productions Company, which has been in France six weeks making the picturization of Blasco Ibanez's story, "The Enemies of Women," returned home on the S. S. Olympic.

Edna Purviance has the chief feminine role.

New Casting Director

William Cohill, formerly in charge of the motion picture department of the Actors' Equity Association, has been made casting director at the Long Island studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Ned Hay, who has held the post since the re-opening of the studio, will be a special assistant to E. C. King, studio manager.

Big Race Scene

The famous Grand Prix, the feature race of the sporting year at Buenos Aires, Argentina, was duplicated by Director Sam Wood during the closing days of "My American Wife," Gloria Swanson's latest Paramount picture. This story of life and love in a colorful Southern Republic was written by Monte M. Katterjohn, based on a story by Hector Turnbull.

Maberry, Producer, to Film Novel Soon

Cecil E. Maberry, who resigned recently from Goldwyn, with whom he held the positions of chairman of the sales council and vice president of the distributing organization, has just announced that he is going to produce pictures.

Mr. Maberry's fine record during twelve years of experience in the business is especially well-known in the Middle West. The past year, following his appointment to the home office, has given him a much broader field, however, by affording close contact not only with the film men of the East, but in all parts of the country where various trips have taken him.

In Chicago film circles the standard of his services is perhaps better understood than anywhere else. For four years he held the position of exchange manager of Goldwyn's Chicago office. His comprehensive understanding of the moving picture industry as it affects the exhibitor as well as the producer and distributor rendered him unusually qualified, and fully deserving of the high esteem in which Chicago film men hold him. At the time of the formation of the Chicago Film Trade Association, about two years ago, he was elected president by a unanimous vote. This was a position that required just his ability to see more than one side of a question, a fact that his many friends fully realized.

Similarly successful was his previous experience as manager of the St. Louis exchange, where he spent two years. The "100 per cent. Maberry" banquet, which was given him by the film men of St. Louis on December 22, 1918, is a well-remembered event. Shortly before his departure for Chicago, he was voted the most popular man in the picture business at a meeting held by the National Association of Moving Picture Exhibitors.

The Goldwyn Company's appreciation of his services is expressed in the following letter signed by F. J. Godsol, president.

"I beg to state that Mr. Maberry's resignation was a cause of sincere regret to the Goldwyn Company. He was one of the early pioneers in the Goldwyn organization, having completed his fourth year of important service."

Mr. Maberry is in New York at present completing plans for incorporating the new company. He has already negotiated for the motion picture rights to a new novel, "A Warning to Wives," which will be published at an early date. Hester E. Hosford, author of the novel, has written a number of distinguished works, the most popular of which is "Woodrow Wilson: His Career and Public Policies," published by Putnams a few years ago. Her new novel is said to be peculiarly adapted to a screen translation, and entirely in keeping with Mr. Maberry's purpose in presenting only superior features.

Plans for production, including negotiations for studios, stars and director, will be announced in detail soon.

Universal Lists Big November Releases

Universal's five-reel attraction release schedule for November calls for four of that company's best feature productions, including outstanding pictures by Herbert Rawlinson, Gladys Walton, and Edward (Hoot) Gibson, and an all-star picture of unusual strength featuring Marguerite de La Motte, Matt Moore and Ralph Graves.

The list is as follows, in the order of release: "Another Man's Shoes," starring Herbert Rawlinson; "The Lavender Bath Lady," starring Gladys Walton; "Ridin' Wild," starring Ed (Hoot) Gibson, and "The Jilt." They are scheduled for release November 6, 13, 20 and 27 respectively.

"Another Man's Shoes," is said to be one of the most unusual Rawlinson pictures ever made.

This picture was adapted from a novel by Victor Bridges. It was directed by Jack Conway. Rawlinson was surrounded by a big cast for this feature, including such established players as Barbara Bedford, Una Trevelyn, Joseph Swickard, Harry Carter, Jick de Ruiz, Jean de Briac and Nelson McDowell.

"The Lavender Bath Lady," starring Gladys Walton, was adapted from a story by Shannon Fife, and was put into screen form by George Randolph Chester famous American novelist, now an outstanding figure in the Universal City scenario staff. King Baggot, directed. Among the members of the cast are Edward Burns, Charlotte Pierce, Tom Ricketts, Albert McQuarrie, Earl Crain, Harry Lorrain and Mary Winston.

The third Universal release for November is another of Gibson's rollicking comedy features in which lively action, hard riding, amusing situations, clever characterizations and pleasing sentiment are combined into an ingenious whole. "Ridin' Wild" was directed by Nat Ross, the young director who made "The Galloping Kid," one of Gibson's most successful comedy-westerns. The latest Gibson picture is from the pen of Roy Myers, who also made the screen adaptation. The cast includes Edna Murphy, William Welsh, Gertrude Claire, Wilton Taylor, Wade Boteler, Otto Hoffman, Burton Wilson and Jack Walters.

"The Jilt" was directed by Irving Cummings from a story by R. Ramsey, published in the Saturday Evening Post. The strong cast includes Marguerite de la Motte, Matt Moore, Ralph Graves, Eleanor Hancock, Ben Hewlett and Harry DeVere.

Says "The Flirt" Is Extraordinary Film

"The Flirt," Hobart Henley's Universal picturization of Booth Tarkington's well known novel has been received in New York and reviewed by Universal officials. They hail it as an extraordinary picture that will create a sensation as soon as it is shown to the public.

The title role is taken by Eileen Percy. Her work as Tarkington's selfish, trouble-making heroine is said to be the greatest of her career.

Of no less importance are the other members of the cast. They are Helen Jerome Eddy, George Nichols, Buddy Messenger, Lloyd Whitlock, Edward Hearn, Dorothea Wolbert, Nell Craig, Harold Goodwin, Bert Roach, Lydia Knott, William Welsh and Tom Kennedy.

It is expected that the picture will be ready for release around the first of the year. It will follow "The Kentucky Derby" on Universal's Jewel release schedule.

Pictures "Shot" in Locale of Stories

For no less than six of the super-productions to be included in the big twenty for the current season, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has sent, or will send, directors and players to foreign lands.

Plans are now being made for the sending of the "Ben Hur" company to Palestine and Italy in order that no time may be lost when the director and players for this greatest of all Goldwyn pictures have been selected.

Many of the scenes for the screen version of Thomas Hardy's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," which Marshall Neilan will produce in association with Goldwyn, will be taken in rural England. Many of the scenes for "Six Days" have been photographed in Paris.

In making "Sherlock Holmes," a recent Goldwyn release, Director Albert Parker with the star, John Barrymore, and several of the principals went to London in the pursuit of realism.

Goldwyn sent Director Maurice Tourneur and three of the leading players in "The Christian" to England to make many of the big exterior scenes.

Director R. A. Walsh and the complete cast for Goldwyn's first Carey Wilson picture, "Passions of the Sea," were sent to Tahiti, where almost the entire photoplay was made.

"Runaway Girl" Finished

Universal has completed the production of the Ladies' Home Journal story, "The Runaway Girl," previously titled, "Gret'n Ann," which Louis Dodge wrote and which Hugh Hoffman scenarized as a starring vehicle for Gladys Walton. King Baggot directed.

Popular Players in Cast

Harold Lloyd's supporting cast appearing in "Dr. Jack," the five-reel comedy which Pathe shortly will release, illustrates the comedian's purpose to enhance in every way the feature quality of what both he and Pathe consider the greatest of all his productions. Mildred Davis, who plays the heroine role, has won wide personal popularity as Lloyd's leading lady in all his comedies produced during the last three years. Other celebrated favorites of screen and stage appearing in "Dr. Jack" are Eric Mayne, John T. Prince and Norman Hammond.

Wide Variety in List of F. B. O. Productions

The pre-holiday release schedule of the Film Booking Offices of America will include a society drama, a romantic costume melodrama and an old-fashioned love story, all of which will be available to exhibitors between now and the first of the new year. The three forthcoming F. B. O. releases for the current year are "Thelma," a Chester Bennett production starring Jane Novak; "When Love Comes," in which Helen Jerome Eddy is presented by Ray Carroll; and "Captain Fly-By-Night," announced as the most ambitious effort of Johnnie Walker's screen career. This strong array, states F. B. O., will afford exhibitors material for the expected big holiday business.

"Thelma," the current F. B. O. release, is a screen adaptation of Marie Corelli's novel of the same name which has had a wide circulation for the past twenty years and as a stage play has been a consistent favorite among stock companies. Mr. Bennett announces this production as the most pretentious of his career. It presents Miss Novak as the Norwegian peasant girl whose marriage casts her into the midst of London society. One of the features of the production is a lavish fashion display. Vernon Steele is opposite the star and the supporting cast includes Gordon Mullen, Barbara Tennant, Bert Sprotte, Harvey Clark, June Elvidge, Wedgewood Nowell and Harry Lounsdale. The screen adaptation was made by Thomas Dixon, Jr., and the photography is by Jack Mackenzie.

In "When Love Comes" Helen Jerome Eddy is seen for the first time as a star in her own name. The locale of the story, which was written by Ray Carroll, is a small New England town. It is primarily a romance developed with many thrilling scenes, and is described as a delightfully human story of an old-fashioned girl. Harrison Ford, among the most popular leading men of the screen, is opposite the star. William A. Seiter, who directed many past F. B. O. productions, was behind the megaphone. The supporting cast includes Fannie Midgeley, Claire Dubray, Joseph Bell, Gilbert Clayton, Buddy Messenger and Molly Gordon, J. Barrows and Fay McKenzie.

"Captain Fly-By-Night" has been in production for the past three months at the R-C Studios and was only recently completed. It is a story by Johnston McCulley, author of "The Mark of Zorro," and the locale is the California of 1824 when that country was under Spanish rule. Johnnie Walker is cast as a mysterious stranger who appears on the King's highway and is suspected of being the notorious bandit, "Captain Fly-By-Night." The climax as staged by Director William Howard is a battle scene in which five hundred extras take part. Shannon Day is Walker's leading lady. The Spanish costuming makes a colorful background for the action, states F. B. O.

Noted Movie People End Tour of Russia

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., sends word that Joseph M. Schenck, the Misses Norma and Constance Talmadge and their mother have completed their tour of Russia and have arrived in Berlin.

In Russia, Mr. Schenck had several important conferences with representatives of the Soviet Government, who urged the producer to film a big motion picture in Russia to acquaint the world with conditions there. Mr. Schenck is reported to be seriously considering the matter.

The Talmadge party will sail for America, according to present plans, on November 16

Meanwhile Director Frank Lloyd has completed the continuity for Norma's next production, which is to be a picturization of Bayard Veiller's "With the Law."

It is expected that the Talmadge party will arrive in Los Angeles about December 1, and actual "shooting" will start immediately.

F. B. O. Will Give Wide Advertising to "Fighting Blood"

The release of the series of F. B. O. "Fighting Blood" pictures will be preceded by a national advertising campaign which will start immediately in Collier's magazine. H. C. Witwer's stories, from which the pictures have been adapted, are now running in that magazine.

The campaign has been arranged so that the F. B. O. advertisement will run in each issue together with one of the Witwers' stories. There are twelve stories in this series which are appearing at regular intervals in Collier's and it is expected that this campaign will awaken the interest of the many thousands who are reading the stories.

While all of these pictures carry the same characters and the same theme, each is distinct and complete in itself and is not to be considered in any way as an episode.

Two subjects have already been completed at the R-C Studios under the direction of Mal St. Clair, who has selected for this important position and taken from the Carter De Haven unit, where he had been directing the F. B. O. comedy star in his series of domestic two-reelers. The first is entitled "Fighting Blood," giving its name to the entire series.

The love interest is carried through the whole series and plays an important part in every picture. George O'Hara is featured as Gale Galen, and opposite him, as Judy Wilcox, appears Clara Horton, both young screen players of pronounced ability and representative of the youth of America.

Harlam to Play in Support of Negri

Macey Harlam has been added to the cast of Pola Negri's first American-made picture, "Bella Donna," according to an announcement made by Producer George Fitzmaurice.

Harlam will be remembered by theatre-goers for his remarkable characterizations in notable stage productions..

It was Harlam's work in the George Fitzmaurice production of "The Right to Love" which won him his role in the current Fitzmaurice picture.

Although the cast of this first Pola Negri picture is small in numbers, it is high-calibered in quality. Supporting Miss Negri are Conway Tearle, Conrad Nagel, Claude King and Macey Harlam. One or two other players remain to be selected as the picture progresses. Ouida Bergere adapted Robert Hichens' novel to the screen.

"Sapho" was written by Daudet for his son, Leon, who also became a novelist, for the latter to read when he should become twenty years of age.

Pola Negri first sprang into prominence in this country when "Passion" was released. Since then she has appeared in "Gypsy Blood," and a picture version of "Sumurun," called "One Arabian Night."

Critics Give High Praise to "Tess"

Despite the fact that Mary Pickford doesn't need any vote of confidence from the public, the public gave her a most unanimous one at the world's premiere of her re-creation of "Tess of the Storm Country" at the Strand theatre, New York.

The crowd that packed the Strand to capacity all during the afternoon was augmented almost into a mob in the early evening by the thousands that sought admission in view of the announced personal appearance Miss Pickford made at the first evening showing. Lines formed both up and down Broadway to the ticket office.

That Miss Pickford decided wisely when she permitted her love for the character Tess to induce her to make a new and up-to-date "Tess of the Storm Country" for United Artists Corporation release was quickly proven by the throngs that daily flock to see the new picture, as well as by the published verdict in the way of reviews by the critics for the New York newspapers.

"The new 'Tess of the Storm Country' is the greatest picture Mary Pickford ever made," said the critic for the Evening Mail. "It is more than that. It is one of the great pictures of motion picture history."

"To say that we think 'Tess' was and is the best thing Mary Pickford has ever done is but to plagiarize, for it has been said many times before," said Don Allen in the Evening World. "Pictures have progressed and Miss Pickford's new 'Tess' has kept abreast of the rush of the times."

"The new version of 'Tess of the Storm Country' is the finest achievement of Mary Pickford's career," said the reviewer for the Evening Telegram.

"Mary Pickford's re-creation of 'Tess of the Storm Country' is not only a vast improvement on her first picturization of this story, but it surpasses infinitely most movies that are now in their first blush," said the New York Sun's review. "It seems by far the best picture ever turned out by a film actress."

"Mary Pickford is just as winsome in 'Tess of the Storm Country' as she was eight years ago," says the New York American critic.

"Mary Pickford will lose no popularity in her re-creation of 'Tess of the Storm Country' for it is an excellent film and one which cannot fail to please and entertain any audience," said the critic for the Daily News.

"Miss Pickford probably has never acted a part more beautifully than she acts this one," said the New York World review. "With the aid of modern methods a much more colorful and holding picture has been made."

"Mary Pickford's 'Tess of the Storm Country' at the Strand is not the old 'Tess' revamped or revived, but an entirely new production with all the modern methods of photography and lighting," said the review for the Morning Telegraph.

"Mary Pickford never has had, and probably never will have again, so excellent a vehicle for the exploitation of her natural and dramatic talents as 'Tess of the Storm Country,'" said the Globe reviewer.

"Miss Pickford has a new success to her credit," said the critic for the Evening Journal. "One loves Tess for her sweet simplicity and unspoiled faith as for her spirit and spunk when viciousness peers through the window and villainy stalks through the door."

"'Tess of the Storm Country' is unquestionably a success," said the review for the Herald, "and is sure to be a highly profitable production. It is performed with much grace, charm and intelligence. Miss Pickford, herself, is splendid. That goes without saying. The direction is skillful and the photography is beautiful."

"Mary Pickford makes Tess real in her new 'Tess of the Storm Country' for Miss Pickford acts," said the critic for the Times. "She scampers and skips about in her old familiar ways, but she also acts. She has intensely human moments. Her pantomime is subtle and finished."

"The unusual Mary Pickford makes this an unusual picture," says the critic for the Tribune. "She is perfectly beautiful."

Duplicate Hospital for Picture

What is probably the most striking hospital interior set ever built for a motion picture is the one constructed in the Cosmopolitan Studios for the picturization of "The Go-Getter," a Peter B. Kyne story, work on which was started this week. In this particular scene, disabled soldiers play a prominent part.

In order to make it perfect in every detail, Director E. H. Griffith arranged with Dr. William V. Healey, staff surgeon of the Reconstruction Hospital at Central Park West and 100th street, to collaborate on its construction. As a result the set is a faithful reproduction of the interior of the Reconstruction Hospital from which it was designed.

In order that these scenes of "The Go Getter" would have the proper atmosphere, Griffith also arranged with Dr. Healey, who saw service in France as a major in the Medical Corps, to have four disabled soldiers, all patients in Reconstruction, appear in the hospital scenes.

"The Go Getter," one of Kyne's most popular stories, is being made from a scenario by John Lynch. T. Roy Barnes and Seena Owen are featured in the picture, and others in the cast include Frederick Santley, Tom Lewis, William J. Sorelle, William Norris, John Carr and Jane Jennings.

Following a private viewing of this film recently, Mr. Weiss said: "I have never before witnessed a picture which possesses the remarkable attributes of 'Between Worlds.'"

Norma Talmadge in Selznick Revival

Another of the Selznick revivals has been shipped to Select branches throughout the country for release November 12. This time it is Norma Talmadge in "The Secret of the Storm Country."

During the last year the Select company has released a number of the popular pictures starring both Norma and Constance which were made early in the careers of these stars. Thy have proved particularly big box-office attractions. Selznick states.

"The Secret of the Storm Country" is from the novel by Grace Miller White. The star appears in the role of "Tess." The direction is by Charles Miller.

Leaves for Brazil for Conference

Henrique Blunt, New York representative of the Companhia Brazil Cinematographica of Rio de Janeiro, S. A., is leaving for Brazil this month in order to plan with F. Serrador, the president of the concern in question, the future activities of the company in this country and elsewhere. The Brazil Cinematographica has been exporting American films for exhibition in Brazil during the last two years, but the firm intends to enter the General Export business in the near future.

During his stay in this country at the head of the New York branch of his company, Mr. Blunt has impressed all those that came in contact with him in a business way with his evident knowledge of the market, his experience in the export field and his manifold activities in overseas trade.

Miss Bert Parker will be in charge of the business of the Brazil Cinematographica during the absence of Mr. Blunt.

Mothers Body Praises "Knighthood" Film

That "When Knighthood Was in Flower," the Cosmopolitan picture starring Marion Davies, is educational as well as splendidly entertaining, alike to young and old is the verdict of the City Mothers Association of Los Angeles. This important and influential organization has sent a letter to Sid Grauman, owner of the Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles where the picture is now showing to capacity houses commending him for bringing such a wonderful picture to Los Angeles.

Women's organizations from coast to coast are hailing this picture as an example of what all photoplays can and should be—a clean, wholesome picture, absorbingly interesting yet without a suggestive taint in it, says Cosmopolitan Productions.

Cameramen "Shoot" Ex-President

In view of many important Democratic victories in the recent election, some unusual pictures of ex-President Woodrow Wilson, appearing in Selznick News No. 1092 are of particular interest, Selznick says.

All the aspects of the "Tribute Rally" held before Wilson's home recently were filmed by the Selznick cameraman and special emphasis is placed on the story in the news reel. There are also a wide variety of other interesting scenes.

Universal Announces Mid-Winter Releases

A new group of nine pictures, to be released during mid-winter, is announced by the Universal Pictures Corporation, and will be known as the Laemmle Nine. Each of the nine pictures carries the personal endorsement of Carl Laemmle, president of the corporation.

The Laemmle Nine is the third group of nine attractions in the Universal 1922-1923 release schedule. The first group, the Winning Nine, was released in August, September and October, and the second group, called the Prosperity Nine, is now being released. The Laemmle Nine will be released, one each week, beginning on Christmas Day.

The new release group contains pictures by several of Universal's leading stars, as well as several special cast pictures made by players of great popularity and ability. In the order of their release the Laemmle Nine consists of "A Dangerous Game," starring Gladys Walton; "The Flaming Hours," a Frank Mayo picture; "The Ghost Patrol," with a special cast; "Kindled Courage," starring Ed (Hoot) Gibson; "The Scarlet Car," starring Herbert Rawlinson; "The Power of a Lie," with a special cast; "The First Degree," another Mayo feature; "The Love Letter," another Gladys Walton picture, and "The Gentleman from America," a second Gibson vehicle.

"Pawned" in Many Leading Theatres

"Pawned," the big J. Parker Read, Jr., production which Select Pictures Corporation are distributing, has started its trip through the theatres of the country by grabbing off bookings in many of the leading houses. It has already started on the Fox Circuit in Greater New York and throughout the East and is firmly planted on a number of equally large circuits in the Middle West and West.

In the advertising and exploitation material gotten out by the Select company, quite naturally considerable play was made on the title. One of the interesting exploitation accessories prepared was a replica in papier mache of a regulation pawnbroker's sign, with the three balls in gilt hanging from a black bracket; the word "Pawned," in gilt on a red panel, is the only lettering on the advertising piece which was designed principally to be suspended from the marquises of theatres in which the attraction was playing.

Papers Gave 'Em Good Reviews

Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle in "One Week of Love," the big Selznick super-special, played the California Theatre, Los Angeles, the week beginning Sunday, November 5, and received excellent reviews in the Los Angeles newspapers, it is stated.

A Touching Scene From Al Lichman Feature, "Rich Men's Wives" Which Is Setting a Good Pace for Independent Productions.

Big Audiences For "Oliver Twist"

A capacity audience greeted every showing of "Oliver Twist," Jackie Coogan's latest First National attraction during its run at the New York Strand, First National says:

On election night particularly, the all-night crowd that waited up for the returns, demonstrated its liking for "Oliver Twist" in such an unmistakable manner that the management of the Strand Theatre was obliged to run a midnight show.

Marion Davies Will Soon Start Next

Marion Davies, Cosmopolitan star, will start work in December on her next picture, "Little Old New York," which will be adapted to the screen by Luther Reed from the stage play by Rida Johnson Young. Sidney Olcott will direct, Robert G. Vignola who directed Miss Davies in "When Knighthood Was in Flower" having gone on a trip around the world.

"Strongheart" Stars in Another Film

"Brawn of the North," second of the Strongheart wonder-dog series to be made by Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin for release by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was released Nov. 13. Like its predecessor, "The Silent Call," it is a story of the frozen north in which the canine star plays the dominating part.

Irene Rich and Lee Shumway play the leading roles with Strongheart. Other players in the cast are: Joseph Barrel, Roger James Manning, Phillip Hubbard, Jean Metcalf and Baby Evangeline Bryant.

In Personal Touch with Its Branches

Goldwyn executives are keeping in close personal touch with the branch exchange offices, their managers and sales force through swings about the country. James E. Grainger, personal representative of F. J. Godsol, president, was no sooner back from a trip, than W. F. Rodgers started out. He visited the Indianapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha offices.

Mr. Rodgers returned early in the week and J. E. Flynn started on a trip that will cover the offices in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Buffalo.

By keeping in such close touch with the branch offices, executives are able to help solve without undue delay the problems of distribution and salesmanship which daily arise.

Mr. Exhibitor:
Ask your Film Company for the
"Thematic Music Cue Sheet"
(Pat. Applied For)
It means more to you than any other accessory. It is the cue sheet that insures a musically perfect picture presentation.

Rotogravure and Patronage

Anything that helps to pull patrons into the house after the lobby has caught their attention is worth using. Anything that will make them remember a coming picture and want to see it when it comes is worth capitalizing.

Moving Picture World put the Rotogravure Section into a practical form with the purpose of giving the exhibitor a lobby service. It isn't merely a series of pictures put in the paper to let you see what the stills are like: it is a working lobby service, ready for your use.

You can get frames into which these pages will go. You can make them for yourself, or have your local carpenter put them up for you.

Don't forget! Anything that helps to impress memory, that gets attention, is useful.

Make use of this service. Hundreds of your brother exhibitors have done so.

"Knighthood" Given Brilliant Openings

Rivaling in brilliancy a first night gathering at the opera are the audiences which are turning out in all the big cities of the country where the now famous Cosmopolitan picture, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," is opening. Limousines gliding up to the theatre doors; rustle of silks and satins, gleam of jewels; all the animated, friendly conversation which one always associates with a big social event—these have been the fitting accompaniments to the opening of the picture in such cities as Los Angeles, Washington, Boston and Atlanta.

The flower of southern aristocracy graced the boxes of the Rialto Theatre in Atlanta, Georgia, on the opening night there. The names of prominent society people who attended took up space in the daily papers almost a column long the next day. The innovation of reserving seats ahead of time as for a legitimate theatrical production is welcomed, as this enables patrons to linger at dinner parties and arrive at the theatre just in time for the performance to begin. The custom is followed in all the cities just as it is in New York.

The opening in Los Angeles was attended by all the notables of the cinema world and the one in Washington was made unusually brilliant by the presence of ambassadors, diplomats and officers of the army and navy as well as cabinet members and their wives.

Theda Bara to Star in "The Easiest Way"

The long awaited announcement of the vehicle to be used for Theda Bara has just been made by David O. Selznick, secretary of Selznick Pictures Corporation, who will supervise the production which is to be the first of a number of Selznick Pictures to be made by the company's newly organized Eastern Producing Unit, independent of the Pacific Coast Unit which has been working in Los Angeles for some time under the direction of Myron Selznick, president of the company.

Miss Bara will star in "The Easiest Way," the famous play by Eugene Walter.

Miss Bara's name was affixed to a Selznick contract many weeks ago. Since that time David Selznick and the Selznick scenario department have been combing the market for a play suited to the star's needs at this particular time. Fully a thousand scripts have been examined. Included in the number were numerous original stories submitted by leading writers for the stage and screen. Others were the scripts of big Broadway successes which were available. In every case some insurmountable difficulty seemed to present itself.

David Belasco has insisted that "The Easiest Way" is America's greatest contribution to the dramatic stage and, in this sentiment he has been cordially supported by many critics and reviewers.

During this long period of selection Miss Bara has been in constant consultation with Mr. Selznick in considering various stories and her enthusiasm over the role of Laura Murdock in "The Easiest Way" is unbounded.

"I am delighted beyond words," said Miss Bara. "'The Easiest Way' is one of my favorite stage plays. I know that I can give my whole heart to the delineation of Laura Murdock and that I will enjoy every minute of the filming of this soul-stirring drama."

Mr. Selznick has already started casting and expects to be able to announce the entire supporting cast within a short time, and he promises that each role will be handled by an artist especially qualified to portray the type.

Selznick Co. Says Phil Is "the Goods"

Phil Selznick is connected with the Select Pictures Corporation. His official job is to keep hitting the high spots where Select are selling pictures, keep the customers happy, and keep the Select field employees up on their toes. For a good many months he has been more than making good on all of these important assignments—and has been doing a lot more.

Phil pulled a great stunt not long ago when he hob-nobbed so successfully with the Governor of the State of Washington that that obliging executive proclaimed a "Smile Week" just about the time Owen Moore in "Love Is an Awful Thing" was playing such cities as Seattle, Tacoma, and Spokane, Wash.

Now Phil has a couple more big pictures in which he is greatly interested—and he's "P. A.—ing" again to beat the band. From far-off Denver comes this interesting wire: "Here is a true press story. My print, 'One Week of Love,' was on Union Pacific train No. 6 that was wreked yesterday near Laramie, Wyoming, killing four and injuring twenty in a smash-up that demolished eleven cars. Miraculous part is that I tried to bribe agent to give me accommodations on the train but he couldn't and so checked print through. Get this angle: First print of special featuring big railroad wreck been in horrible smash-up. Haven't learned yet whether print lost. Great yarn but on the level."

"Enemies of Women" Praised by Ibanez

That the picturization of his latest story, "The Enemies of Women," now being made by Cosmopolitan Productions will be a most magnificent photoplay, following closely his famous story, is the opinion voiced by Blasco Ibanez in a letter sent to Cosmopolitan Productions.

Ibanez's letter reveals the fact that, while the Cosmopolitan Company was making the exteriors of the film in France, the celebrated Spanish author gave up his literary work to live the life of a film actor.

"Lionel Barrymore and Alma Reubens came as the stars," he writes, "and I found the whole company very good. "For a whole week I abandoned my literary work to live the life of a film actor. I got up at 5 o'clock each morning and at 6 o'clock was at Monte Carlo, where I stayed with the company until night and always beside Mr. Alan Corsland, the director, to help on with the work.

"I think they are going to produce a magnificent piece and one which will very much please the public."

The working title of this comedy was "The False Alarm."

Leon J. Rubenstein, now in Boston, has opened an exploitation bureau in the Bean Town for the exploitation of pictures in New England.

Eddie Bonns proved his mettle this week as Goldwyn's exploitation head when he put over a rattling good press yarn in conjunction with the premier showing of "Brothers Under the Skin" at the Capitol Theatre in New York. Every metropolitan newspaper fell for the story which concerned the organization of an organization of men whose wives had got "under their skin."

J. Charles Davis, 2d, assistant to Dr. W. E. Sballenberger, president of Arrow, returned to New York this week after launching an exploitation campaign in Erie, Pa., in connection with showings there of "Night Life in Hollywood" and "Streets of New York."

Frank Fay, who operates the Southwestern Film Corporation of Dallas, Texas, bought from Arrow Film Corporation the following pictures for Texas, Oklahom and Arkansas: Four Peter B. Kynes and six William Fairbanks. The sale was negotiated by Tom Curran, a Special Representative of Arrow Film Corporation.

The Week in Review

BIG names," so called, are seemingly in big demand among independent producers. Today a single glance over the casts of various independent pictures in the course of production will furnish the reader with a fairly good idea concerning the extremes to which these producers are going to secure the services of established and proven box office stars. All-star casts are quite numerous in this particular market.

THAT this stiuation has contributed materially toward winning exhibitor patronage is accepted as most probable, for never before have so many first run dates been recorded for independent pictures as those booked during the past three months. Prospects of last September are materializing effectively, and this because the independent producer is paying as much attention to the box office as he is to story, director, cast and production in general.

PRINCIPAL PICTURES CORPORATION is one of the many firms seeking popular stars. The first was Dorothy Phillips, who stars in that firm's initial release, "The World's a Stage." The services of Miss Phillips were obtained through the courtesy of Associated First National Pictures. But Miss Phillips, says Eastern Manager Irving Lesser, is only the first of a series of internationally famous stars whom that concern will place at the helm of all-star productions to be released independently within the course of the next few months.

EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION has hit upon an interesting idea, namely, that of allowing exhibitors throughout the country to select the cast for the next Daniel Carson Goodman production. We had hoped to publish the rules and regulations governing the contest, but, unfortunately, up to press time no o. k. had been received from the Post Office authorities who are studying the contest. We expect to have this approval next week, however. The idea is a capital one and puts the question of cast, etc., squarely up to the exhibitor.

DR. W. E. SHALLENBERGER, President of Arrow Film Corporation, without a doubt is one of the most effective organizers in the business. The result of his trip about the country, when announced, will bear out this statement. Dr. Shallenberger has progressed with the industry, for the history of the latter has written his career as a motion picture executive. Associated with Dr. Shallenberger are a string of pioneer exchangemen, who should play no small part within the next year in making Arrow Film Corporation one of the most formidable and powerful distributing organizations in the business.

Sales on "Women Men Marry"

That Edward Dillon's first independent production "Women Men Marry" has hit a responsive chord in picture circles is evidenced by the fact that two of the biggest territories were sold during the past week. New York and Northern New Jersey were sold to the Renowned Pictures, Inc., while Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey were purchased by Metro Exchange at Philadelphia. The first foreign sale to be consummated was for Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania, which was signed by the Super Selected Pictures of Sydney, Australia.

Business Improves As Demand for Quality Independent Pictures Shows Big Increase

Reports from all parts of the country on independent productions indicate a decided improvement in their attraction value. Questionnaires sent out to representative house managers by this department this week brought out some interesting facts why independent productions today are making such splendid showings. The most important reason for the current popularity of independent productions among exhibitors is attributed to the presence of "big names;" another is the use of established stories handled by capable directors.

Particularly remarkable is the showing independent pictures are now making in the Middlewest which, until a year or so ago, was virtually closed. The same situation prevails in Philadelphia and vicinity, which was never in better condition. This statement in regards to the eastern Pennsylvania territory is substantiated by such exchangemen as Lou Burman of Independent Film Corporation; Tony Luchese of De Luxe Pictures Corporation; Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece Film Attractions; Dave Segal of Royal Pictures Corporation and others, who report their gross business to date this season equally in many instances their entire gross for a complete season.

In the South business for independents has shown a very encouraging leap upward. Arthur Bromberg, who has expanded his interests so that they embrace every section of the South, never was better satisfied with conditions. The booking situation there has seemingly improved. The Northwest, too, has improved materially, for reports from there indicate a number of new records to the credit of independent pictures. In California,, the Southwest and the Rocky Mountain States, business is now at its best, which in many cases ranks better than that done prior to the outbreak of the war and during the world strife.

The Middlewest, according to Chicago reports, is using up all the big pictures with the biggest demand from the smaller and neighborhood theatres showing a decided popularity for western and outdoor features. New York State exchanges are reporting satisfactory business, only in this section the bigger productions are getting the more profitable plays. First run houses are bidding high for such features. The syndicate booking situation in New York finds the problem in the metropolitan district unchanged, although business is good. New England exchanges are getting better dates and more money for quality productions, which are in big demand.

Special Showing Nov. 18 for Amalgamated's Initial

Twenty independent distributors scattered over the United States franchise holders in the Amalgamated Exchanges of America, Inc., will be in New York City Sunday, November 18, to witness the first showing of the "Woman In Chains," the first production to be made under the banner of the new company. William P. Burt directed the picture.

Those who are expected to attend the premier showing are J. C. Friedman, Celebrated Players Film Corp., Chicago; R. Lynch, Metro Film Exchange, Philadelphia; Herman Rifkin, Amalgamated Exchanges of New England, Boston; H. A. Lande and Wm. Finkel, Quality Film Corp., Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Cleveland; P. Oletsky, Federated Film Exchange, Baltimore; Emmick and Edmunds, Progress Features, San Francisco; Hurlbut and Saxe, Favorite Film, Inc., Detroit; Lennon and Sheffield, Greater Features, Inc., Salt Lake City; Al Kahn, Supreme Pictures Corp., Omaha; R. M. Savini, Amalgamated Savini Films, Atlanta, and Chas. Stephenson of Stephenson's Attractions, Canada.

Principal Will Follow Dorothy Phillips With Equally Big Names

Six of the leading stars of the screen, all established and now associated with national producing organizations on the Coast, will appear in productions that Principal Pictures Corporation will release foremost exchanges throughout the country. Irving Lesser, Eastern manager of Principal Pictures, will leave in two weeks for the Coast where he will go into conference with his two associates, Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg. The latter two have completed arrangements for the services of the star, but pending the arrival of Mr. Lesser no definite announcement as to the identity of the stars, all of whom hold contracts that do not expire until the first of the year.

The November release of Principal Pictures will be an Elinor Glyn picture, "The World's A Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips and an all-star cast including Bruce McRae. In December the firm will release the Irving Cummings special, "Chicago Sal," with Alice Lake, Milton Sills and an all-star cast. Production on the third picture will be started next week. Mr. Rosenberg, who is in charge of production on the Coast, is casting for this picture this week. Definite announcement as to the nature of the third release will be made next week.

It is the plan of Principal Pictures Corporation to produce pictures based on established and popular works with the direction by capable directors and a cast of names with which exhibitors can properly sell Principal Pictures to the public.

Detroit Scores Big Success; Live Independent News

DETROIT—(Special)—A great exploitation stunt was pulled off in connection with the showing of "Rags to Riches" at the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, last week. Over 2,000 newsboys were the guests of one of the city's most prominent jewelers at a special screening on the morning of November 4, which had been arranged through the courtesy of Phil Gleichman. Headed by a brass hand, and the famous Warner Brothers' float, the kids paraded from the jewelry store to the Broadway-Strand. Many of the youngsters carried banners announcing that they were going to see "Rags to Riches" today, and that the public could see it all next week.

Dave Mundstuk, proprietor of the Exclusive Film Company, Detroit, has purchased the seven-reel feature, "Notoriety," for the State of Michigan. Bookings on the feature have been started already.

Ray Branch has taken over the Michigan distribution for "Ten Nights in a Barroom," which was handled by Joe Horowitz up to the time of his death, a few weeks ago.

Sam Saxe, representing L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North, was in Detroit last week exploiting "Notoriety." Sam was in conference with a number of representative first run exhibitors in the territory.

"Secrets of Paris" Proves a Good Draw at Box Offices

Reports pouring into New York from various sections of the country on the Whitman Bennett special, "Secrets of Paris," being distributed through Charles C. Burr's Affiliated Distributors, Inc., indicate that that production is meeting with much success. To date this picture has five records to its credit with every indication that the all-star cast will be instrumental in adding further laurels to it. This week the special played Edward Fay's Theatre in Providence, R. I., the Monday opening being a sellout at each of the four showings, with Tuesday's business, after commendable reviews at the hands of the critics, holding up well.

This picture is being cleverly exploited not only by Mr. Burr, but also by the local distributors, who report heavy bookings. The cast includes Lew Cody, Gladys Hulette, William (Buster) Collier, Jr., Montague Love, Dolores Cassinnelli, J. Barney Sherry, Rose Coghlan and Harry Sothern.

Alexander To Handle New Series

Alexander Film Corporation will distribute a series of two-reel pictures taken from articles appearing in the Woman's Home Companion. The pictures will be made by the Aralma Film Company, which is now working at the Estree studios. Gertrude B. Lane, editor of the publication, will each month select a leading article from the magazine to be adapted to screen entertainment.

Sales on "Secrets of Paris"

Announcement was made this week that rights on the Burr-Whitman production, "Secrets of Paris," with an all-star cast, had been sold to William Skirboll, of Skirboll Brothers' Gold Seal Productions of Cleveland, and Joe Skirboll, of Associated First National of Pittsburgh.

Miss Du Point Signs with Warners

LOS ANGELES—(Special).—Exclusive announcement was made to the representative of the Independent Department of Moving Picture World here that the Warner Brothers had signed Miss Du Pont, formerly with Universal, to play a leading role in "Brass." Miss Du Pont is well known, having starred in her own productions and won considerable favorable comment because of her excellent work in Universal's "Foolish Wives."

Booking Plan Aids Getting High Fees

While the belief prevailed that with the incorporation of the independent exhibitors' booking syndicate rentals would come down with the latter favored, indications now point to a much complicated situation, for independents in New York are getting bigger rental fees and more choice dates than ever before. This situation is directly attributable to the condition resultant from the organization of independent exhibitors to combat the syndicate of circuit bookers. The contest has, contrary to the expectations of exhibitors, worked to the advantage of distributors, for the two rival factions are now bidding for pictures, in many cases the bids of the rivals being away above the prices set by distributors.

That both sides are cognizant of this fact is well known among New York exhibitors, and steps are now being taken to remedy the situation. Meanwhile, however, independent productions are getting spleudid showings in the metropolitan and Northern New Jersey territories. Just what the future status of the rental situation will be as a result of action contemplated by both the independents and Keith-Moss-Loew Proctor-Fox interests remains to be seen.

Business in general has taken a decided leap upward since the elections, according to figures received from various sections of the Empire State. Particularly true is this in New York City, Buffalo and northern New Jersey. Northeru New Jersey exhibitors are overlooking none of the bigger independent productions, exploiting these to the limit in every particular.

Charles S. Goetz, manager of the New York W-B exchange, announced this week that 75 per cent. of the exhibitors in Greater New York had contracted to show Warner Brothers' initial 1922-23 production, "Rags To Riches" with Wesley Barry.

Several Broadway theatres have entered bids with Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, for the second Al Lichtman production, "Shadows," starring Lon Chaney and a well-known cast. Both Joe Plunkett, of the Strand, and Roxie Rothafel, of the Capitol, want to book this splendid production.

"The World's A Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips and based on an Elinor Glyn story, will be the first release of the newly established Renown Film Exchange. This is the initial release of the newly formed Principal Pictures Corporation, of which Irving Lesser is eastern manager.

Charles Seeley, of the Arrow Film Exchange of New York City, autoed to Providence, R. I., this week to make arrangements for the world premier showing in that city of a new picture, the title of which he will disclose in two weeks.

Bobby North, of the Apollo Exchange in New York, is authority for the statement that his exchange expects to record the biggest gross business in its history during the current month. "The Curse of Drink" is proving to be one of the biggest bets this exchange has distributed in New Jersey.

Clever exploitation is putting over the initial Betty Blythe picture, "How Women Love," in great shape in the metropolitan zone. The entire Chadwick organization, Merit Film Exchange, is working on this picture with the result that exhibitors appear to be very enthusiastic over returns.

Morris Fitzer, owner of the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., found "Rags To Riches" such a profitable proposition that he has arranged with the Buffalo W-B Exchange to show the entire Warner program at his house during 1922-23.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" Sets Records

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—(Special)—A New Bedford (Mass.) made production, supervised by Elmer Clifton, is reviving interest in big cinematographic pictures in this city. On Monday this special entered its second week with the advance so great that it will not none if the picture is forced to remain over for a third week. Playing the Shubert-Majestic, a 3,700-seat theatre playing Shubert attractions, and considered one of the "toughest" stands in the country, this special, "Down to the Sea in Ships," is shattering records at high class prices. The difference between this picture and others that have been tried out here is that "Down to the Sea in Ships" is getting both the attendance and money with everybody leaving the house pleased and satisfied. The local press has loudly commended the picture.

No distribution arrangements have yet been made for this picture, which is owned and was financed by a New Bedford millionaire. Elsewhere in this issue appears an exclusive review of this splendid drawing card.

BOSTON—(Special) — Melodramatic productions are seemingly big draws and in demand among exhibitors, for the L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North special, "The Curse of Drink," opened at the former legit house, the Globe Theatre, on Monday afternoon, grossing the best Monday business that house has done in a long time. The picture was cleverly exploited with the show folks taking considerable newspaper space. Indications are that this picture will outdraw, financially and otherwise, any other picture shown at that house.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—"More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," the C. B. C. initial "Big Six" release, got a good break Monday at Fay's Theatre here, despite an unusually strong vaudeville which some believed would smother the value of the picture as a draw. However, after the first day's show the picture held them in and the house advertisements featured the picture.

BALTIMORE, MD.—"Chain Lightning," a Ben Wilson-Arrow picture topped the combination bill at Loew's Hippodrome this week. With the racing season here at its height the picture was given a fairly good play at the opening as a result of the 100 per cent. prominence given the film in all advertising.

FINLEYVILLE, PA. — (Special) — The Olympic Theatre recently played Arrow's "Ten Nights in a Barroom," released in this section by the Standard Film Exchange. This town has a population of 656 persons and 653 paid admissions were recorded at the theatre.

HARRISBURGH, ARK.—(Special)—Equity's "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" was shown to the biggest crowd that ever witnessed a show in this town when it topped the bill at Brown's Theatre here, according to Mrs. W. L. Brown, the owner.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—(Special)—The Arrow Jack Hoxie Westerns are playing to wonderful business in this territory, according to exhibitor reports. In fact, Westerns seem to be in big demand, particularly in the smaller towns.

"The Flying Dutchman," Chester Beecroft Film, To Be State Righted

Announcement was made this week by Chester Beecroft of 501 Fifth avenue, New York City, that "The Phanton Ship" or "The Flying Dutchman," having been finally completed and cut, will be distributed on the independent market. This is the production of which much has been heard in film circles during the past few months. Hopp Hadley's organization will handle the distribution on this picture.

Mr. Beecroft announced that a muscial score adapted from the opera, "The Flying Dutchman," founded on the same story by Capt. Marryat, has been completed. The opera was written by Richard Wagner. Mr. Beecroft characterizes his picture as "the most impressive and biggest sea story ever made."

"Shadows" Getting Big Dates

Evidences of the manner in which exhibitors are booking "Shadows," the second of the Preferred Pictures to be released through the Al Lichtman Corporation, have reached New York in the form of contracts from a number of important first-run exhibitors. The Rialto Theatre in Washington, will show the picture in two weeks. Out on the coast, a week engagement has been contracted for the big Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles. The Franklin in Oakland, Cal., has also closed for the picture.

In Cleveland, the first run will be vested in the Hippodrome; in Newark, N. J., in the Strand; in San Francisco in the Strand. The Strand in Hartford, Conn., will first show "Shadows" in that city. The Modern and Beacon theatres in Boston have both booked the picture and will show it simultaneously early in December. Circuit bookings are coming in en masse from various of the exchanges.

Ralph Ince Completes "Success"

Work of cutting "Success," the big special feature directed by Ralph Ince for Murray W. Garsson, Inc., will be begun next week. The production, adapted from the Broadway stage hit of the same name, has been over three months in the making. The original time schedule was abandoned and while the production cost is said by its producers to be practically double that estimated for the picture, the results are said to be worth it.

"Rags to Riches," Backed with Clever Exploitation, Scoring Big

"Rags to Riches," the Warner Brothers picture featuring Wesley Barry, is said to be blazing a trail of approval throughout the country, and manifestations of this fact are evidenced in the many telegrams being received at the Warner offices. The Warner Brothers transcontinental float advertising their seven forthcoming productions is said to have aided in putting over a big campaign for the Broadway-Strand, Detroit.

Two floats have been built by the Warner's to advertise their productions. One is en route to the coast, and the other is aiding exhibitors put over the picture in the east. Phil Gleichman, of the Broadway-Strand, wired the Warner offices as follows: "Opened Rags to Riches to absolute capacity all day long including supper show. Big opposition at other houses. Despite this fact remarkable business due to unusual picture and wonderful exploitation accessories plus aid your exchange furnished. Your coast to coast float a master stroke in publicity has served to enhance popularity of Warner Brothers product in Detroit."

M. Fitzer, manager of the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, wired: "Rags to Riches holds my box-office record for the Empire Theatre. I want to thank the Warner Brothers for their wonderful co-operation in sending a publicity man and their float to Syracuse to help exploit the picture. It's a knockout. Let's have more of them."

According to reports from the exchanges handling the Warner productions, many first run theatres throughout the country have contracted for the Barry picture. The story deals with a pampered youngster who longs for adventure and desires to be a regular boy. In the supporting cast are Niles Welch, Ruth Renick, Russell Simpson, Minna D. Redman, Richard Tucker and Eulalie Jensen.

"Rags to Riches" is a Harry Rapf production, and it was directed by Wallace Worsley. Will Nigh and Walter De Leon wrote the story.

Start "Poor Men's Wives"

LOS ANGELES — (Special) — Agnes Christine Johnston and Frank Dazey have started work on the story for B. P. Schulberg and Preferred Pictures. According to the report the story will be entitled "Poor Men's Wives," serving as a sequel to the first Al Lichtman release, "Rich Men's Wives." Gasnier, who made the latter picture, will in all probability direct this one.

PROVIDENCE, R. I (Special)—What developed into one of the best Election Week attractions booked at the Victory Theatre here by Manager Matt Rielly is the credit belonging to "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned," which helped register one of the biggest weeks this house has had, judging from the gross of the first four days' business.

Pittsburgh Has Many New Faces

PITTSBURGH—Several New York film men came to this city late last week looking over local conditions and visiting nearby cities to ascertain the possibilities of establishing an exchange here. These men are in communication with local business men, not interested in the film business, but returned on Monday to New York without having reached any definite decision as to their future plans.

Manager Bill Weiland, of Standard Film Exchange here, has quite a job on his hands. In addition to the Standard product he is also working on Second National pictures, which pictures that exchange took over last week.

C. A. Stoltz, of Vimy Film Corporation, is lining up new product for this territory.

The showing of Simeral's "Ten Nights In a Barroom" in this territory is creating considerable discussion.

Joe Lefko, of Federated Film Exchange and Al Lichtman Exchange, is experiencing the best season in the history of his exchange, with bookings on the second Lichtman special, "Shadows," coming in in record fashion.

Joe Young is now with H. C. Simeral concentrating on Arrow productions which this exchange is handling.

Quality Film Corporation will distribute twelve Amalgamated productions in this territory. The first release is "Madonna and Chains," which local rumor has it has been changed to "Woman and Chains."

New Features Handled By Second National

Five new pictures have been acquired by Second National Pictures Corporation. The first of these, "Wasted Lives," has been completed by the Mission Film Corporation and the second, "The Barefoot Trail," is now in production on the Coast. Second National has closed a contract with Mission Film Corporation to release the entire output of that firm.

Carstensen With Garsson

R. A. Carstensen, it was announced last week by Murray W. Garsson, has been named auditor for Murray W. Garsson, Inc. Mr. Carstensen is a veteran in every angle of the film business, his experience dating back to the old Reliance and Majestic companies and Triangle Film Corp. He has also been associated with Charles Miller, Hobart Henley, S. L. Rothapfel and others.

NEW STUNTS REVEALED IN "BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED"

An unusual number of advertising accessories are said to have been devised for the Warner Brothers production of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," featuring Marie Prevost. The picture was directed by William A. Seiter, and it was adapted for the screen by Olga Printzlau.

An eight-page broadside press sheet containing novel ideas for exploitation and publicity purposes have been compiled by the Warner publicity department. In addition to the many angles of publicity linking the name of F. Scott Fitzgerald, conceded to be one of the most popular of present day authors, the lithographs and the advertising novelties are declared to be distinctly out of the beaten track.

The lithographs were especially drawn by Bennett Prival, a German poster artist, who is said to have injected into the work a process that has never been used in this country. The new technique used by Prival has the peculiarity of bringing out the colors of the posters with exceptional brilliancy under artificial light, while at the same time retaining their original beauty under normal daylight condition.

For exploitation purposes exhibitors will have at their disposal what is declared to be a unique telephone doll in striking colors, with regular billing matter and space on bottom for theatre name, suitable for use on all telephones. The other advertising accessories include a series of three window cut-outs of original design. To carry out the idea of the novel the exact reproduction of cover design on the book has been made into a door knob hanger, a sticker, and it has also been used to adorn the front page of a herald.

The complete cast in support of Miss Prevost includes Kenneth Harlan, Harry Myers, Louise Fazenda, Tully Marshall, Cleo Ridgeley, Walter Long, Parker McConnell, Emmett King, Kathleen Key, Charles McHugh, Clarence Burton and George Kuwa.

Will State Right "After Six Days"

The publicity accorded the recent engagement of "After Six Days" at English's Opera House in Indianapolis will be converted to the benefit of all buyers who acquire this feature version of the Old Testament for road show purposes. All of the material used in the lobby of the Indianapolis house, including enlargements of newspaper criticisms, oil paintings, banners, illustrated cards, poster cut outs, photographs, etc., will be duplicated intact and placed in sets at the disposal of each purchaser who desires to inaugurate the picture in his territory with an opening similar to the English showing. This method will save considerable time and expense on the part of the exchange and afford the use of a splendid lobby.

The same method will be pursued in giving the buyer the opportunity to use the stunts, newspaper advertisements and stories which proved of advantage in Indianapolis. In addition, a series of letters secured from leading public officials and people in all walks of life, commending the picture, will be turned over to each exchange, in order that these letters may pave the way for the securing of similar ones in each territory. It is believed that this is the first time that all of this material on a pre-release engagement has been made available for the use of the independent exchangeman. This policy will be carried out by Weiss Brothers' Art class Pictures Corporation in the disposal of "After Six Days."

Joe Brandt Lands Effective Buyers for "Big Six" Series

Actual sold territory on the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation series of Six Box Office Winners, of which "More to Be Pitied" is already running big throughout the country, and the second "Only a Shopgirl" has just been completed, hit the ninety-three per cent mark this week, and negotiations are pending on the remainder that will close the territories one hundred per cent within the week.

Joe Brandt, this week put the finishing touch to a trip to several of the key cities, by personally completing negotiations on the entire six features that comprise the series with Superior Screen Service of Salt Lake City, and with Southern States Film of Atlanta and Dallas, for their respective territories.

Both these sales are important, as both these territorial holders bought the franchise to a large group of states. Superior will handle the features in Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico and Southern Idaho.

In purchasing these features for his territory, which comprises North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas, Oscar Oldknow, head of Southern States, told Joe Brandt that he had never received so many inquiries for a series of pictures as he had before he bought the C. B. C. Series. He told Mr. Brandt that because of the great number of inquiries the C. B. C. campaign in the Oldknow territories elicited, he is certain he will have his principal cities booked and ready to play the pictures immediately, even in the face of previous bookings.

Big Pictures Draw in South

ATLANTA—(Special)—R. M. Savini, of Savini Films, Inc., Atlanta, who has secured southeastern distribution rights to Amalgamated Exchanges of America output, is planning an intensive publicity campaign in behalf of the new releases, starting with "The Madonna in Chains."

Enterprise Distributing Corporation has arranged a nation-wide tie-up with music dealers on "Love's Old Sweet Song," the theme of their big winner, "Flesh and Blood," starring Lon Chaney. Through a coupon, to be distributed at the theatres presenting the picture, patrons may secure a copy of the song at some local music store. The song is a special edition, giving advertising on the production of "Flesh and Blood," and sells at popular price. This is the most gigantic tie-up ever attempted by a state's right exchange in the South.

Arthur C. Bromberg, who has recently launched "Progress Pictures Corporation," with offices in the Educational-Bromberg exchanges in New Orleans, Atlanta and Charlotte, held a sales conference the past week in Atlanta, attended by H. H. Everett, manager of the Charlotte office; R. I. Robinson, manager of the New Orleans office, and salesmen R. J. Ingram, Jr., F. H. Kraby and B. T. Burkhalter.

Dr. J. Edgar Banks, celebrated archaeologist and producer of the Sacred Films, will hereafter produce independently under the brand of Seminole Films, with studio at Eustis, Florida.

J. J. Rogers, of Enterprise Distributing Corporation sales staff, was winner of a beautiful leather bag offered in a recent sales drive on the Richard Talmadge productions, controlled in eleven States by Enterprise.

Harry Rapf Completes Cast For Warner Brothers' "Brass"; Newsy Bits From Studios on the Coast

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Harry Rapf, the independent producer who has turned out "Rags to Riches" for Warner Brothers this season, announced this week that he had engaged the complete cast for his big screen version of Charles G. Norris' novel, "Brass," which Sidney Franklin will direct. The players engaged by Producer Rapf include the following: Marie Prevost, who is under contract to him and who recently completed work in another Warner special, F. Scott Fitzgerald's "Beautiful and Damned" and "Little Heroes of the Street;" Harry Meyers, Helen Ferguson, Irene Rich and Pat O'Malley. Julien Josephson adapted "Brass" for the screen. He is also writing the screen version of Sinclair Lewis' "Main Street."

Phil Goldstone, who is producing the Richard Talmadge pictures and a series of melodramatic productions, announced here this week that he will release a series of six pictures, starring Snowy Baker, the Australian. The first picture will be entitled "Pals," in which Baker's famous horse, Boomerang, plays an important role. Howard M. Mitchell will direct. He formerly was with Fox.

The second Phil Goldstone melodramatic picture to follow "Deserted At the Altar" is now in production. No title has as yet been selected, however. Phil Goldstone is supervising the production, the cast of which he is guarding as a secret.

The print of the first "Fatty" Karr comedy which Franklyn E. Backer, of East Coast Productions, will State right, is on its way East and should be in New York some time this week. It is entitled "Weight For Me," starring the heavy comedian whom Director Bruce Mitchell characterizes as "'Fatty' Arbuckle's successor."

"Robin Hood Junior," the first release of the Frankie Lee series, which Clarence Bricker is directing here, is well under way and will be ready some time late next month.

The third Ben Wilson picture for release through Arrow Film Corporation, has been completed and is entitled "Spawn of the Desert," starring William Fairbanks. Lewis King directed the picture under the personal supervision of Mr. Wilson.

Louis Gasnier has completed Gilbert Emery's screenized story, "The Hero," for B. P. Schulberg, of Preferred Pictures Corporation. This picture will follow "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," which is slated for a trade showing in New York this week, according to word sent to the local studio by Al Lichtman. In the cast are Barbara La Mar, Gaston Glass and John Sainpolis.

According to reports current in independent producing circles here, Bernie Fineman will shortly start production on another picture. A report received here by one of his associates from New York had it that he had purchased the screen rights to a popular story.

Sam and Jack Warner are busy at the Warner studios arranging for new productions which have not yet been announced, but the production of which brought Harry B. Warner, President of Warner Brothers, to the Coast for several weeks.

Edith Roberts, who worked in "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," is in New York now appearing in a new picture being made there and in which she will be given an important role.

Dorothy Phillips' Principal Contract Officially O. K.'d

As a consequence of a two-day conference held between Irving Lesser, eastern manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, and executives of Associated First National Exhibitors' Circuit this week, in New York, final arrangements were made for the starring and exploitation of Dorothy Phillips in the initial Principal production, "The World's a Stage," based on the latest story of Elinor Glyn. Under the agreement effected as a result of these conferences, Principal Pictures Corporation is authorized to utilize star and exploit the star's name, although announcement that the star's services were available by "arrangement with Associated First National," to whom Miss Phillips is under contract.

Not until after the Associated First National executives were made acquainted with the high class calibre of the production and story was the necessary permission for use and exploitation of the star's name secured. Those who have seen the picture are loud in their praise of it.

Goldstone Sale

Phil Goldstone, Inc., in a statement announced the sale of the first series of Richard Talmadge pictures for the Denver and Seattle territories to Arrow Photoplays, Inc., of Denver; Illinois and Indiana to Frank Zambreno, of Progress Exchange, and Ohio to Western Pictures Company.

Hopp Hadley Has New Boy Prodigy

Through a contract with Nordisk Films, Hopp Hadley has secured for his Producers Service Company a new and elaborately staged Charles Dickens picture starring a boy prodigy who, according to many in film circles, gives promise of causing something of a sensation because of his clever handling of strong emotional roles.

A new version of Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations" was selected by the producers to introduce the clever little artist to screen audiences because the role of little "Pip," around which the story revolves, was thought to give many opportunities for emotional acting by a child. A second picture of like elaborate handling in which the same boy-star appears will follow "Great Expectations" in a few weeks.

The new Dickens production is in six reels and took months to make because of the amount of work to put into the old Havisham mansion with its elegant furnishings showing the ravages of time called for by Dickens mystifying plot. According to Mr. Hadley, the hit of the new offering is the emotional acting of a slip of lad with raven black hair and two enormous black eyes out of which he can make the tears chase each other in rivulets as effectively as the most experienced star.

"Aside from the production: the acting, the mounting and the photography, all of which are excellent," said Mr. Hadley, "little 'Buddy' Martin in the role of Pip will attract wide attention because of the rare ability he shows as an actor of serious roles. Prodigies appear in musical circles at rare intervals, and that this little fellow is a prodigy in the realm of drama is my firm conviction.

Jossey Forms Another Progress Exchange For Arrow Pictures

Another Progress Exchange has been established. This one will be located in Cleveland with another to be followed shortly after the organization of that one, in Cincinnati. J. S. Jossey, for several years special representative of Arrow Film Corporation, this week resigned from that office to take over the personal management of the Progress Pictures Company of Ohio. The new company has been incorporated for $150,000. The exchange will be located in the Film Building, Cleveland. Mr. Jossey is president and E. C. Fielder, vice president and general manager. Mr. Fielder recently resigned from Associated Exhibitors to devote all his time to this new company which will handle features, serials and short subjects in that State.

The new exchange enters the market with the following Arrow Film Corporation product: "Streets of New York," "Night Life In Hollywood," "The Innocent Cheat," "The Splendid Lie," "Love, Hate and a Woman," three James Oliver Curwoods, "Chain Lightning," ten westerns produced by Ben Wilson, the William Fairbanks series of western features, "A Motion To Adjourn," "Back To Yellow Jacket," "One-Eighth Apache," "The Blue Fox," a serial; "The Cub Reporter" and a series of 12 special comedies featuring Eddie Lyons.

Arrow Film Corporation will not have to entertain any fear for lack of distribution, judging by the way in which Progress Exchanges are being formed all over the country. Arrow has affected permanent affiliation in virtually every territory. Some of the exchanges affiliated with the firm and which will handle Arrow productions include: the Progress Pictures Exchange in Boston, De Luxe Motion Pictures Exchanges in Philadelphia and Baltimore, Arrow Film Exchange in New York, which may change its name to Progress Pictures Exchange; Progress Pictures Corporation in Chicago, Indianapolis, Atlanta, Los Angeles and San Francisco. By the time Dr. W. E. Shallenberger returns from the West, whither he returned this week following a brief trip to New York, it is expected that Arrow will have tied up its product in this country 100 per cent.

Just when Graphic Film Corporation, of which Ivan Abramson is the head, will start production on the second feature is problematical, although several months ago it was stated that that firm would release at least eight pictures a year. The country is not yet 100 per cent. sold on the first release, "Wildness of Youth," starring Mary Anderson and an all-star cast.

Failure to obtain product is the reason attributed to the failure of Lou Rogers, formerly of Rialto Productions, Inc., to go through with his announced intentions of affecting a lineup of co-operative exchanges throughout the country. Several producers were approached with propositions, but none of them were signed insofar as is known.

It is reliably reported in well-informed circles that "Rich Men's Wives," the first Preferred Picture, proved a "clean-up" for Al Lichtman exchanges throughout the country. The gross rentals on this picture up to date exceeded the expectations of the most generous exchangemen. The second picture, "Shadows," has been released, while the third feature, "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," was shown to the trade this week. The fourth release, "The Hero," was completed several weeks ago, and a print of that picture is now said to be on its way to Al Lichtman's office.

David Segal, of Philadelphia, came to New York this week and joined his brother, Harry Segal, of Boston, and Herman Jans, of Jans Pictures, New York, in an effort to obtain Amalgamated Exchange franchises. All claim that they are entitled to the franchises, which, according to announcement, were granted to Metro Exchange in Philadelphia, Eastern Feature Films Corporation in Boston and Renown Pictures Exchange in New York.

Charles C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., is having no trouble lining up local exchanges to handle the local distribution of his pictures. Affiliated is handling the distribution of the Whitman Bennett special, "Secrets of Paris," and this week Mr. Burr signed to distribute another well-known picture made by a Coast producer. He also has two other productions now being made, one by Edgar Lewis, as yet untitled and another one, "Luck," starring Johnny Hines.

The return of Joe Brandt, of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation from a tour of the country this week brought forth the interesting statement from that live and enterprising firm executive that the independents throughout the country are exploiting their wares as they never did before. He made it known, too, that he is having no trouble getting the proper exchange connections to distribute his "Big Six" features, the second one of which, "Only A Shop Girl," is now being released.

Business in New England On the Boom

BOSTON—(Special)—At no other time in the history of the independent market has there been such a great demand for independent pictures in this section as there is at present. Moscow Films Exchange, of which Sam Moscow is the head, reports record-breaking business on his "Sure Fire Flint" and "Secrets of Paris." The latter is playing to one of the best weeks experienced by Edward Fay's theatre in Providence, R. I., where on Monday, opening day, it was necessary to turn away several thousand patrons who clamored to get in. This is the house which several weeks ago did a land office business on the Johnny Hines' special.

Virtually every important circuit in New England is booking the Al Lichtman productions in this section, according to reports given this department's representative this week.

Gus Meyers, exploitation director for Equity Pictures Corporation, spent several days visiting Sam Grand at his Federated Exchange here last week.

Bert Lubin is in Worcester, where the premier showing of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" will be held at the Bancroft Hotel within two weeks.

"Down To the Sea In Ships," the Elmer Clifton production, financed by New Bedford, Mass., capital, started its second week engagement at the Shubert-Majestic Theatre in Providence, R. I., Monday. This is the picture that played to 13,000 in a single week at Fall River, a record attendance for that town, which is but a few miles north of New Bedford.

BOOK AT EDUCATIONAL EXCHANGES

Clever Prologue for "Notoriety"

L. Lawrence Weber, the prominent Broadway producer, and one of the country's leading legitimate showmen for the past generation, has brought his dramatic experience into play by arranging a realistic prologue for the independent feature which he and Bobby North are releasing, "Notoriety," directed by Will Nigh.

The prologue does not duplicate any scene in the picture, as this would be needless repetition. It plays up the vital importance of notoriety as the great human ambition and weakness of the day. It is symbolic in treatment, and consists of four short episodes, each five minutes in length. The prologue follows:

The first scene opens on a supper-table with four members of the family reading the evening paper after finishing their meal. The daughter reads aloud: "I see where that girl who left college to become a waitress is marrying a count." The stage grows dark and the scene described in the newspaper headline is reproduced on the stage, with the four members of the family now taking the roles called for in the marriage episode. A waitress is seen taking off her apron and slipping on a lavish gown and hat, just as a richly dressed count appears in a high hat and tuxedo to escort her to the wedding. The stage is dark again, and after the necessary interval, the family scene is repeated. This time the son of the family reads from the evening paper: "Millicent Van Nest Engaged to Football Star." The stage grows dark again and the scene referred to in the headline is enacted, with the son taking the part of the football hero, clad in the regalia of that sport. The society belle, who is the daughter in the family scene, is accompanied by her mother and father, and rushes down the landing of a grandstand to meet her gridiron hero.

The scene changes back again to the supper-table, and the father reads this time: "Broker Elopes With Private Secretary." The scene shifts and the episode in question is enacted, the father taking the part of the broker, and the daughter impersonating the secretary. He is making preparations to leave, and is seen packing his bag, while the toot of an automobile horn is heard without. The lights go out and the family scene opens up once more. The mother now reads: "Tenement Girl Swears Falsely to Society Crime." The mother reads further and the details of the story are those of the picture, "Notoriety."

She does not read very far, when she suddenly notices that her daughter is missing. "Where's Kate?" she asks anxiously. The father and son turn around and are also surprised. Kate is gone. The mother calls out for her, but there is no answer. A note is discovered on the table, left by the daughter. It reads: "I am tired of being ignored and unnoticed. I want to be famous. I want to be talked about. I want to be popular. Other girls gain notoriety by committing something sensational, and I want to do the same. When you hear from me again, it will be through the newspapers. I'll make everybody talk about me, and then I'll come back. I'll be somebody then."—Kate.

The prologue ends in consternation on the faces of the family, and the last thing seen is the mother tearing the newspaper to bits. As above outlined, the prologue on "Notoriety" will carry the message home. It will make the audience realize that the picture they are about to see is based on actual events of daily life.

Picturesque scenes from initial Edward Dillon independent production, "Women Men Marry," starring E. K. Lincoln. Distributed on State Right basis by Truart Pictorial, Inc.

Jas. Kirkwood, Doris Kenyon, and All-Star Cast in New Edgar Film; Live News From Eastern Studios

As was exclusively published in this department two weeks ago, Edgar Lewis will make a series of high class productions for distribution through Affiliated Distributors, Inc., of which Charles C. Burr is president. Production on the first picture started late last week at the Glendale, L. I., studios. The company was out on location all this week with Edgar Lewis supervising the entire production, which is expected will take about seven weeks to produce.

The cast is one of the costliest engaged by an eastern producer for an independent picture. The cast is headed by James Kirkwood, one of the best liked leading men in the business. Co-starred with him will be Doris Kenyon, who created such a wonderful role opposite Johnny Hines in "Sure-Fire Flint." Edmund Breese, Robert Edeson and little Russell Griffen also will appear in this production.

Mrs. Rudolph Valentino (Jean Acker), who is co-starred in "Woman In Chains," the first Amalgamated picture, completed recently at the New Rochelle, N. Y., studios, has filed suit in court in Los Angeles, seeking the right to use the name of her former husband and star. Arthur Butler Graham, counsel for Valentino, in New York this week, said that he anticipated counsel for the star in Los Angeles will oppose the action.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 14, was an unusually busy one at the Glendale, L. I., studio for the first of the big sets in the next Johnny Hines special, "Luck," which Charley Burr will distribute. The set represented a village square with several hundred extras participating in the action that ensued. With Johnny Hines in this production also appear Polly Moran, Charles Murray and Flora Finch. This is the production that will be ready for release on January 1.

Charley Burr this week made an effort to sign Mary Carr, the "motherliest mother" of the screen, for one of his productions now being made, but the deal fell through, despite rumors that Mr. Burr had signed her. However, Mr. Burr, impressed by the splendid work of Russell Griffen in "Sure-Fire Flint," signed that boy star for two years with an option for his services for two additional years.

Will Nigh has completed the story for his second feature, which L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North will distribute, and he is now completing his cast, which will be an all-star affair, headed by Maurine Powers, who was starred in Nigh's first feature, "Notoriety."

Production was started this week at the Estree studio in New York on the first of a series of two-reels that Aralma Film Company will make. This concern is financed, it is reported, by the Woman's Home Companion, a magazine, from whose stories the pictures will be adapted.

In all probability the title selected for the second Daniel Carson Goodman story, which that producer was to make for Equity Pictures Corporation, will have to be changed. The title selected was "Something for Nothing," but reports this week had it that that title had been used before.

Martin J. Heyl Productions, who are creating the screen version of "The Little Red Schoolhouse," for Arrow release, have thus far engaged the following players to appear therein: Martha Mansfield, E. K. Lincoln, Edmund Breese, Sheldon Lewis and Rose Coghlan. These players are at work now at the Tilford Cinema Studios under the direction of John Adolfi.

Production on the next Burton King special will not be started until probably the latter part of December or early in January, according to information unearthed this week.

Warner Brothers Expand Interests

BUFFALO—(Special) — Charles Goetz, manager of Warner Brothers' New York exchange, was here last week, applying the finishing touches to plans involving the perfection of the new Warner staff of the Buffalo office. With him came Martin Solomon, who joined the W.-B. Film Exchange, Inc., last week.

Fred M. Zimmerman, of Nu-Art Pictures Corporation, has received a letter from Herman Lorence, manager of the Bellevue Theatre in Niagara Falls, in which is described how that live wire exhibitor put over "Up and Down the Swanee River," a Burlingham Adventure Scenic, which Nu-Art is distributing in this territory. Mr. Lorence says:

"Just as the main title went off I had a singer with a deep bass voice sing 'Way Down Upon the Swanee River,' accompanied by the orchestra. As he finished the song the orchestra stopped and throughout the balance of the reel the organist took up the refrain, and take it from me, it stopped the show."

Nu-Art business is rushing. Mr. Zimmerman now has ready for distribution the following important subjects: "The Hands of Nara," "The Man from Beyond," "What's Wrong with the Women," "Sure Fire Flint," "The Country Flapper," Squirrel comedies, Eddie Lyons comedies, Burlingham adventures, "Determination," "Life's Greatest Question," "Flesh and Blood," "Big Stakes," Prizma color pictures, Canadian adventure pictures, Captain Kidd serial and others.

Sydney Samson announces that Grand & North are now ready to book Colonel William N. Selig's new serial, "The Jungle Goddess," which Syd is advertising as a fitting successor to "Miracles of the Jungle."

Bob Murphy, of Murphy & Filkins, despite the rush of business, beat it to the world series game in New York with his friend, Joe Daly, office manager of Hodkinson. All business and no play makes a dull boy, says Bob.

The Billy West comedy contingent has moved from the Glendale, L. I., studios to the Tilford studio in New York, where the second comedy is now being made under the supervision of Will Morrissey. The first release of the two-reel series was shown to the trade this week.

Al Lichtman Corp. Sets Records That Warrant Attention of Theatre Owners

By ROGER FERRI

IT seems as if every month in the year is an Al Lichtman month.

This comparatively young organization has attained a position in the motion picture business that is the envy of every one in it. This statement is made from actual knowledge and not mere observation.

Al Lichtman made exhibitors of this country a specific promise when he launched his enterprise in association with B. P. Schulberg. He said he was going to produce pictures that would make money for exhibitors. His first two productions, "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows" are ample evidence of the sincerity and truth of that statement.

Al Lichtman Corporation will make history for the trade in general, for the pace it is setting is so hot that rival companies have no other course left to them than to imitate it. And the trade in general would be richer and wiser if such a course were pursued.

It is not because Al Lichtman Corporation gave "Rich Men's Wives" to the exhibitors of this country that has "sold" this writer absolutely; and it is not the artistic wonder B. P. Schulberg and Tom Forman have submitted in the form of Lon Chaney's masterpiece, "Shadows," that has prompted us to look forward to a season of achievements for this organization.

It has been the very personnel of the organization from Al Lichtman and Ben P. Schulberg down to the office boy at the firm's present quarters, 576 Fifth avenue.

We have met most of the Al Lichtman exchangemen in the course of our hops about this American desert and without a single exception we found them all to be something more than mere film men; we found them to be showmen, gentlemen — men who had the interests of those upon who they were dependent at heart. We have interviewed, chatted intimately and joked with Al Lichtman. We have corresponded with Producer Schulberg and we have congratulated Tom Forman and Gasnier. We have talked with other executives of Al Lichtman Corporation.

We have watched them all from the time when the New York office was first thrown open. And we have watched them GROW. We have watched Al Lichtman Corporation in comparatively short time fight its way to the top of the ladder. We have analyzed their productions carefully and we have heard from exhibitors who have showed these productions. We have heard how these exhibitors were treated by exchangemen and we have heard how the first picture was exploited.

And there is only one reason why we took such pains to so carefully study this comparatively new, but magnificent organization and those whom it includes; because all the way from Al Lichtman down the line everybody is striving sincerely, energetically and industriously to make each succeeding Preferred picture a bigger and better box-office bet; because the interests of the exhibitor has always been foremost in mind.

Al Lichtman Corporation has earned its right to demand exhibitor patronage, if any firm ever has. It may not always succeed in giving exhibitors winners, but the fact that every facility at the command of the organization is being utilized in the best interest of the theatre owner is worthy of the patronage of any exhibitor who must have pictures to continue in business.

Just what sort of pictures the future Preferred Pictures will be remains to be seen, but surely none will dispute the fact that in both "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows" Lichtman has given the exhibitor two superlatively high class box-office specials. "Rich Men's Wives" has made money for everybody who has handled it insofar as this writer knows, and we will make the prediction that whatever "Rich Men's Wives" grossed "Shadows" will better by a worthwhile amount.

1922-23 will tell the story—and when it has been entirely written we expect to see Al Lichtman and his associates among the most proud leaders.

Al Lichtman Will Move To More Spacious Quarters

AL LICHTMAN has announced that on December first he will move his New York offices from 576 Fifth Avenue to 1650 Broadway, a new building recently completed by the Bethlehem Engineering Company and situated opposite the Capitol Theatre at Fifty-first street.

Expansion of activities and increase in personnel of the Al Lichtman Corporation which is handling the distribution of B. P. Schulberg's special productions for Preferred Pictures have necessitated the change.

Sixteen fifty Broadway, which is in the heart of the film district, is superior in point of location to the Fifth Avenue quarters and is modernly equipped as an ideal motion picture office. Large reception rooms, ample space for each department and private offices for executives and department heads in addition to an unusually spacious projection room are some of its features. The Lichtman organization will occupy the entire ninth floor representing the best location available and affording a maximum amount of light, air and space. The building runs all the way through from Broadway to Seventh Avenue.

Richard Hildreth, office manager for the Al Lichtman Corporation, has secured the services of Bernard Herzbrun, prominent architect, to supervise the arrangement of the space.

Lon Chaney Proves the Incomparable

EVERY now and then there comes to the screen a performance of rare excellence that raises the motion picture in the esteem of the exhibitor and his patrons. John Barrymore gave such a performance in "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," Lon Chaney gave one in "The Miracle Man," and Lon Chaney has done it again in B. P. Schulberg's picture, "Shadows," for which the Al Lichtman Corporation is handling the distribution.

Schulberg and Lichtman are not alone in believing that Chaney has made a substantial contribution to screen art. Their opinion was confirmed by every trade paper critic as well as by the people of varied professions whoever viewed it at the private showing recently given the film at the Hotel Biltmore in New York. Not a single reviewer failed to characterize Chaney's work as marvelous or to add that his role of Yen Sin, the Chinese laundry-keeper, surpassed anything he had previously attempted.

Every exhibitor knows the value of Lon Chaney at the box-office. Chaney is great among great actors and yet the place he holds is so unique as not to be comparable with the work of any other artist in his profession. Most screen stars stand for a definite type of performance while Chaney is never the same except, perhaps, in the degree of sincerity and finish that he gives to the characterizations he undertakes. Like Chaplin, he has risen from an obscure music-hall entertainer to a supreme artist. As the cripple in "The Miracle Man," the sneaky Chink in Marshal Neilan's "Bits of Life," as Fagin in "Oliver Twist," Lon Chaney stood out from the ordinary rank and file of picture actors and made history for the motion picture.

When B. P. Schulberg was on the look-out for possible scenarios at Famous Players, he came across the remarkable story, "Ching, Ching, Chinaman," by Wilbur Daniel Steele, upon which "Shadows" is based. Ever since he has held the hope of producing it himself some day and immediately after establishing his affiliations with Al Lichtman, he obtained the rights to it. His confidence in the story, which was proclaimed the prize literary piece of a few years ago, warranted his early production of it as one of his first special releases through the Lichtman Corporation.

Showmanship

"We'll pay for our mistakes
If you'll pay for our successes!"

This, in substance, is the policy of Al Lichtman Corporation.

No fairer nor better proposition was made an exhibitor in this country.

That slogan is typical of the showman; it is a frank statement made straight from the shoulder.

But it's sincere showmanship.

Al Lichtman, B. P. Schulberg and the rest of the Preferred Pictures organization are showmen—and because they are they are appreciative of the fact that no concern nor individual can furnish one endless string of successes. It has never been done and it never will be done. Not in show business. And this enterprise we affectionately call industry is but a part of show business.

It is unfair for any exhibitor to expect to book fifty-two winners annually; now and then there must be a bloomer.

And it is only fair that exhibitors support successes to the extent that will justify the producer or distributor to bear the burden of the failures.

Flops are not without their reward, for only through failure can come the valuable experience that contributes materially to the making of successful pictures.

A good showman is a substantial, straight-forward, honest and shrewd business man.

And Al Lichtman is every bit that.

Sam Zierler, Ben Amsterdam, Bobby North Among Franchise Holders

IN a remarkably brief period Al Lichtman has perfected an organization of exchanges representative of the best material in the way of local distributing agencies. The exchanges are thirty in number and through these Preferred Pictures are distributed to every corner of these United States. These 30 Al Lichtman Exchanges are seemingly representative of the foremost distributors, for the history of each individual exchange is apparently a monument to the progress of the motion picture industry in the sections wherein they are located.

A careful study of Al Lichtman exchangemen made recently by the writer during a swing about the country developed the fact that they are leaders in the sections. Without exception, the managers represent men who have grown with the industry, men who have placed service to their clients before everything else; men who have striven to give the best available in the film market and to co-operate with their exhibitor clientele in properly selling the product to the fastidious public.

Al Lichtman may be proud of his producing organization, but he can be equally emphatic in his boasts concerning his distributing organization, for from any angle it compares favorably with any in the business. Included in the list of those pioneers who are in charge of the local destiny of Al Lichtman productions we find such reliable executives as Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures' Corporation of New York City, the energetic and successful Ben Amsterdam of Philadelphia, the illustrious showman Bobby North and Syd Samson of Buffalo, the enterprising Louis Hyman of San Francisco, Herman Jans of New Jersey and others, all established and proved capable exchangemen.

AS one glances through the personnel of Al Lichtman franchise holders one is impressed by the calibre of this hard-working army, who in a comparatively short time have made Preferred Pictures a by-word that stands for the very best in production, character, box office value and entertainment quality. As one carefully recalls the past performances of each franchise holder he quickly grasps the fact that Al Lichtman chose a combination of alert showmen and shrewd business, who seemingly do not lose sight of the presence and importance of the theatre owner, catering and serving him intelligently and loyally.

NOWHERE in this country is there such faithful exhibitors's friend than Sam Zierler, who in addition to operating the Al Lichtman franchise in Greater New York, operates the most successful Commonwealth Pictures' Corporation at 729 Seventh avenue. Sam, as he is affectionately called by his thousands of exhibitor friends, is a capable judge of box office pictures; years of experience, some bitter and others rosy, have earned for him a reputation of which any exchangeman can truthfully be proud. With Sam Zierler distribution Preferred Pictures in the metropolitan zone, Al Lichtman's organization can look forward to 100 per cent. distribution on all product.

OWN in Philadelphia there is another popular exchangeman, Ben Amsterdam. Ben only three weeks ago observed the tenth anniversary of the founding of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., which he owns together with Lou Korson. Amsterdam enjoys the intimate acquaintanceship of every theatre owner in Philadelphia, eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware and with him holding the reins exhibitors and Al Lichtman and Ben P. Schulberg alike can depend upon the best possible distribution and exploitation of their pictures. A high official in the Stanley organization in Philadelphia not so long ago, in Atlantic City, told this writer that "if every exchangeman in Philadelphia did business as Ben does there would be no question as to the nature of pictures this territory would see. Ben's word in his bond." Ben's word IS his bond. Exhibitors everywhere in his territory will substantiate that contention.

BOBBY NORTH, who together with Sam Grand of Boston, operates the Al Lichtman exchanges in Buffalo and Albany, is a showman of long standing. He possesses a splendid personality and knows show business from every angle. When Bobby was 12 years old he made his professional debut on the stage. Since that time he has experienced a series of successes in everything he has undertaken. In addition to the Al Lichtman Exchanges in Buffalo and Albany, which are presided over by popular Sydney Samson, Bobby operates the Apollo Exchange in New York in association with L. Lawrence Weber, a showman whose ability is recognized in the world of theatricals. Syd Samson, the manager, is a business man who does not satisfy himself with a luxurious office; in fact, he is seldom there. He spends most of his time among exhibitors, not only "selling" his product, but co-operating with them and in a hundred little ways assisting them in putting the pictures over. That's why exhibitors patronize the exchanges in such large numbers.

HERMAN JANS of the Al Lichtman northern New Jersey Exchange has been in the motion picture business for many years. He has been a producer, exhibitor and now he is a foremost distributor, his gross business on the first Preferred Picture, "Rich Men's Wives," proportionately exceeding that of any other exchange. His organization is a complete, effective and systematic army of experts.

J. FRED CUBBERLEY in charge of the Minneapolis exchange was for a long time associated with First National in that territory, but when Finkelstein & Rubin decided to concentrate on independent productions, he was put in charge of the new exchange from which the Preferred Pictures are being distributed. Despite the poor condition that has prevailed in that section. Mr. Cubberley has managed to obtain a splendid representation there.

THE exchange managers are as follows: Boston, New Haven and Portland, M. E. Morey; Greater New York, D. M. Sohmer; Northern New Jersey, M. Breskie; Buffalo and Albany, Syd Samson; Cleveland, M. A. Lebensburger; Cincinnati, Nat Lefkowitz; Detroit, J. C. Fishman; Pittsburgh, Joe Lefke; Denver, M. A. Klausner; Des Moines, Omaha and Kansas City, A. H. Blank Enterprises; Minneapolis, J. Fred Cubberley; Milwaukee, Harry Hollander; Philadelphia, Ben Amsterdam; Washington, J. Howard Beaver; St. Louis, Harry Weiss; Chicago, Joe L. Friedman; New Orleans, C. J. Briant; Atlanta, R. A. Davis; Dallas and Oklahoma City, E. C. Leeves; Seattle, Al Rosenberg; San Francisco, Louis Hyman, and Los Angeles, Elmr Bnjamin.

Selling the Picture to the Public

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Heavy Ballyhoo Campaign in St. Louis Was Carried by Real Estate Operators

ANSWERING the question as to Why is an exploiteer? Amike Vogel, just before he blew out of St. Louis, put over a four-day ballyhoo for "The Old Homestead" at little cost to the Skouras Brothers, who were running the picture day and date at two of their houses.

He laid off the cost to a firm of realtors and got a bigger showing than the house could have worked at a profit.

A new residential section was being opened by the real estate firm, known as Pennsylvania Park. Amike convinced them that this was a great site for old homesteads and a great opportunity to tie up to the play and make it a joint affair. The gist of the scheme was to declare an Old Homesteam Day at the park when, presumably, the eager purchasers could be attracted in profitable numbers. Just how many came cannot be estimated with any degree of accuracy, but the sales were sufficiently heavy in voulme to more than repay all exploitation costs, and show a handsome profit. In addition, it clinched the name of the realtor in the public mind.

Very Simple

Old Homestead Day was just another of those celebrations with music and lunch and general jazz, familiar to every promotion scheme, but the food was such as you might get at the Old Homestead, the band was a rube band and the general entertainment was along the same general lines.

For four days before the event the downtown section was pervaded by a rube band of a dozen pieces. Rube bands do not have to be very good, and the worse they play, the better they are. And at the same time they attract more attention than would a regular band of twice their numbers. About 22 men are needed for good instrumentation in a band. A dozen men, mostly brass, can put over the rural idea. That in itself saved money.

The bannering on the truck was all for the real estate firm, but window cards were tacked to the sides for the two houses.

Pointed the Way

Every telegraph pole between the city and the development was placarded for the event, and 250,000 special heralds were gotten out for the house and the real estate venture, the real estate men paying the cost. These were mailed to an extensive mailing list and thrown out wherever the band stopped to play on its down town excursions.

Amike also used the street pictures scheme developed originally for "The Crossroads of New York," and "directed" a bunch of girls in an open-air production that never reached the screen, because the camera was grinding on the crowds, and these shots were made into a special reel for the run of the picture on the come-and-see-yourself idea.

It brought wonderful results at a cost to the house less than they spend on the average picture, for the real estate firm was taking pages to advertise the day and all the houses had to do was echo "me too."

That is the why of Amike and his ilk.

In Demand

Pete Smith blew into town along with the reels of "Robin Hood" and has been on the jump ever since. Election night he took a bunch of "Robin Hood" arrows, provided with burdock burrs, and threw them on the crowds parading Broadway, watching the returns.

That is, he started to throw them out, but all he had to do was to pass them along to the holiday makers. They did the rest and Doug was elected long before the returns came in from any of the other candidates.

A Hallowe'en Party Was Bain's Seller

Looking ahead, D. M. Bain, of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Wilmington, N. C., realized that the dates for the Hodkinson release, "The Headless Horseman," included Hallowe'en. He instantly saw the connection between the two and got busy on a Hallowe'en party. As he had the film booked for three days, he made it a three-day party.

Black and Yellow

Seven days in advance he used the mailing list for a yellow and black card: the Hallowe'en colors, announcing the party. This was decorated with black cats and witches and pumpkin heads, and started off with "Brrrrrrr — chills — shivers — hair-raising stunt—and the funniest show you ever saw" and it told the details of the big time.

Then he printed up 5,000 red and black cards entitling the school children to half-price admission for the matinees. This appealed so strongly to the school authorities that the teachers were instructed to see that each child was given a discount ticket to see this classic. It was the first time in the history of the Wilmington schools that advertising of any sort was permitted to be distributed in or around the building, and that fact made the stunt more important in the minds of the children. This crowded the matinees.

The lobby display was in black and orange, with jack-o-lanterns with flasher plugs inside, and it carried out the idea of a party, for the color scheme makes for rich effect.

Then to make it complete, Bain dug out a Kineto short on "Washington Irving" from the Great American Authors series and also ran a short on "My Adirondack Outing," both films fitting in the show as though they had been made expressly for it.

It was one of the cleanest campaigns Bain ever put over—and one of the most profitable, and at the same inexpensive.

AMIKE VOGEL SAVED SKOURAS BROTHERS HUNDREDS OF DOLLARS IN EXPLOITATION

He persuaded a development company to get behind Old Homestead Day at their residence development, and they paid most of the expense of ballyhooing the streets and supplemented the house advertising with large spaces of their own which told of the New Grand Central and the West End Lyric as well as about the property they were trying to dispose of. It had all St. Louis agog.

HERE IS A DIFFERENT FRONT ON BLOOD AND SAND

The Queen Theatre, Galveston, has a permanent one sheet box in the center of the lobby. Charles E. Sasseen mounted small cutouts on this and flanked them with red and yellow arches, which were repainted. Litho cutouts were worked in so skillfully as to suggest all hand painting

Got Fourteen Cars for Large Banners

Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., is a modest sort of chap. He talked the local street car company into giving him fourteen 3 by 6 foot banners on "Blood and Sand" for as many cars, the banners being apportioned so that there were some on every line. The banners were put on several days in advance of the showing and held until the completion of the run.

He used an awning valance in red and yellow for the marquee and painted signs on eighteen prominent store windows. It cost him only $20 to put over the picture to a 40 per cent. increase.

Busy U. C. Stores

No chain of stores in the world probably owns a greater number of advantageous locations than the United Cigar Stores. They have put location into the class of scientific study.

Naturally the exploiteers are keen for a hook up, and Goldwyn reports a tieup with "Remembrance" in the States while recently Paramount hooked the Canadian stores to the "Old Homestead," telling that Josh's troubles will roll away if he will buy their pipes and smoke a specified brand.

It makes a good flash and at the same time it permits the store to get a timely appeal.

Cheering Bottsford

Will M. A. Bottsford, of the Paramount publicity, please note that Earl Settle has found a new use for his advertising mats. He made a lobby display from a three-column mat on "Nice People," and it made a mighty pretty lobby attractor when raised to life size. This opens up a new line for the ready made advertisements, for it would seem that a lot of these would work in well for enlargement if there is a house artist who really can draw.

Settle also stenciled the sidewalks with the title, painted windows and mirrors and persuaded the restaurants to brag that they catered to Nice People.

Lobby Miniature Is Harsh in Outline

Lobby miniatures are valuable, but they are best when dressed up. W. A. Doster, of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., made a country railroad station for "The Fast Mail," but he set it flat upon the floor instead of using a platform, and the backing is too harsh in its outline. This latter could have been softened with bunting or green branches to form a sort of frame, and raising the display off the floor would have given it a certain importance it now lacks, as well as making it more visible when there was a crowd in the lobby.

Got Good Business

Even as it stands it brought in the business, for it is cleverly done, and got the attention when it was given a chance to show, but a little more planning would have increased the effect. It might not have sold any more tickets, but it would have helped the house to sustain the suggestion of elegance that is lacking on a floor set.

Remade An Old Front for "Blood and Sand"

Charles E. Sasseen, of the Queen Theatre, Galveston, is somewhat handicapped in his lobby work by the permanent structure made to contain two one-sheets on the front and one on either side.

For "Blood and Sand" he mounted cutouts of Valentino and Naldi, and Valentino as the bullfighter on top of the stand, and on either side he used arches, lettered red on yellow. These arches had been used before, but were worked up so that not even their maker would recognize them. Cutouts from the paper were blended in so cleverly that they suggested hand painting.

Mr. Sasseen used a yellow ground and red lettering, but a better effect can be gained by reversing the scheme. Yellow is the lighter color and would show up the lettering better against the red ground. Red on yellow is a standard billposting formula, but this is because they cannot make a yellow ink show up so well on the red paper. Where paint is used the yellow is better for the letters. Experiment in miniature and you will get the idea.

A Fake Detective Helped in a Pinch

Of course, detectives are supposed to help in pinches, but it was another sort of pinch that hit the Colorado Theatre, Denver. The "Sherlock Holmes" pictures, for local reasons, was put ahead of the schedule and there were but two days in which to get the fact over.

H. E. Talbot, the managing director, and Richmond Dorman, the Goldwynner, got busy, landing a faked New York dispatch from Holmes stating that he was following a clue to Denver. It was addressed to the Detective Bureau and the newspapers played it up, since the clue was supposed to concern the New Jersey Hall-Mills murder.

The following day a ballyhoo made his appearance on the street with a magnifying glass and tape measure. He would inspect cigar stubbs, burnt matches, automobiles or skyscrapers. When he attracted a crowd he would hand out cards for the picture and fade away, along with the crowd, only to break out in a fresh spot. He did so well on Saturday that he was sent out again on Monday and he was materially helpful in getting the title over.

A Fox Release

THIS LOBBY MINIATURE MIGHT BE BETTER FRAMED UP

Outside of that it is a very good display for "The Fast Mail," but the rectangular backing is a bit too harsh in outline. It was planned by W. D. Doster, of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., for the Fox special

San Franciscians Were All Tagged

Fathers' Week was the main idea of the exploitation at the California Theatre, San Francisco and the management and Goldwynner Burke collaborated to get the "Remembrance" idea over in a large way.

Twenty girls, in the familiar usher costumes of the California, were sent out with flowers tagged for the week on one side and the show on the other. These were given to all men encountered on the street. At the same time the florists' windows blossomed out with cards for "Fathers' Remembrance Week" and the suggestion that Dad might like some flowers. The Call was also hooked to the week idea.

The phonograph stores were hooked to the old time songs and even restaurants were persuaded to feature certain items "for father."

This Was a Pipe

Oscar White decided on a munitions lobby for "The Dictator" at the Rex Theatre. No cannon were available, so he used the front wheels of an old wagon and three lengths of stovepipe. By the time he finished with it he had as good a cannon as most of those S. A. revolutions stock, and with a few old cannon balls and some guns borrowed from the high school, he got a lobby for $3.50 that ran his box office a third over the "book."

Plenty

Barry Burke, of the Palace Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas, got 914 grandmothers on his special matinee on "Grandma's Boy." And switching an old stunt, he gave away handkerchiefs to the women patrons because he knew they would laugh until they cried.

A nearly two-page hook-up helped when the Mayor declared a "National Laugh Week," though the Mayor had a fierce nerve to declare a national holiday. Some Presidents would not like that a bit, but we imagine that Harding won't mind.

Two Plane Cutout Worked in Lobby

Roy C. Smart got a 75 per cent. increase on "Blood and Sand" with a clever lobby display in the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala.

He made a lattice which he set about three inches from the side wall. This was covered, top and sides, with red, yellow and black cloth. The wall was covered with crepe paper and the floor between the lattice and the wall was covered with white sand in which a cutout figure of Valentino was placed, the cutout being that from the six-sheet.

When the film came along, the display was taken down and the cutout, now supplied with a sword, was placed on top of the marquee.

Sanding the sidewalk in front of the house helped to get attention from the passers-by.

Getting Around

In some cities "Pink Gods" has not batted 100 per cent. because it has an "unhappy" ending. Lem Stewart suggested to Southern Enterprises managers that they co-star Anna Q. Nilsson and James Kirkwood so that Miss Nilsson's happiness should offset the ending.

It is a matter of record that where this has been done the satisfaction given by the picture has been greatly increased and the play has had the added advantage of three stars. Where Miss Daniels has been made the sole star disappointment has been expressed.

It is just a little touch of applied psychology that is making box office difference.

Taking a suggestion from the Hippodrome Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas, Tom Clemmons, of the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, had the town all stirred up by announcing that Valentino would marry Mae Murray.

Following his recent tangles, the story made a tremendous sensation, when Clemmons came out with the statement that the marriage occurred in "The Delicious Little Devil."

A CONDENSED LOBBY VERSION OF A TOX MIX AERIAL STUNT

G. M. Phillips, of the Strand Theatre, Atlanta, built this up from a cutout and it gave a real punch to the stunt idea. It is merely a profile rock and a waterfall backing but it is better than a 24-sheet for a lobby display idea

Metro Exchange Was Home of the Stork

When the Metro Exchange, Philadelphia, booked "The Five-Dollar Baby" at Aldine an effective display was put in the window of the exchange, announcing the present coming of the film, and incidentally giving visiting managers a good idea.

A Metro Release

THE METRO DISPLAY

This seems to be a stuffed stork, a real blanket and a wax baby, but it can more conveniently be made a cutout where it is not possible to borrow a stork. It is clever enough to be generally copied, and will be particularly good for window work away from the theatre.

Choked Off

Thomas C. Grindley, of the Liberty theatre, Astoria, Ore., who displayed an unusual cleverness at making animated displays for his lobby, writes that he is temporarily off the job.

Gridley is the projectionist and did this work in odd moments. Now the union local has stopped him under the ruling that an operator cannot work outside the booth.

This rule was probably adopted to prevent the old custom of making a janitor-errand boy out of the operator, and from that angle it is a good one, but it is hard on Gridley, who promised to develop into a first class advertising man.

He writes that in spite of his five and a half years connection with the Liberty, he is looking for a chance where he can double in exploitation.

A Merry-Go-Round

For "When Romance Rides" Hugo Plath, of the Queen Theatre, Abilene, Texas, used a circular track on the circumference of which were mounted a number of horses, which ran around and around, emerging from one of the pillars supporting the display and disappearing into the other. The pillars supported a large horseshoe within which was an 11x22 from the story. It helped shoot the business up and it cost only $5.

Down in Arkansas they have some clay deposits not unlike that blue dirt in which diamonds are found in Africa. Knowing this, J. B. Robertson, of the Palace Theatre, Ft. Smith, had some brought in and placed it on display in the lobby, under guard, to exploit for "Pink Gods."

As a matter of fact, the clay does contain some minute stones, none of them large enough to be commercially valuable, and the stunt helped to explain the peculiar title.

A Paramount Release

WHEN THEY TIRE OF SNOW TURN ON THE WATER SAYS WHITE

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., had too many snow lobbies and they were wearing sour, for The "Valley of Silent Men" be built a brook at a cost of $4.10 and he beat out a revival meeting for cash business.

Well Watered Lobby Sold An Attraction

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., is a crank on lobby displays. It is about all he can do in his town and he does it well and cheaply. He had a number of snow lobbies and was getting tired of them, so he figured a new one for "The Valley of Silent Men."

It does not show very clearly in the picture, but over on the right is a dark line beneath the trees. That is a brook. He built it himself out of stones and cement, with a hose at one end and a run-off into a drain in the alley at the other. The "real" water was a stunt to pull people down to the house, just to see it, so they went in, as long as they were there.

There was a joint revival meeting of the seven churches in town and ordinarily Mr. White would have been as lonesome as a hermit, but the brook got the crowd and business with a little better than normal in spite of a competition that breaks managerial hear s down South.

Made a Warm Berth for Sleeping Devil

B. B. Garner, of the Casino Theatre, Lakeland, Fla., used a novelty stunt on "While Satan Sleeps," and it helped to bring in an additional 50 per cent. in business.

A borrowed doll was dressed to represent a devil and put to bed in a box about two feet long by sixteen inches high. The interior was painted bright red and two concealed 60-watt red lamps lighted strips of crepe paper kept in motion by an electric fan. The sign read, "While Satan Sleeps thrilling things happen."

Where plenty of light is used, a black ground will show up the flames better, particularly if light yellow chiffon strips are used in place of crepe paper, but the general idea was a winner and built a big business at an outlay of a little less than $10.

Teased 'Em Out

Basing most of his newspaper campaign on the plan book teasers got a good business on "Pink Gods" for Thomas G. Coleman, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala. He also put out two boy perambulators who carried cards asking if the reader knew what pink gods were.

He persuaded the jewelers to make displays of diamonds to hook to the suggestion that they see diamond mining at the Imperial. And for his lobby he had pink compo board diamonds lettered in blue. Apart from the usual advertising space the cost was practically nothing, as the compo board was old material overpainted. He got a 20 per cent. increase.

Spare Parts Engine Sold Many Tickets

One of the best novelties in the way of window dressing that we have seen comes from Knoxville, where B. F. Brock, of the Strand Theatre, collaborated with the local Ford dealers to build an engine of spare parts for Ford cars and Fordson tractors. Even the cab is made of curtains, and the cylinders are auto horns. To make it more interesting the house and the agency each contributed $10 as a prize to the first person who correctly named the parts. Most automobilists knew the Ford parts, but the tractor spares tripped them up.

The display was made in the window of a millinery store, to get a better location, and was used to advertise "The Fast Mail."

Excepted the Cat

J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace Theatre, El Paso, Texas, did not insist upon the theatre cat wearing goggles to foretell the coming of Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy," but everyone else around the house wore big horn rims minus glasses, and J. M. Edgar set the example to the rest.

He persuaded the street car company to donate their dashboards and used air brushed cards showing the glasses, with "Kum" on one lens and "Laugh" on the other. In the lobby he used painted glasses, one lens showing Harold and the other the grandmother, while the centre painting was a huge head of the star composed of the letters forming his name, the letters being faint or bold according to the color required. It was enlarged by the house artist from a small plan book cut.

The only thing that worried Mr. Hart was the fact that the theatre was too small to accommodate the crowds.

Won a Big Return for Twenty Dollars

Laying out $20 for a lobbby display brought $175 to Charles H. Amos, of the Strand Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C.

His picture was "The Delicious Little Devil," with Mae Murray and Valentino. He made a rectangular front board with a flattened oval opening. At the top was "Both were wrong" and on either side of the opening was a picture of one of the players. Under one was "To him she was an adventuress," and under the other, "To her he was a rounder." On the lower line were two cards each carrying the name of one player and the title of the play.

In the opening was a cutout of Miss Murray in a dancing pose, backed by blue curtains set three feet back. In between were a piano lamp and potted plants. Wherever jewels were indicated in the cutout paste jewels were attached.

A Fox Release

A LOCOMOTIVE CONSTRUCTED ENTIRELY OF FORD SPARE PARTS

This was worked in a window by W. F. Brock, of the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., in conjunction with the local Ford agents. It was used to put over "The Fast Mail." It was so ingenious that it drew immense crowds and helped store, dealer and theatre

The Curse of Drink Was Kickless Booze

Gallagher, of the Haring and Blumenthal circuit in that section of New Jersey adjacent to New York, but not a part of it, has been putting over "The Curse of Drink" through the hook-up with something known as "Angel Drink."

A bar was fitted up in the lobby of each house when the film came along, and a very real looking barkeeper dispensed some sweet soft stuff. Maybe the angels like it, but West Hoboken used to be noted for its beer joints in the old days, and has not yet been weaned. Still, it put the picture over.

Another aid was running the cartoon series in one of the papers and offering small prizes for the best captions. Then the series was reprinted with the statement that "The Curse of Drink" was the official caption in each instance.

An Export and Import Release

THE BOTTLES ARE AS EMPTY AS THE CUSTOMERS

The real saloon handed out only "Angel Drink" at the Roosevelt Theatre, West Hoboken. A drink to each patron, and the curse of drink was having to lick up the soft stuff. The signs were used on the opposite side of the lobby, to balance

Triple Mirror Is a Clever Device

One of the distinctly novel lobby ideas to come to light lately is the triple mirror effect devised by A. B. Morrison, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, for "Pink Gods," but which can be adapted to any good title.

The big idea in the original display was to set off the pink diamonds worn by the living model and supplied by a local jeweler, who was given credit on the card which is set into the base of the display. Pink diamonds are also displayed on the shelf in front of the mirror, which is the usual dressing table glass with the central panel removed. This was backed by black velvet, with white valance. The model was replaced by a cutout in the dull hours. This was set into the cabinet invented by Mr. Morrison and which recently figured as Gloria Swanson's gilded cage. It seems to be capable of almost any use. Morrison will be housing a live lion in it next. It is the handiest piece of lobby furniture we have ever seen.

Patterning after Max Doolittle's Great Moment stunt, the Colonial theatre, Brockton, Mass., tied the Times to a "Happiest Recollection" contest, with tickets to "Remembrance" as the prizes and $35, split $20, $10 and $5 for the best stories submitted. It gave a lot of good human interest stuff, with a solid tie up for the house.

Hook-up Lines for "The Old Homestead"

A. R. Lynch worked a cooperative page on "The Old Homestead," and perhaps his lines will help others. A butcher asked, "Would they kill the fatted calf were you to go back to 'The Old Homestead?'" then told about his meats, while a dry cleaner suggested: "When you go back to 'The Old Homestead' you want your clothes looking trim and neat." An awning maker told that "'The Old Homestead' is already supplied with our awnings, now let us supply your car," and the gas company suggested the ideal fuel for the old home, while a shoe repairer imparted the information that Reuben could be found at that establishment having his shoes half soled before he returned to "The Old Homestead." These lines will suggest others to make a good hook-up.

Mr. Lynch used a cutout from the 24-sheet for his lobby, building up into a scene, and put out 2,000 heralds, getting a return of about 30 per cent. additional business.

One good window is worth two in poor location. Get the best.

Special for Klan a Successful Failure

Offering a special performance for Klansmen was the way Albert B. Hill, of the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., helped put over "One Clear Call." The special screening was played up, but the reporters were the only ones to come. They made more of a story about the lack of a crowd than they could have gotten had the Klan appeared. It was a stunt that would have worked either way.

But the Klan did come, for there was a preponderance of men at most of the performances the opening day.

Street riders were not used because of rain, but the lobby was done in white, with a huge crimson Klan emblem on the box office, and for the previous week Mr. Hill used a shadow box below the screen. The light was placed close to the centre of a white screen, back of which were cutout horsemen of appropriate size. The illumination did not extend to the full width of the opening, which gave the effect of riders emerging from obscurity and being swallowed up into the dusk of the far side. Not all of the patrons caught the symbolism, but they all got the effect of the device. Silhouettes for the below-the-screen box is something to commend itself to others.

A Paramount Release

A NOVEL DISPLAY IDEA ORIGINALLY USED ON PINK GODS

This is a stunt devised by A. B. Morrison, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis. The central mirror of a three gladd frame is removed and a live model occupies the window, a cutout being set in her place when she is absent

Went to the Dogs

To put over the Century comedy, "Just Dogs," Joseph F. McCurdy, of the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, put out 40,000 postcards.

The card was good for one child under eleven at any matinee for the week and displayed a novel cartoon and good text for the story.

McCurdy arranged to send five addressers to the License Bureau to address the cards to all dog owners in the territory on the proposition that they would most likely be interested in a comedy about dogs.

It was a novel stunt, the more so because it was used to put over a short feature, but the comedy drew as much as the feature, because it was put over as well. Often a short subject can sell more than the feature if properly put over.

Made Real Ballyhoos to Sell New Yorkers

New York is the easiest town in the country to ballyhoo, but little of this work is done because it is figured by the large houses that the crowds will come anyway, and the little houses feel that it hardly pays.

It will, but if they don't know it, they don't do it. Harry D. Wilson came into town with Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist," and he put out three ballyhoo books and a stage coach.

A First National Release

THE "OLIVER TWIST" BOOKS

Right away you figure you can't get a stage coach. Perhaps you cannot, but there is nothing in the world to prevent you from dressing people in old-time costumes and sending out Nancy and Bill and Oliver in anything from a dray to a caleche. Almost any old-fashioned horse-drawn wagon will make for attention these days. It will work as hard as the stage coach did in New York.

In addition to this three perambulating books were put out. Each of the men was dressed in an old style hat and a stock. The rest did not matter. Old hats can be obtained from any city costumer, or at a pinch you can make them out of cardboard and paint them up or apply glue and put on the beaver from any mangy old fur cap.

Made of painted muslin over a light framework, these books weigh but fifteen pounds. Make one up and use it for other book titles when Jackie has gone. This example used cutouts from lithographs very effectively, but even straight lettering will get attention.

A First National Release

A TYPICAL WINDOW FOR ADVERTISING "EAST IS WEST"

The Des Moines Theatre planned this with a local firm, tying up the title to a display of Chinese porcelains and fabrics. All it lacks is a cutout of Constance Talmadge in her oriental dress, with a real robe in place of her poster costume.

A First National Release

YOU DO NOT HAVE TO HAVE A STAGE COACH FOR THIS

It was worked in New York for the run of Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist" at the Strand, but if you cannot get a stage coach, dress up the people and use any sort of an old time rig. A victoria or barouche will be almost as good for this stunt.

Yeggs Helped

Burglars are not on the payroll of the Goldwyn corporation, but a couple of them helped a lot down in Reading, Pa., lately.

"Sherlock Holmes" was billed at the Hippodrome, and a couple of days before the show the store next the theatre was broken into. A couple of hours after the theft became known a hundred rush window cards warned the thieves that "Sherlock Holmes" was coming to town. The afternoon papers carried teasers along the same lines. Some people even called up police headquarters to ask if there really was a Sherlock Holmes as they had always supposed he was a fiction character. Naturally it did not hurt business any.

The Horse Pulled

J. B. Carroll, of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, used a live horse as part of his rural display for "The Old Homestead." The horse was stabled at one side of the lobby, with a farmhouse porch on the other, dressed with a churn, tubs and other equipment. The box office was hidden by a corncrib made of logs, through the cracks in which ears of corn showed plainly. The horse did not look very strong, but he pulled a lot of extra business for a four-day run, which is a long time in Asheville, where two days will exhaust the town on the average picture.

Second Time

The miniature home used by the Hippodrome Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas, for "Miss Lulu Bett," and illustrated at that time, was provided with a fence and otherwise dressed up for "The Old Homestead" at the Palace, a sister house.

Dig out the old house you used on "A Man's Home" and transform that. It does not pay to throw away any old stunt. It can always be worked over in the long run.

Exploitation is real advertising only when it suits the picture. Don't figure that any scheme will fit any picture. Match it.

Halftone Screen for Masquerader Display

Whether or not this display from the Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Ore., is a success or failure depends upon the point of view. If the idea was to sell on the halftones, then it is a failure, but if the halftone is merely used as a better—and more expensive—background to the silhouette, then it is successful, but not, we think, in proportion to its cost. In the original, lightly printed in a deep grey, the plate shows where the photographs were pasted down and where the painting was done, but in this reduction the effect is better than in the original newspaper copy. It gives an odd background for the essential advertisement, but we have seen as good in smaller space with no more than a solid back, done in line cut instead of halftone, and the line cut came up better, because there was more ink to get the color. For that matter it looks better still against a white ground, and has just as much sale value and about the same attention value. We are inclined to think that money was thrown away on this display, though it is an undeniably attractive idea when well carried out. But if the same effect can be gained in a three eights or even seven and a half, as against four elevens, we think this advertisement somewhat wasteful. The big question in advertising is not so much "How will it look?" as "How much will it sell?" and the selling is done on the head and not on the background. Unless there is some local reason, there seems to be a waste here of about twenty column inches in space, not to mention the cost of the cut.

Program Display Is Good Ad. Layout, too

This program display advertisement from Fox's American Theatre, Newark, N. J., was laid out by George Miller, the publicity man. That it is a program display explains the use of the three fine screen cuts, but with line work instead of the fine half tone, the same idea would make a capital display for the new Lloyd comedy in newspaper work. The copy is well done, and offers some good points. It will be noted that on one side is "Some Boy, Harold Lloyd, the laughter leader," and on the opposite side "Some joy, Grandma's Boy, his first five-part picture." This does not sound very thrilling, but it gets you none the less and has a ticket selling value of goodly proportions. It gives you the suggestion of the best comedian in his best play. The panels are straight selling talk, and below are the times of afternoon and evening showings. Under the matinee is added "School Children can see Lloyds as late as 4 P. M." and under the night shows late comers are told they can see the big feature as late as ten P. M. Newark uses the vicious two feature idea, and the better of the two is run last, so that late business can be cared for. This display is rather full of type, but it is all so readably put that it will get over where fewer words in poorer display would fail. Newark newspaper work is not always good, because they try to sell the two features, but Mr. Miller has the good sense to put most of his money on the best bet. The only thing we do not like is the line in the signature reading "Program subject to change at the discretion of the management." That is a bit raw. The management is the servant; not the dictator. "Subject to change where unavoidable" would read better and provide as good an alibi. When a manager offers a bill, he should deliver the goods if possible and not announce he is going to do as he darned well pleases, even though he may not mean it to be read in that light.

A Pathe Release

—P. T. A.—

Going Back

Having taken the exploitation idea from the theatrical press agent and developed it to a point undreamed of by the old line agents, the picture exploiteer is now paying his debt by returning to the spoken drama the ideas so developed. One of the new New York productions used the lost key stunt the other day to put over its title of "East Side, West Side." Five keys were "lost," in the eastern side of one department store and five others in the "western side" of another, and the press agent took more space to tell of the stunt than advertising managers would have believed possible before the picture advertisers came along.

—P. T. A.—

Auto Raced Train to Sell "Fast Mail"

One of the stunts which helped H. G. Griffin, of the Pheil Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., to get $200 for a $10 investment was a train and auto race.

The title was "The Fast Mail," and above the lobby he constructed a trestle over which a three-car electric train was run, a locomotive and not an electric dummy being used. The track was oval and the train ran behind the backing so that it showed only when going in one direction. The structure was masked in with rock profile.

Below this was an endless belt with an auto, the belt being geared to a higher rate of speed than the train, so it won the race, as in the play.

The stunt held the interest of the crowd and sold the play to a handsome increase.

—P. T. A.—

Cut and Line Work Is Nicely Combined

Generally when half tone and line work is done in combination the half tone clouds the line cut and spoils the whole, but the Fox Terminal Theatre, Newark, brought out a combination for "The Fast Mail" that could not be wrecked. This is a four elevens with a half tone five inches wide. Even if the half tone goes under, it will not mud to the point of obscuring the outline of the engine nor can it hide the figures on the cow-catcher. The four punch line cuts cannot be hurt, no matter what happens to the half tone, because they are held away from it. In any event there will be enough of that half tone left to stand for an attractor, for the light background and the dark engine have distinct values which cannot be wholly lost. It is not what might be called a pretty advertisement, but it possesses a great sales value than a merely nice advertisement, and it will sell many more tickets; which is the chief function of any advertisement. Even that reverse title is not as bad as it might be, though a mortise and type would have been better, particularly as the lines are so close together. Apart from this the display is exceptionally good in its planning. From every angle it is a large improvement over the customary Newark work, partly because it can all be given to a single feature instead of being split.

Faulty Art Work Hurts a Display

This 115 lines by three from Loew's Columbia, Washington, seems to be based on a press book cut, and a pretty poor one, at that. Most of the Paramount art work is so well done that it does not pay to call in a local artist, but this woodeny sketching is not at all in the usual Paramount style and it does not sell. Miss Joy's armpit comes too close to her shoulder blade to be anatomically correct, and Meighan's head is all wet. He might have used a tailor's dummy to pose for him, while the facial expression of Miss Joy is idiotic in the extreme. Probably the average reader will not analyze the cut, but he will know that he does not like it and the unfavorable impression will be transferred to the title. It will not hurt so much on a second week, for by that time the public will know about the picture, but we have seen the same sketch used for first runs, and we think it would be better to junk the cut and use all type, rather than kill down the impression with this inartistic and meaningless cut. The text is all that could be desired and the advertising man has even split the eight point into two columns to make for easier reading. He has done his work well, but he is a poor cut picker. A poor cut is worse than none at all, and this is a pretty poor cut.

Art Display Held to Proper Limits

Here is a display from the California Theatre, Los Angeles, which might well serve as a model. It advertises Jack Holt and Dorothy Dalton, so you see them. It announces "On the High Seas," so you see a bit of water. Then the artist calls it a day and leaves room for Tom Reed in which he can put the special attractions and other details. Three months ago he would have put in a couple of full rigged ships and perhaps half a dozen thumbnail scene sketches, and thumbnail scene sketches are not worth the paper they spoil so far as selling or effect go. Keeping it down to right proportions gives an open display more pleasant to the eye, and makes for a generally better advertisement. The use of the half tone is not always safe in Los Angeles, but it got over here, and the copy is well laid and well written. The California has improved its advertising wonderfully in the last few months and is setting the pace for the other houses. Some day the Los Angeles pages may look like big town stuff. Meanwhile, the California gets the cream of the transient trade because it makes the best appeal.

Halftone Worked; Result Was Good

When you take a chance and win, you win. If you lose you get the blame. The Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, took a chance on a half tone of Norma Talmadge for "The Eternal Flame" and won. Had it lost, the result would have been atrocious, but half tones are a reasonably safe bet in the Baltimore papers, and the odds were reasonably in favor of the house. As it stands it is an unusual display and helped to sell the idea of something better than usual. The photograph is the soft focus type, and it printed very nicely. Since it announces the second week of the play, it is not necessary to urge the feature on the reader but merely to announce the continuance, which accounts for a seeming lack of selling talk. The compositor, entering into the spirit of the display, has given a very nice job for the lines, and the effect is really artistic. At the same time it is a selling advertisement, since all it has to sell is the prolongation of the engagement. A similar style the first week might have failed to get a hold over. Now and then this sort of thing can be done to advantage, but it will not pay to use such a half tone unless you are practically assured that a good impression can be had, for badly done this would be very poor indeed. You know what your own printer can do for you. Think well before you decide upon a similar form.

Makes Pictures Sell Where Talk Is Weak

Apparently this space from the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, is based on a larger cut, reduced in size. The captions under the vignettes are so small as to be almost undecipherable, though the central panel gets a sufficient display and that is what gets over. Most of the selling talk suggests that the press agent does not believe in the show himself, for he fails to be convincing. One bank reads: "Thomas H. Ince has done it again! Eclipsed every success in 'Skin Deep'—a remarkable drama of dual lives, dual loves. Packed with the Ince punch." That is too general, and it does not do the play justice. You can write stuff like that for any play without having seen it—and perhaps write it better for not having seen the production. It is not going to win the hard boiled and it does not strongly convince even the Ince fans. The other appeal reads, "Drama to grip you; thrills that get a gasp, romance, remarkable portrayals and a plot amazing in conception." A little talk about that amazing plot or about the nature of the thrills that get a gasp would have infinitely more sales value. It is too late in the day to sell even Ince on glittering generalities, and a little definite talk is worth much stuff like this. The play deserves a better handling than this.

MOSTLY CUT

Searching for something different got a nice lobby for M. F. Estes, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla.

For "A Fool There Was" he enclosed his entire lobby in a compo board structure painted in five-inch strips of white and on this placed his cutouts. It was a novelty, and it got a lot of attention. The idea is particularly good for any play dealing with the Catholic church as white and gold are the Papal colors.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

GREAT ALONE. Here is a picture that you can boost. A very high type of Canadian Northwest. Advertising, general. Patronage, everybody. Attendance, good. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

Associated Exhibitors

UP IN THE AIR ABOUT MARY. Fair picture to good business. Good ad. matter on this that pulled. Advertising. regular. Patronage, family. Attendance, good. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

F. B. O.

COLLEEN OF THE PINES. Just an ordinary "movie." Poorly constructed. Very improbable. Did not please generally. Advertising. quarter page, two newspapers, house organ, ones, threes, sixes. Patronage, general. Attendance, extra fine. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

GLORY OF CLEMENTINA. Very draggy and tiresome. In my opinion it's time to shelve Pauline Frederick as a star. Advertising, regular. Patronage. average. Attendance, fair. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

GOOD WOMEN. I'd say, can this one. Before the last reel they will either break the screen or look for the manager with murder in their hearts. I escaped through the back door. Attendance, poor. Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES. A good picture, and I did a nice business with it. Some complained that picture was not like the book they read. Advertising, newspaper, slide and outdoor. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

SON OF THE WOLF. Fine scenery, a real hunk of cheese for me. Patronage, general. Attendance, very good; one night. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

First National

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. My prints bad on this one; but the picture is great. With proper advertising it will be a winner anywhere. Advertising, double billboards, handbills and mailing list. Patronage, small town. Attendance, extra good. Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

CHILD THOU GAVEST ME. One of the best pictures we have shown and our patrons told us so. The acting of Baby Richard Headrick is wonderful. Boost it to the limit. Advertising, lobby display, newspapers, street frames. Patronage, rural. Attendance, good. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

DANGEROUS BUSINESS. Connie gets by fine in this one. Some thought it her best, but they always like her here in any kind of a picture. Advertising, regular. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

DEVIL'S GARDEN. Very poor; too sordid for small towns. Exchange sent this as a substitute for "Dinty" and as a consequence our business fell off about fifty per cent, and we lost money. Full of disgusting situations with an attempt to neutralize the whole thing by some Biblical references at the end. Advertising, posters, press and slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, very poor. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

HURRICANE'S GAL. Good, and draws well. Advertising, newspapers, posters. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

KINDRED OF THE DUST. An average picture. Broke all house records, as film was partly made here by another company. Advertising, usual. Patronage, small town. Attendance, record breaking. Marsden and Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

MARRIED LIFE. Fine comedy drama. Print poor. Held up second night. If your machines are in good shape, don't be afraid to book it. Advertising, ones and threes. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. R. P. Cecil, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

PECK'S BAD BOY. Fell flat on this, but no fault of picture. Think it much better than "The Kid" but it did not draw for some reason. Many had seen it elsewhere. Paid a big price and did not do enough to pay for film. We are off all this high priced stuff. Advertising, good. Patronage, village and country. Attendance, poor. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. For me a very poor picture. You couldn't give me this kind. Advertising, six, three, ones. Patronage, resort. Attendance, fair. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

POLLY OF STORM COUNTRY. Very good production. Fine photographic work. Should please average patrons. Advertising, regular. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

SILENT CALL. Extra good feature that will not fail to please every person with brains and understanding. Should exploit this one for you have nothing to work on only a smashing good picture. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

SKY PILOT. Absolutely A. I. It will live up to all the favorable reports of the past in these columns; so I said it was the best in months. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

SONNY. Some were disappointed at the ending but nearly everyone liked it. Not as good as "Tol'able David." Advertising, twenty-four sheet, photos, trailer, newspaper. Attendance, good. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

STAR DUST. Exhibitors, if you want a good heart-interest picture, be sure to book this one. Excellent cast supports Hope Hampton here. Advertising, one sheet, two threes, slides. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

Fox

CONNECTICUT YANKEE. Again we paid the piper—we did the work, they got the pay. This is a good picture and a good cast; but they're using their heads when they stay at home on a forty cent picture. The small towns can't stand the drag. This is a Class A picture, our classification. Advertising, extra. Patronage, country (that's where they were). Attendance, missing. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

CRUSADER. A hundred per cent. picture. William Russell has come back into his own. All my patrons were pleased with this picture. If Fox would only give William Russell pictures like this he would soon be in the limelight again. Advertising, two ones, one three, 11x14, newspaper. Patronage, select. Attendance, fair. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

DEVIL WITHIN. Fine picture. Advertising, three threes, six ones. Attendance, fair. Vincent J. Votalats, Myrtle Theatre, Thornton, Rhode Island.

JACKIE. As good as any of her previous successes. Shirley Mason well liked here. Advertising, regular. Patronage, middle class. Attendance, good. John Cleve, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

MAID OF THE WEST. Very good for a small town, but people here won't turn out on Wednesday night. Hardly anybody at all. Patronage, all classes. Attendance, as above. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

ROUGH SHOD. A good Buck Jones picture with all the action anyone could want. Advertising, posters. Patronage, rural. Attendance, poor. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

ROUGH SHOD. A well acted and snappy Western; one you can't go wrong on. Good enough for any audience. My patrons were well pleased. Advertising, photos, ones, threes. Patronage, general. Attendance, good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

QUEEN OF SHEBA. It is a very elaborate picture but my patrons simply don't like such stuff. The first night showing simply killed the business. No good for small towns. If you want to take my advice, stay away from this one. Advertising, strong. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, poor. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

WHAT LOVE WILL DO. Fair program picture. Patrons satisfied; pleased about ninety per cent. Advertising, ones, threes, slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Goldwyn

COME ON OVER. Story with Colleen Moore. By Rupert Hughes. Gave good satisfaction. Advertising, newspaper display and teaser ads., slides and display in front of theatre. Also sent out a thousand letters to Irish patrons. Patronage, mostly Irish. Attendance, fair. Big Ben Theatre, Ilion, New York.

DUST FLOWER. Picture well liked here and away better than average program offering. Advertising, usual. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance, good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

GRAND LARCENY. One of those messy domestic pictures of the friend and the wife and the wronged husband. Well acted and well mounted, but not the kind of a story that is liked. Elliot Dexter, a great actor, in the kind of a story he should stay away from. You are just as well off not running it. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre. Bellaire, Ohio.

MADE IN HEAVEN. Excellent production, fine photography, film in A1 condition. Not a single misframe, no punch marks. A picture that should be played in every small house. Fellows, you need not be afraid to boost this one and go after it strong. The title did not sound good to me and I didn't do the proper pushing. Advertising, ones, threes, slides. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

POOR RELATION. This can be classed as a good picture. Will Rogers good but has had more opportunity for his humor in others. Advertising, one sheets. Patronage, industrials. Attendance, good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

Hodkinson

FRENCH HEELS. A good picture for a program offering, but the sissy fight in the end killed it for my Saturday night crowd. Advertising, regular. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

Metro

A WOMAN'S HATE. A fair picture. Photography very poor. Using fifty ampere, D. C., I couldn't see the last reel even with opera glasses. Your patrons sure will pick on this (if print is in same condition). Regular advertising. Patronage, very best. Attendance, fair. Jno W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

I CAN EXPLAIN. Exceeded my expectations. Lots of good laughs. Audiences took kindly to it. Advertising, regular. Patronage, average. Attendance, good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

FORGET-ME-NOT. Good picture; one that is true to life. You can't go wrong on this one. Advertising, twenty-fours, sixes, threes, ones. Patronage, resort. Attendance, good. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

PEACOCK ALLEY. Worthy of being rated as a Special, but why do they send me poor film? Metro didn't keep this print in good shape at all for me. Advertising, two newspapers, forty window cards, photos, one sheet, slide and trailer. Patronage, high class mostly. Attendance, fair. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

PEACOCK ALLEY. A good picture for the women, and fair for others. Contains some great sets. Advertising, twenty-four sheet, trailer, newspaper, photos. Patronage, first class. Attendance, fair. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

TURN TO THE RIGHT. Extra good attraction that will please any audience. You cannot say too much for it. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. One of the best Reid pictures, people said, played in this theatre for a good many months. Advertising, window cards, ones, photos, etc. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. F. M. Knight, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

BLOOD AND SAND. Went over big, but have seen better productions. If you have many Valentino fans it will go all right but don't pay too much, it's not worth it. Advertising, everything from a sand pile to an ox cart. Patronage, general. Attendance, extra good, three days. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, Northfork, West Virginia.

CALL OF THE NORTH. A very good program picture that satisfied a good crowd. Paramount needs more pictures of this type on their list and less of those dressed up Society dramas that have only a half per cent. kick. Advertising, posters and press. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

FOOL'S PARADISE. An exceptionally fine picture. Drew well at increased admissions. DeMille is a real director. Advertising, more than average. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

FOOL'S PARADISE. A fool's paradise was right. The snow and ice scene was beautiful. The best picture we had played for some time. Played two nights. Advertising, posters, slide, heralds. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

FOREVER. Good feature, only we thought it was too long drawn out and would have been better if it was shorter. Pictures of this style do not please the majority, for us. Advertising; regular. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. Fred S. Widener, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

GOOD PROVIDER. If they liked "Humoresque" they will flock in to see this one. Good, true to life story. Some real comedy situations that got a big laugh. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

IF YOU BELIEVE IT, IT'S SO. Entertaining and well liked, although a trifle too long and somewhat draggy in places. Taken as a whole it is good. Advertising, lobby and newspaper. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, average. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE? This one sold as a special, but did not think much of it; very weak; will go over as a program. Advertising: lobby and six sheets. Patronage: small town. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE? Here is a comedy drama that every theatre should play. Play it and hear 'em laugh. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

JUST AROUND THE CORNER. A good attraction. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

LITTLE MINISTER. If you have a select and appreciative patronage this one will appeal. But if you cater to an action-loving crowd, you might better use something that moves a little faster. Advertising: posters and press. Patronage: town. Attendance: good. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

MAN FROM HOME. A splendid picture in every way. When this one fails to register big, something is the matter. Just the kind of picture to help business and restore confidence. We, us and company liked it very much. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

MANSLAUGHTER. Wish there were more pictures like this. One of Thomas Meighan's best. Advertising, big. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. Daniel Bus, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

MAN UNCONQUERABLE. Good feature. Lots of thrilling parts all the way through. Pleased all. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. F. S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

MORAN OF LADY LETTY. Fine drawing picture for me; one that pleased. Give us more like it. Advertising, ones, sixes, photos, dodgers, newspapers. Patronage, country town. Attendance, good. H. P. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

NICE PEOPLE. A nice picture for nice people; a drawing card. Scenario, acting, photography and direction great. Advertising: posters and papers. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

OLD HOMESTEAD. Enclosed editorial (a local paper gave it a big amount of space, too long to reproduce here) on "Old Homestead," an American picture for American people. We want more of them. Turn away business tells the story. Greatest picture Paramount has made. Capacity at all shows. Advertising: like a show. Patronage: masses. Attendance: great. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY. Very poor show for my patrons. Not one good comment. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. L. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

OVER THE BORDER. Dandy picture (I played it in hot weather) and two stars that won't fail to pull them in. Advertising, lobby, newspapers, billboards. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

PAYING THE PIPER. Very good picture, but had a rainy night and crowd small. H. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

PINK GODS. Good picture with a good cast. A little too long though. Advertising, usual. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

RENT FREE. Just a fair Reid. Have seen better; have seen worse. Advertising, usual. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Mich.

ROOKIE'S RETURN. A very old Paramount but print in good condition and gave excellent satisfaction. Advertising, one six, and ones. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. S. Pace, Jettie Theatre, Texline, Texas.

SATURDAY NIGHT. A splendid picture with a very pleasing moral. Not up to DeMille's standard, but it will please. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, photos, heralds. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SHEIK. Will please the younger generation while the older ones will not care for it; at least that was my experience. Advertising: small town. Attendance: good. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

UNDER THE LASH. A powerful dramatic picture, but not calculated to please

Tell Them This

When you report, make your tips tell the folks whether the picture is worth boosting or if they ought to soft-pedal on exploitation; tell them any special ways you used to pull them in; tell them if the picture held and pleased as well as whether it drew. Give all the help you can—every bit of it will be useful.

Gloria Swanson followers as it is a distinct departure for her. Cast, staging and characterizations are remarkably fine. I liked it but many patrons did not. Patronage: high class. Attendance: fair. E. W. Collins, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

THE WHISTLE. A fine picture. Rather sad and no gun play as an unusual role for Hart, but it pleased. Advertising: usual. Patronage: rural. Attendance: very good. H. G. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

WIFE TRAP. I can't see where they get that noise about the court room scene more sensational than "Madame X." It hasn't got a look-in. Advertising: one sheets, programs, lobby. Patronage: best. Attendance: fair. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE. An English picture that pleased probably 75%. Cast not up to standard; rather unpleasant theme. Patronage: average: Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

Pathé

LURE OF EGYPT. The folks were all pleased and so was the box office, and they did not charge me a farm for it. Advertising, usual. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

Selznick

HANDCUFFS OR KISSES? This was as good a picture as you could get at the price paid. Hammerstein is doing fairly well for us, being a new star to our patrons. Advertising, regular. Attendance, poor. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

LONE WOLF. A knockout underworld story, exciting from beginning to end. Print rather dark. Photography poor. Advertising: six, three, one, slide. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

A MAN'S HOME. A fair program picture with a moral. Pleased about 90% of the audience. Advertising, slide, threes and ones. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

A MAN'S HOME. This is good, but not a Super-special by any means. Buy it if price is right and don't overdo the advertising. Advertising, usual. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

SHADOWS OF THE SEA. Excellent program picture; was well received. Melodramatic, with lots of action. Advertising, regular. Patronage, average. Attendance, good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

UNDER OATH. And still another Hammerstein that will please a hundred per cent. Excellent cast; excellent acting. No exhibitor should overlook these Hammerstein pictures. Advertising, ones, threes, sixes, photos, slide. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

United Artists

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. A very fine production of a most interesting story. Pleased all who saw it. Advertising, large campaign. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, ordinary. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

THE NUT. Will please any Fairbanks lovers. It is purely a comedy farce. Don't pay too much for it, or raise your prices. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

WAY DOWN EAST. Very fine picture that pleased in this town 100 per cent. Advertising, two sixes, two threes, ten ones, window cards, newspaper slide. Patronage, smalltown. Attendance, very good. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

Universal

ACROSS THE DEAD LINE. Very good little program picture. Frank Mayo is always welcomed by my patrons; they would like to see him again in a picture like the above. Advertising, usual. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

DANGEROUS LITTLE DEMON. Nearly everybody went out of their way to tell me how fine it was so when they do that she must be there with the goods. This was the first Marie Prevost and Larry Semon; I had enough paid admissions to make it the best Thursday night in months, and I introduced both stars to a multitude. Attendance, good. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

THE FOX. A good Western with some real action. Advertising, regular. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

GALLOPING KID. Another good Hoot Gibson and if your patrons like this class of pictures you can't go wrong on booking and boosting this one. Advertising, ones, three and mailing list. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

HUMAN HEARTS. A good heart interest story that will please the older people. You may hear kicks from your younger ones. Advertising: a third more. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Wm. H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

NO WOMAN KNOWS. The poorest picture I have run. No one came and I was glad. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

SECOND HAND ROSE. Gladys Walton is a popular star but this is not one of her best pictures. Advertising, newspaper, card and screen. Patronage, family. Attendance, good. Arthur G. Pearson, Melrose Auditorium, Melrose, Massachusetts.

THE STORM. Jammed the house to its utmost capacity and turned hundreds away. Everyone satisfied. Great picture. Advertising, lobby, heralds, advertising wagon, newspaper. Patronage, average. Attendance, capacity. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

Vitagraph

SHEIK'S WIFE. Capacity houses for three days; picture was, in my opinion, a poor one, and still they came for three days. Draw your own conclusions. Advertising, house organ and posters. Patronage, general. Attendance, best in months. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Belleville, Kansas.

SILVER CAR. Earle Williams is very well liked here and in this he is very good. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. Mrs. J. D. Dunaway, Arcade Theatre, Summerville, South Carolina.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. Good comedy and ought to draw well; boost it and it will. Somewhat disconnected in places. Advertising, usual newspaper space. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

Comedies

DUCK HUNTERS (First Natl.) Nothing out of the ordinary, but quite funny at that. Advertising, posters, photos. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

GROCERY CLERK (Vitagraph). Every inch a laugh. The house was in a roar from the start to the finish. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

HIS ELECTRIC HOUSE (First Natl.) One of the best comedies ever shown at the Empress theatre. Irresistibly funny and comical, and sure to cause a house full of laughter from start to finish. No mistake can be made by booking this one. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Bad Prints

Bad prints, mutilated film, kill the producer's National Advertising and the exhibitor's hard-won patronage. Exhibitors, why not make sure your projectionists treat the film decently. Producers, why not jack up the inspection of returned films.

HOMESPUN HERO (Educational). A good two-reel Christie comedy. Have not yet found a really poor Educational. H. G. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

HORSE TEARS (Universal). Queenie; this horse is great. Have run four of these; they are all very good. Queenie is the human horse. Everybody likes these comedies. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

SCHOOL DAYS (Vitagraph). Semon's comedy very good; pleased all. Part of first reel in bad condition. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

TENDERFOOT (Vitagraph). A splendid two-reel comedy with lots of action. It filled the bill and got plenty of good laughs. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Serials

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). "A knockout" still goes as my decision on this serial. Have run eleventh chapter. Advertising, big. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, good. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

Short Subjects

SELZNICK NEWS. Deserves the attention of every exhibitor, demanding the best for the least. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

State Rights

BLACK PANTHER'S CUB (Equity). Much better than the average attraction. Good story and cast. Exteriors fine and mechanics above the average. Splendid business and pleased patrons. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BURN 'EM UP BARNES (C. C. Burr). Pleased a care free audience. Advertising, twenty-four, photos. Patronage, all kinds. Attendance, good. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

I AM THE LAW. (Affil. Distrib). Strange but true, I broke house record for the past two years with this, and it pleased. Certainly is a picture with everything. Get's 'em in, and they come out pleased. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

MORE TO BE PITIED THAN SCORNED (C. B. C.). A fairly good picture but did not pull for me at the box office. Lost heavily, due to heavy advertising one week in advance; then flopped on me terrible. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

SCHOOL DAYS (Warner). A sure-fire, popular star in a good picture, especially for those who like to remember their younger days. A. L. Hepp, Idyl Hour Theatre, Greeley, Nebraska.

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY? (Equity). Pulled a real crowd with one hundred in shade weather. Pleased the majority. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.)

Sure Fire Flint

(Johnny Hines—C. C. Burr—6,000 feet)

M. P. W.—A cyclonic comedy drama that is a genuine knockout and ranks as best of its kind.

T. R.—"Sure Fire Flint" is well named. Sure fire it is, and there are no two ways about it.

N.—Seven reels of intensified comedy and melodrama, interspersed with high jinks.

E. H.—One of the swiftest comedy-dramas of the present season.

F. D.—"Sure Fire Flint" looks like sure fire money.

The Kentucky Derby

(Reginald Denny—Universal-Jewel—5,398 feet)

M. P. W.—Universal-Jewel production starring Reginald Denny is a splendid melodrama.

F. D.—Adaptation of stage melodrama offers good thrill in race sequence.

E. H.—Looks like another money-maker for the exhibitor.

N.—The picture will please those who want action regardless of its hokum.

T. R.—This is an exciting melodrama that will readily satisfy the customary audiences who demand an abundance of action and thrills.

Clarence

(Wallace Reid—Paramount—6,146 feet)

M. P. W.—William deMille version of stage play a thoroughly enjoyable comedy with three-star cast.

T. R.—A bright and pleasing comedy, with never a dull moment to clog its merrily buzzing wheels of action.

F. D.—Stage play makes fine screen entertainment.

E. H.—One of the outstanding films of the month.

N.—A good picture—an entertaining picture, but it could have been much better.

The Headless Horseman

(Will Rogers—Hodkinson—6,000 feet)

M. P. W.—Eccentric characterization, quiet humor and a touch of the fantastic color the screen version.

F. D.—Rogers does fine work in vivid picturization of popular Irving story.

N.—Is not first-class screen material. Its greatest asset is the atmosphere.

T. R.—A rare bit of entertainment for those who are familiar with the author's story.

E. H.—Technically excellent, and while acted with complete sincerity and artistic finish, lacks the dramatic punch so necessary to gain the attention of picture audiences.

Trifling Women

M. P. W.—Powerful and impressive, but has tragic theme.

F. D.—Here is a great picture, a magnificent production, and a corking story, all carefully worked out and slipping at the end for no good reason.

"Tess of the Storm Country"

Mary Pickford in New Version of Former Success Should Prove One of Season's Outstanding Successes

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As nearly everyone knows, Mary Pickford starred in "Tess of the Storm Country" about eight years ago, achieving one of her first big successes in feature productions as well as one of her greatest. She has again produced this same story in ten reels instead of five as before and embodied in it all the advantages that years of experience, improvement in technique, lighting, photography, direction and all angles of screen production have brought forth, combined with practically unlimited resources. That the new production will be a huge success is certain. Those who have seen the old picture will be delighted with the new one, and the millions of Pickford fans, which includes by far the great majority of picture patrons, will also be immensely pleased and entertained with the new production.

In a foreword, Miss Pickford indicates that making this picture again was a labor of love, that it is in response to repeated requests from her admirers and that of all her roles she likes that of Tess best. After seeing the picture we can well understand why she should feel that way, for it is a role that is in every way ideally suited to her personality and ability as an actress.

As to the story, while it is of the obivous type and you can easily surmise how it is going to turn out; yet it is so human and so well produced and acted, with such delightful comedy, excellent drama, touching pathos, self-sacrifice and even melodrama and in fact the whole gamut of emotions strikingly brought out and welded into the action that it makes a thoroughly enjoyable attraction and one which you will continue to enjoy in memory after you leave the theatre.

Never has Mary Pickford done better work or given greater evidence of her ability as an actress. She is, as the changing requirements of the role demands, alternately grave, gay, whimsical, emotional, dramatic, hoydenish, appealing, and with the sureness of the finished artist carries you along with her through the various changes. At no time is the transition from her varying moods better brought out than in the scene in the church where she herself baptizes the dying baby when the minister refuses. There is no evidence of the rollicking, light-hearted girl then, but in her place a girl budding into womanhood who feels the seriousness of the situation and the solemnity of the occasion, and makes you feel it, too.

This is one of the most effective and dramatic scenes in the picture, but there are several others, notably the scene in the courtroom where her father is convicted of a murder he did not commit and she pleads with the judge to allow him to return home; also the scene where her sweetheart, seeing her with a baby, doubts her faithfulness and to save his own sister she refuses to clear herself.

In the selection of John S. Robertson to direct this picture, Miss Pickford made a wise choice. His handling of the production, we do not believe, could be improved upon. He has concentrated the dramatic interest, brought out the telling points effectively and gives the whole an artistic production.

Credit should also go to the cameraman Charles Rosher. Working with the director he has achieved some truly beautiful shots, particularly with moonlight and night scenes on the water. Another striking feature of the picture is the excellence of the sub-titles, clever and humorous, and serious or reverent as the occasion requires.

The supporting cast is excellent throughout, the selection of Lloyd Hughes to play opposite Mary was a particularly happy choice; he is a fine clean-cut chap who fits the role to a "T"; conversely Jean Hersholt as the villain is just about as despicable a one as can be imagined, his make-up and work being unusually repellent.

Mary Pickford in again producing this picture has given to the screen a production which not only adds to her reputation as an actress but one which we truly believe will please all classes of theatregoers and draw an abundance of coin to the exhibitor's box office. It should prove one of the season's outstanding successes.

The Story

Elias Graves, wealthy and a pillar of the church, buys a beautiful mansion on the hilltop. A lot of fishermen are squatters on the portion of the property at the edge of the lake, where they live in miserable huts. Unable to get rid of them, his prospective son-in-law, Jordon, suggests that their nets be confiscated. This is done, but not without considerable opposition headed by a young woman, Tessibel Skinner. She succeeds in retaining one big net and not long afterwards, driven by hunger, the fisher-folk start to use it. In the fight which follows Jordan is shot dead. Suspicion rests on Tess' father, whose gun was used. Graves prosecutes him and he is convicted.

Graves' son, Frederick, who has been attracted to Tess by her sunny disposition and beauty, despite her unkempt appearance, says he will help her. He breaks with his father, but soon has to return to school after telling Tess he loves her. Graves' daughter, Teola, tries suicide but is saved by Tess. Soon after, Teola gives birth to a baby and to shield her Tess keeps the child. When Frederick returns home and sees the baby he loses faith in Tess. Soon after that the baby gets sick and Tess takes the baby to the church to have it baptised before it dies. Teola, who can stand it no longer, claims the baby as it dies. A witness of the murder confesses that Ben Letts, a fisherman, is guilty, and Tess' father is freed. Graves comes and begs forgiveness and Frederick also is finally reinstated in Tess' affections.

"Crow's Nest"

Comedy Stunts Liven the Interest in Aywon Picture Starring Jack Hoxie

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Jack Hoxie's spectacular methods of extricating himself from danger are an amusing feature of this Western which Aywon is distributing. The picture should have a good following where the star is popular. There is plenty of riding and action, and although the plot involves the familiar situation of the abducted heroine and her rescue, the director and star succeed in making it entertaining.

The hills are an advantageous setting for the action. In a remote valley "the Crow's Nest," a den of outlaws lies. The hero frees himself by cutting his ropes with pieces of a bottle which he breaks, then upturning a pail over his guard's head, whistling for his horse, tying him to a table in the room and then telling him to go. The side of the house goes with him. It is not so much because of novelty, but rather because of the speed and comic touches that these scenes bring enthusiastic response. Evelyn Nelson is the charming heroine.

The Story

Esteban has been brought up by a squaw from whom the papers proving that he is white have been stolen. Beaugard has done this for his own evil satisfaction. Later when the boy grows up and falls in love with Patricia Benton, Beauguard exposes him as a "greaser." At the same moment a girl, who is hidden, shoots Beauguard, and Esteban aids her in escaping. Beauguard notifies his accomplice, Pecos, known as the "Crow," to stop the pass in the mountains. The two are imprisoned and meanwhile Beauguard has stolen Patricia. Esteban and the girl escape only to fall in one danger after another. Finally he arrives on the scene in time to save Patricia, and they go to the hut of the squaw who tells the truth regarding Esteban's parentage.

"Ridin' Wild"

"Hoot" Gibson Is His Usual Strenuous Self in Fast-moving Universal Picture

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte

For those who like expert horseback riding at breakneck speed over rough ground, a lot of strenuous action, including a couple of realistic fights—in short, a typical "western" that is not over-burdened with gunplay, but that has its exciting moments, nevertheless, "Ridin' Wild," a Universal production, will fill the bill.

However, the plot leaves something to be desired, particularly at the end of the story, where it is left to the spectator's imagination to fill in any way he pleases as to how the "villain" gets his just deserts. A subtitle says he gets it, but you're left to guess just how, and you're also left to work your brain concerning the manner in which the "hero's" father is cleared of a murder of which he was unjustly accused.

Nevertheless it all ends happily, an exceptionally pretty girl has a leading role, the "villains" get what's coming to 'em, and the good people in the play are adequately rewarded, so the film will probably make a hit with the majority of screen patrons. The acting, too, is exceptionally good.

The Cast

George Berge.....Jack Walter
Alfred Clark.....Bert Wilson

Length, 4,166 feet.

The Story

Cyril Henderson, conforming to his mother's ideas and his family's religious teachings, shuns a fight until his father is unjustly accused of a murder. Cyril then jumps into the breach, stands off a lynching mob, whips the town bully, and at the point of a gun holds the sheriff's daughter, his sweetheart, as hostage until the charge against his father is cleared up.

"White Shoulders"

Exceptionally Well-sustained Plot Runs Throughout First National Production

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte

Because it has a story with a well-defined plot that is carried through without being marred by inconsistencies and impossibilities, "White Shoulders," a First National production, can be classed as far above the average picture.

Audiences will be bound to appreciate the film particularly for that reason as well as for its other undeniably attractive features.

There is plenty of action—enough to please even the "fan" who prefers speed and strenuousness in his entertainment to anything else, and there is also quite enough of the romantic to cater to the picture patron who likes the spice of love intermingled with the films that he prefers to see.

Besides, Miss MacDonald wears an abundance of the sort of clothes that are quite up to the minute and that are bound to catch the fancy of the feminine picture-goers. So that everyone will be pleased the producers have also incorporated in the film a ball to which the guests come bedecked in the finery of a by-gone era—in the dress of the early '60s—and the director can be complimented on the care which he took in the settings, even to the extent of having a large Confederate flag draped above the dancers on the ball-room floor.

The plot is set in a distinctly Southern "atmosphere," that will make the production do exceptionally well in the Southern States, and likewise should give it a vogue in other sections because of this unusual quality.

The acting is good throughout. Those who are prone to cavil might find some minor fault with the fact that the sub-titles allude too frequently to Miss MacDonald's remarkable beauty, which is very evident and does not need the attention to be constantly called to it.

The Cast

The Story

In an effort to rehabilitate the family fortune the mother of Virginia Pitman tries to marry the girl to money. One rich suitor makes a disparaging remark about Virginia and her brother shoots and kills him. Mrs. Pitman then takes Virginia to another city to angle with her there for another millionaire. However, she falls in love with an automobile racing driver, but after their engagement is announced it develops that he is in reality one of the richest men in the State who races only for diversion.

"Barriers of Folly"

Thrill Follows Thrill in This Western Made by Russell Productions

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Russell Productions are offering in this a good Western with a splendid climax. The action keeps up a fast pace, and the incidents are linked together so that entertainment does not lag for those who like exciting Westerns.

A strong cast, headed by George Larkin, includes Eva Novak and Wilfred Lucas. The director has accomplished good dramatic effects in his handling of the material and the performers. The plot is convincingly built to prepare for stirring scenes toward the close in which there is plenty of suspense. At a melodramatic moment, a chafing dish is overturned, the flames start, the whole fire department is seen in action, the interiors in flames and the hero in a vivid rescuing feat.

Close upon this excitement follows the chase to Chinatown where new examples of Oriental ingenuity in providing dangers are shown. The final pursuit in automobiles is the closing thrill. Where the exploitation of the most dramatic scenes and the final punch is sufficient, there is every reason to expect good box-office results with this feature.

Jim persuades her to promise not to sell the ranch until she hears from him. He soon finds that there is oil on the property and starts in pursuit of her. The "sister" proves to be a doubtful relation, and May gets involved in some exciting adventures, in which she is taken to Chinatown, and tries to escape from Clifton. "Brawn of the North"

Strongheart, the Wonder Dog, in an Excellent Trimble-Murfin Production for First National

Reviewed by Alfred Chalmers

When we saw Strongheart for the first time in "The Silent Call," we were so strongly impressed with the work of this intelligent dog that we wrote an appreciation called "God, But That Dog Is Magnificent." The wide popularity of the picture and the uniformly excellent box-office reports which followed in the wake of its showings subsequently proved our enthusiasm was not unwarranted.

Strongheart is back again. In "Brawn of the North" he comes with all his splendidness and makes you live with him in a simple but fascinating story laid amidst some of the most gorgeous scenery which the northwoods holds.

Whoever sees this picture will go out refreshed from having drunk deep of natural beauty and exquisite photography. Moonlight snow scenes, heavy, leaden skies, dark pines and spruce in silhouette, and sometimes great billowy clouds floating by, all inject a charm into the picture that will get under the skin and delight even the most calloused picture fan.

There is cunning and careful direction throughout; especially are the wolf scenes well done. The cast as a whole is good. Special commendation is due Miss Marion Wells, who plays the leading feminine role. Her work is unusually genuine and sincere. She lives every scene and makes you feel it. Her part was not an easy one.

Strongheart made a host of friends with "The Silent Call." He'll thrill these all over again and add a whole lot more with "Brawn of the North."

If we were running a theatre we'd hate to see our competitor get this one first.

The Story

Marion Wells, her brother and his partner, Howard Burton, together with Brawn, the girl's dog, are on their way to open a mine in Alaska. A quarrel arises between the men. The dog is also involved as he is in the fight which ensues. When it is over the girl, having seen both men fall into the water and not come up, believes both have drowned. Brawn leads her to a cabin. Peter Cole, a lonely miser, is there. His first act is to try to force her to kiss him; later he is ashamed of himself. Brawn, having got his leg hurt in a trap, Peter goes for the nearest doctor who is also a missionary. Peter forces a marriage. This brings even greater contempt for him from the girl. At the first opportunity Peter, Marion and her pet go back to the settlement. Peter has never taken advantage of the marriage he forced with the girl. At the settlement they part; it is then that Marion realizes she really loves him and they go back into the wilderness. A baby is born. Brawn, jealous of the newcomer, often runs off to play with wolves. On a return to the settlement Brawn, without meaning to, causes the dogs attached to the sled to run away, endangering the baby. Brawn goes to the rescue. The sled gets caught on a tree and wolves attack the dogs. Brawn, catching up, battles with a wolf, kills it and rescues the baby, taking it safely to the missionary's cabin. Half crazed with grief the mother and father arrive there later. The reunion of the supposedly lost baby and its parents, with Brawn's conmplete atonement for past misdeeds, complete the picture.

"Brothers Under the Skin"

Peter B. Kyne Story Made Into Delightful Comedy With Featured Cast by E. Mason Hopper for Goldwyn

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Although you may not think so from the title, this is a comedy, and a delightful one at that. It is a clever satire on married life and extravagant wives versus henpecked or spoiled husbands. You will find that the title admirably fits the picture, for regardless of your station in life, in the marriage game, you are apt to be confronted with the same situation and that it can be remedied by similar treatment, so after all we are "brothers under the skin."

Peter B. Kyne, the well-known writer, is responsible for the story, and he has selected as his characters, two married couples, one husband makes $30.00 a week as shipping clerk for a large concern; the other, who is boss of the same company, has an income of $30,000 a year. But both are up against the same situation, their wives are frivolous and extravagant and live beyond their means, while one buys sable coats, the other buys a floor lamp on the installment plan. The solution for this? Well, as a sub-title says, "treat 'em rough and tell 'em nothing."

E. Mason Hopper has admirably directed this production; it is bristling with humor and unusually cleverly sub-titled; nearly every one will give you a chuckle. The rollicking comedy note is predominant throughout, but there is also much food for serious thought and discussion in this picture. While exceedingly amusing it nevertheless serves to point a moral for henpecked husbands.

Straight-forward and concise, without any footage being wasted on subsidiary characters, the theme which is enacted by a cast of only five persons, shows practically parallel situations in the affairs of the rich and poor husbands. It is a picture which practically all grown-ups, whether married or single, will enjoy, and should prove a good box-office bet.

The entire cast is featured and does exceedingly fine work, and it is difficult to pick out one for especial praise, though Pat O'Malley has the lion's share of the opportunities and makes good use of them, and Helene Chadwick runs him a close second.

The Cast

Newton Craddock.....Pat O'Malley
Millie Craddock.....Helene Chadwick
Thomas Kirtland.....Norman Kerry
Dorothy Kirtland.....Claire Windsor
Mrs. Bulger.....Mae Busch

Based on Story by Peter B. Kyne.
Continuity by Grant Carpenter.
Directed by E. Mason Hopper.
Photographed by John J. Mescall.
Length, 4,983 Feet.

The Story

Newton Craddock, a poor shipping clerk, has a wife who runs him into debt and henpecks him, making him wash the dishes, etc. Thomas Kirtland, his wealthy boss, also spoils his extravagant wife who runs him into debt. Craddock's wife tells him to go "jump in the river" and he starts to obey, but does not like the dirty water.

Kirtland's friends, to decide a bet, write him a note and get Craddock to take it. As no one is at home Craddock goes in to wait, and spying a bottle he takes too much, getting humorously intoxicated. Kirtland and his wife return and Kirtland lays the law down to her and tells her where she gets off; there is also jealousy of a supposed vamp here, but Craddock proves to be the innocent cause. Craddock hears all of this and seeing the similarity of the situation returns home. He confronts Millie and starts to treat her rough, disabuses her idea that the woman across the hall is vamping him and makes her love and obey him. He then goes to the shop, with blood in his eye, licks the foreman and gets the job. The picture ends showing both couples happy and each with a baby to bless their married life.

Those who may have doubted the wisdom of Mary Pickford in producing a new version of "Tess of the Storm Country," one of her greatest successes, will have these doubts dispelled on seeing the new "Tess." It is an A-1 box-office attraction and a distinct addition to the list of high class photoplays which this season has brought forth.

It is human, filled with heart interest, pathos, drama, delightful comedy and even melodrama, is excellently directed and beautifully photographed. The original picture was a big success, and the new one, distributed through United Artists, should prove an even greater one.—C. S. S.

"Shirley of the Circus"

Shirley Mason is Starred in Fox Production With Exceptionally Good Circus Scenes

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The circus scenes in this Fox feature are exceptionally good. They have been elaborately produced and revel in the atmosphere that is always such a strong factor in making an actual circus a success. There are splendid lions, a really thrilling incident when one is loosed, and a wealth of glamor and illusion surrounding the performers.

Shirley Mason is a dainty figure in the midst of all this colorful action. Her performance as the little circus dancer will appeal to her many admirers, as it gives her the opportunities which emphasize her particular charm and acting ability. Her work is made the more sympathetic by the brutal character of the strong man of the ring. This part is managed excellently by Alan Hale. He succeeds in making his part strikingly individual instead of being merely a brawny hero.

The picture as a whole is good entertainment. The story has a tendency to draw upon well-used situations at times, but the interest is always by some means restimulated, and because of the color and variety, should have a wide appeal.

The Cast

Max.....Alan Hale

Nita is in love with one of the performers, Pierre. After three years Max calls for her at the convent, but Nita is afraid of him and runs away. Blackthorne asks his fiance to give her a home, but Nita overhears a conversation about herself and fears she is not wanted. When Pierre calls to take her back to the circus, she goes.

Blackthorne misses her and starts out on a search. Max treats them both brutally, and is so jealous of Pierre that he lets him fall during an acrobatic feat. Pierre is injured, but recovers with Nita at his side. Blackthorne finds her and offers her a home again, but she says she will never leave Pierre.

"Down to the Sea in Ships"

Elmer Clifton's New Production a Masterpiece in Its Line—Replete With Sensations and Human Interest

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

When the ten best productions of the current season are finally sorted out this Elmer Clifton offering should not be overlooked, for it is one of the most marvelously amazing attractions ever offered owners of motion picture theatres. In its class it stands alone and as an unquestionable masterpiece. Here is a production that is just that and more—a picture with a real heart. It is at the same time a great education and a remarkable entertainment vehicle. Its value goes beyond that of the theatre, for it will create talk and discussion that will live for a long, long time.

Cinematographically, "Down to the Sea in Ships" is that much sought different production exhibitors have prayed for. It is dramatic, sensational, romantic, comical and picturesque, dwelling on a story that is appealingly human. But what is of much more value is the finished product itself, that is, the manner in which the story has been handled, the way in which Director Clifton produced this extremely difficult vehicle, for the lives of every player were in jeopardy when the picture was in the making. It is a whale of a picture in more than one sense; seriously, it can be advertised as a "whale of a picture" because it deals extensively with whales, the whaling industry and the Whaling City—New Bedford, Mass.

Via the program the information is given that an "entire city (meaning New Bedford) co-operated in the making of the picture." There need be no doubt about that. And New Bedford can well be proud for having given this co-operation, for this picture is a cinematographic triumph of the most superlative order. It is big in everything. You don't have to take any risk when you grab this one, for it is that type of production that will appeal to everybody for it has everything in it—and most important it is in possession of heart-throbs that are gripping and leave a permanent impression that will prompt word-of-mouth boosting.

Elmer Clifton is deserving of much commendation for "Down to the Sea in Ships" for it is what this writer would gamble two to one in predicting that it will prove a huge box-office winner. It's a production that will justify the investment of several thousands of dollars in exploitation, for the picture will earn it all back 100 times.

Insofar as this writer knows no distribution arrangements have been made for "Down to the Sea in Ships," but it certainly is entitled to presentation on an elaborate basis. If any picture ever justified high class legit prices, this one does, for while its producers are quietly but carefully testing the box-office value of the picture in their own typically New England fashion, the fact remains that it is wonderful in presentation, acting, photography and story.

Every character is lovable; even the most disagreeable one appeals to you, not because of the splendid characterization, but because of the fact that it is human, true-to-life and red-blooded. And it isn't the sort of picture that appeals only to New England audiences; it's any audience's production, for the highbrow, lowbrow and the highlowbrow. It will be a wise distributing agency that will grab this one and a wiser exhibitor who will allow it to bring the silver to its box offices.

For sensations, "Down to the Sea in Ships" is the best yet. And these sensations result from every day hair-raising experiences of whalers. And they are not faked. This writer knows New Bedford and many a time was despatched there by a Boston newspaper to "cover" shipwrecks, etc., in that picturesque locality. And what this reviewer saw at the Shubert-Majestic Theatre, Providence, R. I., where this production is being given its premier showing, brought back memories of those exciting days. To enumerate the innumerable thrillers depicted in this attraction would mean the use of an entire page. Suffice, however, to say that this picture is so securely packed with dangerously bold feats in which whales unconsciously play an important role that it has any 15-episode serial, this writer has seen to date, washed off the board.

The story is a fascinatingly interesting one that compares favorably with "The Old Homestead," "Nancy Adams Sawyer," "Shore Acres," "As Ye Sow" and "Way Down East." But it has a new twist and it's originally new with surprises galore.

As a production it is superb. It is lavish for its type, with no detail overlooked. But when it came to details the producer had the expert assistance of such a capable advisory council on whaling technique as James F. Avery, Benjamin D. Cleveland, Antonoe T. Edwards, Henry J. Mandly, Antone J. Mandly, William J. Shockley, George F. Tilton and James Tilton. Mr. Clifton took every advantage of the knowledge of these gentlemen and capitalized on it. And, perhaps, it is because this picture was so carefully and expertly handled that it stands out so marvelously and entertains so superlatively well that you regret that it has an ending. The scenic background is typical of the country where the picture was made.

The cast is one of "names" that are well-known. William Walcott, as the keen, scrupulous and upright New England ship owner and whaler of the Quaker faith, is realistically clever. William Cavanaugh, as Henry Morgan; Miss Marguerite Courtot, as Patience Morgan; Raymond McKee, as Thomas Allen Dexter; Juliette Courtot, as Judy Peggs, and the rest of the cast all do consistently good work and contribute materially to the telling of an interesting story in a smooth and forcible manner. To Mr. Clifton, however, must go a bulk of the credit, for it was his directorial work that produced such a creditable special. The photography, by Alexander G. Penrod, could not have been any better.

The Story

This story is the actual thrilling tale of a young couple who went through more exciting incidents during their brief careers for the sake of the great love they held for each other than any American story yet adapted to the screen. First it was religion that kept them apart and then it was business activities of the stern father who did not believe the young man worthy of his daughter. While the youth could and did brush aside the sectarianism he could not prove to the old gentleman the great code of the whaleman. Yet he overcame this great obstacle in the end while seemingly serving the purpose of the arch villain plotting away the wealth and property of the great Charles W. Morgan and his American shipping interests.

If you want clean-cut, snappy comedy, we can recommend the Goldwyn production, "Brothers Under to Skin." Based on a story by Peter B. Kyne, which is rich in laugh-getting possibilities. Director Hopper has taken full advantage of them and made a picture that is vastly entertaining.

The story shows that husbands, whether rich or poor, if they have frivolous extravagant wives are in the same boat and are "brothers under the skin." The manner in which they finally adopt the slogan "treat 'em rough" and by using it in different degrees bring happiness to their respective households is highly amusing.

A feature of the picture is the excellent cast and the clever sub-titles. It is a production that should please men and women, married or single, and prove a good box-office attraction.—C. S. S.

little Irish orphan, bubbling with good humor, which she portrays.

Crooks play a large part in this picture. The leading man starts out as a crook but he goes straight afterwards, though the girl is definitely shown as the cause for his reformation. An unusual twist is given to this character, as he is shown as afflicted with an eye disease which causes him to be practically blind when the sun is shining, though his sight is keen at night with artificial light. This point adds novelty to the story.

Viola Dana puts over her role in fine shape, bringing out the pathos and lovable characteristics of the girl, as well as the humor of the character; however, the role does not afford her as good opportunities for effective work as several others in which she has appeared. The remainder of the cast, headed by Cullen Landis as the crook with impaired vision, is entirely satisfactory, and there is a particularly bright little boy, Bruce Guerir who is unaffected and amusing.

It is a production which from an entertainment standpoint ranks with the better class of program offerings and should prove satisfactory with average audiences, particularly those that like Viola Dana.

Length, 6 reels.

The Story

Mary Duffy, raised in an orphan asylum, is adopted by the O'Briens to take care of their little boy, Tim O'Brien, who cannot see during the daytime, but who has keen vision at night, is a crook. Double-crossed by his pal, he and his wife make a getaway when the police appear, leaving little "Red" with Mary. Mrs. O'Brien leaves Tim in the lurch when daylight comes and is killed by an auto.

Mary is arrested, but the kind-hearted magistrate discharges her and sends her to a minister-editor, who employs her as a companion for his wife. Mary is happy in her new home, but she longs for Tim, whom she has begun to love. When the minister's son gets into trouble by stealing his father's money and losing it gambling, she summons Tim by means of the prearranged signal—an ad in the paper. Tim, who has reformed, comes to her, and then she pleads for him to open the gambler's safe and get the money back. He does so as she wants to save the minister from the shame. Everything ends satisfactorily with a romance between Tim and Mary.

"Bulldog Drummond"

Evelyn Greeley and Carlyle Blackwell in Exciting Hodkinson Melodrama Made Abroad

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As presented on the stage "Bulldog Drummond" was of the modern type of action-mystery melodramas, so exaggerated that while it held some of the spectators because of its thrills and fast movement, others were inclined to enjoy it as a burlesque or travesty. The screen version made by Hollandia Film Company and presented by Producers Securty Company through Hodkinson is straight melodrama with the suggestion of burlesque entirely eliminated.

The nature of the production is disclosed early, when the hero, Captain Drummond, bored by inaction following the world war, advertises for any kind of employment, even crime, that will furnish plenty of excitement. With this idea in mind, the author set out to see that his hero got enough excitement to satisfy even a person of this disposition.

It is of the type of story which is not intended to be taken seriously and the situations into which the hero boldly and nonchalantly precipitates himself, and his adroitness in getting out of difficulties is suggestive of a serial though handled with a better regard to logic than is often the case.

There is an abundance of action and the interest is well sustained due to the continual conflict between the hero and his friends and the gang of unscrupulous conspirators, together with chases in autos, over housetops, etc.

The conspirators run a "sanatorium"; they are absolutely unprincipled and go to extremes to extort money from their patients. Their "treatments" consist in torturing their patients with thumbscrews, electricity, etc., but Director Apfe has not shown but only suggested these tortures.

If your audiences like action, thrills and excitement and are not squeamish over the devices employed by the conspirators, they will like this picture.

We understand that the production was made in Holland and that with the exception of the featured players the cast consists of European actors. The photography is good but there is nothing about the sets or locations to indicate that the picture was not made in this country.

The cast measure well up to the demands made on them. Carlyle Blackwell is breezy, and devil-may-care as "Bulldog" Drummond, while Evelyn Greeley is sweet, and attractive as the helpless type of girl who gets him into the adventure. Both give good performances of their roles and, of course, there is a romance.

"When the Desert Calls"

Pictorial Appeal Found in Picture on Familiar Theme—American Releasing Corporation

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The pictorial appeal in this Pyramid production, "When the Desert Calls," is by far its most salable feature. Desert scenes and sheik atmosphere are the background for an old-fashioned story. The picture does not possess the elemental quality of former screen successes of a similar aspect, but resembles them more in external detail. It seems like a more or less polished, Americanized version of life on the desert.

For the fans who enjoy the glamor of this sort of existence, the wide white stretches as a background for colorful figures and melodramatic intrigue, there are many thrills. Past demonstrations of the success of this type of entertainment indicate that it is what many patrons like.

Dramatically, the picture is built upon familiar situations. A woman is pursued, after her marriage, by an unwelcome admirer who falsely implicates her husband in a forgery. Believing her husband has committed suicide, she flees to the desert, and they do not meet again until after five years, when he has been wounded and she has in the meantime become a nurse. Coincidence seems to have gone too far in this final reunion.

Through some misfortune in directing everyone in the cast shows a tendency to overact—to make the scenes too melodramatic. Violet Heming, the star, shows this in her interpretation of the emotional moods. There are a few lovely close-ups of her, and these with more care, could have been more frequent and still finer.

Length, 6,159 feet.

The Story

It concerns a plot to disgrace the young American cashier of a bank on the edge of the desert and the discovery of evidence that the young man had committed suicide. This drives his young wife to seek peace in the desert, into which she is followed by the conspirator and meets with thrilling adventure. The Great War intervenes, after which a valorous sheik is sought by the British who wish to award him the war cross. The sheik is partly recognized as the erstwhile cashier, but faints from a wound before establishing his identity. In a hospital he learns that the head nurse is to marry a popular doctor, then recognizes the nurse as his wife, though she does not recognize him. From thence on the story builds to a climax.

"The Jilt"

Marguerite De La Motte Scores Individual Hit in Universal's Splendid Audience Picture

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Irving Cummings produced what should prove a splendid audience picture when he made "The Jilt" for Universal. This quiet production makes no bid at pretentiousness, but it does serve the purpose for which it was passed on to the public, namely, it entertains interestingly and is well put together in a fashion that leaves no doubt as to the sincerity of not only the story itself, but the very efforts of the players. And, after all "The Jilt" gives Marguerite De La Motte a particularly difficult task, but despite the many temptations attached to the role she portrays, she is so successful, so realistically charming that she, in the vernacular of the showman, "runs away" with the production, scoring a decided individual hit. Her acting is superb throughout and while at times there is a tendency to rebuke this little miss for taking so lightly the heartaches of one whom she merely thought she loved, one cannot help but side with her even when she does the otherwise unwise things. But that's because she is so natural, because she is just the human type of girl that you find in real life.

The story will hold your interest, for its climax is a combination of mystery and melodrama, the two contributing toward making the situation a highly interesting one. In fact, this could be characterized as a picture of climaxes for if memory does not fail us there were three of them. But it is the work of the cast rather than the story itself that will score for this picture, for Matt Moore, as the jilted lover, and Ralph Graves, as the young doctor, are both successful. Harry De Vere and Eleanor Hancock have little to do but they do that well. The settings are good. Irving Cummings directed satisfactorily.

Length, five reels.

The Story

Rose Trenton has mistaken sympathy for George Prothero, a war hero, blinded and cynical, for love. They become engaged, but later the girl learns that she loves "Sandy" Sanderson. Finally she writes George telling of the impossibility of her affair and that she loves "Sandy." He is hurt and goes to Europe to "forget." Meanwhile "Sandy" returns home. George unexpectedly returns home. "Sandy" and Rose decide to make things as happy as possible for George. Rose writes to a specialist in Paris, hoping through him to restore George's eyesight. One day George and "Sandy" go on a trip. George returns alone explaining that they had been attacked, and "Sandy" taken away. Rose the next day receives a letter from Paris, in which the surgeon informs her that George had been cured months ago and had returned to America with sight restored. He comes to her and she forces a confession from him, just as the supposed dead "Sandy" rushes into the room and tells of the attack made on him by Prothero. The latter is sent away, with "Sandy" and Rose left alone to live happily.

"Anna Ascends"

An Appealing Theme Inspires Interest in This Paramount Picture with Alice Brady

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

In addition to an attractive cast and an ingenious plot, this production possesses that rare essential—appeal. "Anna Ascends" strikes a peculiarly human note. There are many reasons for recommending it, but this perhaps is the most important.

An immigrant girl's ambitious struggle in America, her battle with the language and survival of unfortunate associations until she realizes a brilliant achievement is an inspiring story. It has been handled here with fine judgment. There is almost every emotional mood, sympathy, humor and suspense. The construction is unusually good because there is no over-emphasis of any one of these, but a smooth distribution so that the result is complete entertainment. For instance, the intrigue, centering around the stolen foreign jewels, could easily have been made more intense. But this motive has been kept in the background and the production is more artistic for this reason. The case of Anna is sympathetic without being sentimental, another mark of discrimination.

There is considerable variety in the settings. It all takes place in New York and there are many familiar shots, photographed with skill. A section of the city known as "Little Syria" is a colorful background for the introductory scenes. Luxurious interiors and exterior come later.

Alice Brady has never had a part with more animation and individuality than that of "Anna." She gives a sparkling performance and in a few instances does some really distinguished acting.

The Countess is a fascinating creature as played by Nita Naldi. Robert Ellis, David Powell and Edward Durand contribute substantially. The women wear beautiful clothes. Victor Fleming is responsible for the directing, and his efforts make the picture most enjoyable.

Length, 5,900 Feet.

The Story

Anna is a waitress in a cheap Syrian restaurant in New York. One of the frequenters is Howard Fisk, who suspects the proprietor of being connected with smuggling foreign jewels, by importing them with his coffee. Howard asks Anna to do some detective work. Anna is much interested in Howard and has confided in him her ambitions to become a writer. She learns that her employer has taken the jewels to the Count and Countess Rostoff and a mysterious "baron." In a sudden encounter, she stabs the baron and is prevented from reporting to Fish because they threaten to expose her, as a murderer. As time passes she continues her study of the new language and graduates from one position to another and finally gets her book published. Then the Count and Countess reappear and attempt to make trouble for her. She confesses to the police that she stabbed the Baron, only to learn that he is still alive. The foreign impostors are punished, and Howard succeeds in winning the author of the most popular novel of the hour.

"The Marriage Chance"

American Releasing Corporation Offers a Startling Production With Fine Cast

If you're looking for something completely out-of-the-ordinary, here it is. It is safe to announce that you can promise your patrons a few thrills that are different from anything they have experienced.

"The Marriage Chance" has a fascination beyond all doubt, but the reaction to it may not be entirely pleasant in all cases. It would be well to understand that not every temperament can stand some of the horrifying sensations that go with this picture. To others, constantly in search of new excitement on the screen, the picture will seem unusually attractive.

Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin who presented "Strongheart" in "The Silent Call," which scored such a pronounced hit, have just given to the screen "Brawn of the North," a First National attraction featuring this wonderful dog. It is a picture that should prove a big box-office bet; everyone who saw the other picture will want to see this one, too, and it will not disappoint them. It is an interesting story, well acted and produced and "Strongheart" will endear himself to your audiences as much as he did before.

Similar to the plot of the stage drama, "The Monster," the story relates the fiendish pursuits of a doctor who has devoted his life to vivisection. He determines to have a human victim.

The horrible realization of his intentions comes upon the spectator in melodramatic scenes that in getting the desired psychological effect, are almost faultless. Deliberately the author and director, Hampton Del Ruth has maintained a reckless spirit of comedy, amounting almost to burlesque in the first part of the picture. The happy mood reaches its height in the wedding scene. Then suddenly the bride who has asked for a drink of water, falls lifeless to the floor. Then the scene merges from the festivities to the funeral wreath on the door. Her husband, sister and friends are then shown at the burial ceremony. There is at this point no suspicion but that tragedy is the final purpose of the picture, and in accomplishing this, the director has shown a marvelous skill.

The ending, however, proves a happy one, of a type which is better imagined than analyzed.

A beautiful and charming new actress, Alta Allen, has the featured part. There are a generous number of lovely close-ups which are much needed and much appreciated in this type of production. The whole cast is excellent, and includes Henry Walthall, Milton Sills, Irene Rich, Mitchell Lewis and Tully Marshall. The photography is good.

About to be buried, the cat revives and scampers away. The horrible thought occurs that Eleanor may have been buried alive. Bradley makes haste to exhume the body, but discovers the coffin empty. He rushes to Graydon's, where he discovers Eleanor in bridal array, on the operating table, breathing, and the doctor lying on the floor, dead. The scene fades. Eleanor is at home. All wait for her to come out of her faint. When she does Bradley leads her to the drawing-room and the marriage takes place.

"The Woman Who Fooled Herself"

May Allison Has an Attractive, Versatile Role in Associated Exhibitors' Release

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

May Allison gives an attractive performance in this Associated Exhibitors' release. The role is sophisticated enough to afford ample opportunities for wearing alluring costumes, and at the same time has a quality of sincerity that gives depth to the interest.

As a young girl, "late of the Follies and late with the rent," as one of several snappy subtitles suggests at the opening, she accepts the first profitable adventure that blows her way. This happens to be a South American mission in which her duty is to induce one of the noble families to sell their property at a loss. Naturally there is an ardent romance in what follows. The general mood of the picture changes at this point. The light comedy note is dropped and the theme becomes more sympathetic, and the action more dramatic.

There is an effective cabaret shot in which the star appears to artistic advantage and which is sharply interrupted when her South American lover makes a cave-man plunge into the scene. This is well done. Robert Ellis has varied his characterization with a lurking sullenness and fire that inspires interest. The cave-man motive continues as he kidnaps the girl and isolates her on his island plantation. The ending, however, is in keeping with acceptable standards, and the picture should be a popular attraction, generally. Frank Currier's performance is one of the choice features.

"Thorns and Orange Blossoms"

A Preferred Picture With Splendid Audience Appeal and an Out-and-Out Showman Feature

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

After viewing "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" one's mind naturally runs back to the other two Preferred Pictures, "Rich Men's Wives" and "Shadows." The first Gasnier production was a motherly affair and the Tom Forman feature constituted as splendid an artistic character study as this writer ever saw reflected on the screen. But "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" is more of an audience production than either of these. It is not as artistically beautifully done as "Shadows," true; nor does it carry the mother interest that "Rich Men's Wives" possesses. Yet, were we asked for a box office estimate on "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" we would boldly predict that this new Gasnier special would gross more at the box office than either of its predecessors.

And this statement is made with the fact in mind that "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" is minus a genius of Lon Chaney's type. And yet, despite the absence of truly big name, it is what can be called a showman's picture, because it offers so much in the way of exploitation. It is founded on a theme that is always surefire and as one studiously views the production the fact that the director worked with the box office ever in mind comes clearly to light. This feature is another home run for B. P. Schulberg and Gasnier.

"Thorns and Orange Blossoms" is a picture that will send the women away crying and boosting, and when a showman successfully plays on the heart of the so-called weaker sex he has accomplished all that his duties as showman call for. Satisfy the women, please them, make them happy by giving them a few tearful moments on the screen, and they'll send in droves of friends and relatives. That's an old show adage. But, true, nevertheless.

"Thorns and Orange Blossoms" is luxuriously produced with a cast of players each one of whom works industriously and naturally. The settings are at all times picturesque, but it is the theme that is gripping and it is so convincingly carried out to its most logical and clever conclusion that it cannot help but go over profitably to all who will book this feature. The adaptation by Hope Loring from Bertha M. Clay's novel is commendable and the direction equally as successful. But Estelle Taylor as Rosita carries off the individual laurels, with Kenneth Harlan and Arthur Hull giving her a close race. Edith Roberts is girlishly beautiful, with the rest of the cast satisfying.

"Thorns and Orange Blossoms" is an audience picture because it is a combination of heart-throbbers whose value has been tested, but chiefly because its beautiful story will appeal to no one set of fans, but, on the contrary, to all types and those with different tastes. In a word, this picture possesses all those dramatic sure-fires found in the most successful love stories.

Fearing that something would happen, Alan suggests that he and his sweet heart, Violet Beaton, elope. This is done. The marriage is kept a secret. A week later at the planned marriage at Violet's home, Alan learns of Rosita's intentions to interfere. He visits her and pleads with her in vain. About to leave she halts him with a gun, a struggle follows, during which the singer is shot. Jealous, she accuses Alan of having shot her. He is sentenced to five years in jail. Later, on learning of the elopement of Alan and Violet and the birth of a child to the pair, she relents and is instrumental in securing a pardon for the man whom her heart craved, but whom another had won.

"Why Worry"

(Smart Films, Inc.—Comedy—Two Reels)

They chose this initial release of the new Billy West two-reel comedies to death. "Why Worry?" has been chocked with stereotyped slapstick hokum that is seemingly as old as the picture business itself without a single original bit or stunt introduced. Billy is a hard worker, but because of the absence of genuine laugh material his efforts fall flat. They didn't muff a thing with the result that for antiquity in stuff, "Why Worry?" surely will not prompt anybody to do any worrying whatsoever. The reviewer understands Will Morrissey "conceived" the picture. That's difficult to believe for one who knows the extent of Will Morrissey's capabilities. Surely he is able to turn out a better "story."

Universal Announces Series of Six More Leather Pushers for Release

"The New Leather Pushers," a series of six more screen classics adapted from H. C. Witwer's inimitable prize ring stories, and translated to the screen for Universal by Director Harry Pollard, with Reginald Denny in the starring role, is ready for release, the Universal Picture Corporation announces.

"The New Leather Pushers" series is of the same quality of excellence that made the first series of six a surprise to the motion picture world. The same director, the same star and, in many instances, the same supporting cast have been used in order to hold up to the high standard set by the first six "Leather Pusher" pictures. The new series is said to be even better than the first.

The first of the new series is called "Young King Cole," and it will be released at two-week intervals. In the order of their release, they are "He Raised Kane," "The Chickasha Bone Crusher," "When Kane Met Abel," "Strike Father, Strike Son," and "Joan of Newark."

The pictures have a three-fold appeal. They find a ready audience in the thousands upon thousands of H. G. Witwer fans who followed his amusing series when it appeared in Collier's. Also the series has a strong appeal for sport lovers and followers of the boxing game. Finally, the pictures are popular because they are fast-moving, interesting two-reel features.

Hayden Stevenson, who made a name for himself as the "manager" of "Kid" Roberts in the first series, takes the same genial role in "The New Leather Pushers," and is an even more important part of the cast. Elinor Fields plays the leading woman role throughout the entire new series.

New Company

A distinct screen novelty is promised to filmdom with the forming of a new producing organization which will concentrate upon material of a comedy nature for short subject users.

The names of the officials of this organization have not yet been disclosed, but prominent among them is Harry G. Mason, who has won an enviable reputation in producing novel screen subjects of various natures.

A number of well-known humorous writers have been added to the organization, and they will contribute material for the different subjects.

Hammons on Way to West Coast

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., departed from New York this week for the Pacific Coast, accompanied by Sidney Brennecke. Mr. Hammons will spend a week or ten days visiting the studios producing pictures for the Educational Pictures program of short subjects and possibly reviewing some new subjects.

Mr. Hammons will return to New York about the first of December, but Mr. Brennecke will remain on the Coast for some time as his representative.

Pathe Lists 11 Subjects for Week Nov. 26

Harold Lloyd's widely heralded new five-reel comedy, "Dr. Jack," leads Pathe's release program for November 26, which lists eleven subjects, including Pathe News Nos. 96 and 97 and Topics of the Day No. 48. The Patheserial, "Speed," with Charles Hutchinson, reaches its sixth episode, called "Panic."

The program also presents another of the two-reel "Our Gang" Comedies, called "Young Sherlocks."

"His Enemy's Friend," with Leo Maloney in the Range Rider Series, gives the star an opportunity—which he makes the most of—to bring to a happy ending an ancient family feud in isolated mountain regions.

Other subjects completing the week's list of releases are "The Flivver," a one-reel production featuring Paul Parrott; the Harold Lloyd reissue "Don't Shave;" "The Fortune Hunters," the title of the Aesop's Film Fables, and Pathe Review No. 183.

Pathe Official Analyzes Short Subject Situation

In view of the rapidly increasing vogue of short subjects with picture patrons all over the United States owing to the specializing tendency in that direction on the part of exhibitors, and of the prominent position held by Pathe in the distribution of this type of material, Elmer Pearson, general manager and responsible head of that organization, was interviewed on the special points involved.

"The next big development of the motion picture industry, which is now fairly launched," said Mr. Pearson, "is almost certain to be in the short subject field. The signs are unmistakable. Both exhibitor and public are beginning to realize the intrinsic value of the short subject and before long will recognize its true worth.

"The moment when the exhibitor makes a proper and substantial price distinction between good short subjects and mere program fillers, from that moment the good short subjects will show attractive producer profits. The result will be a tremendous improvement in the quality and entertainment value of short subject profit.

"Today an exhibitor thinks nothing of paying ten times more for one five-reeler than he does for another, yet very few will recognize a 3 to 1 comparison in the value of news reels. It is also very rarely and reluctantly that he pays on the basis of a 4 to 1 comparison in the case of two-reel comedies.

"In the single-reel field, the producer and distributor have met with even greater discouragement, in that no matter how good or expensive your effort, unless you want to rent it at a given maximum at the average theatre, you can keep it.

"To anyone who gives it a thought, this condition is neither fair nor good business. Yet this is a condition that has prevailed for several years, with the result that no producer or distributor would think of putting more into such product than such a condition would permit them to get out of it.

"Naturally the short subjects got into a rut, and it took genuine financial courage and hard work even to make a start in getting it out. But persistence in any direction will not be denied; and a start having been accomplished, it is fair to assume that more rapid progress can now be looked for."

Completes Another Hallroom Comedy

Another new Hallroom Boys comedy has been completed and is ready for release to the state right market through C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. Sacred Films Indorsed by Exhibitors Body

At the regular luncheon of the M. P. T. O. of Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey at the Hotel Vendig, Philadelphia, on Friday, November 10, a series of Sacred Films were screened.

George Aarons, secretary of the exhibitor body, went on record for his organization indorsing and announcing that the theatre owners whom he represented would support Sacred Films in their theatres.

He said, "We have never before gone on record as indorsing a series of films, but we believe that the Bible stories produced by Sacred Films are an uplift to the industry and will be beneficial for all concerned."

Hodkinson to Release All Star Comedies

In order to inject exceptional comedy in their short subject program, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that beginning December 3 they will release the All Star Comedies one a month. These two reel comedies are made by the Affiliated Distributors, Inc.

There will be a series of thirteen All Star Comedies personally supervised by Charles C. Burr, producer of the famous "Torchy" series, and directed by Gregory La Gava.

The first two productions entitled "Faint Heart" and "The Four Orphans" have been shown to the home office of the Hodkinson Corporation and it is said that the executives are enthusiastic over them. The cast for these productions will be headed by Charles Murray and Raymond McKee.

Newsy Notes

In connection with the exploitation of the new Patbe serial, "Speed," a special novelization of the story in fifteen installments has been prepared by Herbert Crooker. Each installment corresponds to an episode of the serial. This is supplied in proof sheets or mats for newspaper and magazine use.

Neely Edwards has completed another comedy in the "Nervy Ned" series for Universal. It is "No Fare." William Watson directed, and Gertrude Olmstead is leading woman.

At a recent showing of Universal's "Mirror No. 1" at the Keith Theatre in Washington, ex-President Wilson was present. When the scenes showing him riding with President Harding at the latter's inauguration were flashed on the screen, there was a regular ovation which practically "stopped the show."

Harry Sweet has returned to the Century comedy forces and will be seen in the Lee Moran picture, "The Boarder."

The supporting cast for Baby Peggy in her new series for Century comedies include many players with long experience on the speaking stage. Among them are Joe Bonner, Arnold McDonald and Paul Stanhope.

Mack Sennett's latest comedy for First National distribution is "Bow Wow." Louise Fazenda is featured, and, of course, Teddy is a prominent member of the cast. It is said to be a "dog-gone good comedy."

C. B. C. announces that "All at Sea," the first of the Hallroom Boys Comedies made as a result of a questionnaire sent to exhibitors who voted overwhelmingly in favor of "action" comedies over "situation" comedies, was recently shown to a number of territorial buyers who praised it highly.

Pathe reports a strong demand from all sections of the country for the two-reel Harold Lloyd comedies, which they credit largely to the success he has made with his longer productions. The smaller houses are also heavily booking the single-reel Lloyd reissues.

Mr. H. Rodner, 1600 Broadway, has just contracted for the new series of "Out of the Inkwell," Max Fleisher's specialty, and Pat. Sullivan's "Felix, the Cat," for the Metropolitan district.

"Graphic 2546"

(Educational—Magazine—One Reel)

Probably the most interesting section in this issue of Educational's new screen magazine is a section, "Leading a Dog's Life," which shows how stray dogs are cared for at a home of their own. Also the luxurious life led by the pampered pups of the plutocrats, with toys, etc.; there are also views of a cemetery exclusively for dogs, with beautiful monuments and mausoleums. Another section shows how at an establishment in Rio Janeiro beautiful souvenirs are made from butterflies. Then there is a section showing typical scenes with the negroes on the Suwanee River. There is also a good Ollendorf Cartoon section.—C. S. S.

"Rolling Down to Rio"

(U. S. Navy—Special—Two Reels)

Under the title of "Rolling Down to Rio with Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes" this picture filmed and presented by the Navy Department is being shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York. It is interesting and in addition to calling attention to the exposition now being held in Rio Janeiro commemorating one hundred years of Brazilian independence, it shows points of interest in that city, warships and delegations from various foreign countries, a parade with U. S. Marines and gobs leading, and a boat race won by boys from the U. S. S. Maryland notwithstanding a bad start. There is also a full chronicle of the daily life of the sailors on Uncle Sam's warships, from reveille to taps, showing battle drill with the big guns, various sports and amusements, etc., which are so attractive as to make you wish you were one of the sailors.—C. S. S.

"His Enemy's Friend"

(Pathe—Drama—Two Reels)

Leo Maloney who stars in the series of "Range Rider" westerns again has the opportunity for considerable fast riding and hard fighting in this number. The high standard of interest and suspense set in previous issues is well maintained, and there are some excellent dramatic moments. The story involves a feud between two families of ranchers which has a satisfactory ending through the love affairs of the star and his enemy's daughter. This oft-used theme has been handled in such a manner that it holds the interest, and with the injection of new situations, particularly on the part of a younger brother, coupled with the rapid action, makes it a production that should be welcomed by any audience that likes Westerns.—C. S. S.

"Ranch Romeos"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Farm life and the country schoolhouse are the background for most of the action in this comedy in which Gilbert Holmes is featured. It opens with some speedy scenes in which the cattle keep the hero and his pal on the move, and develops into a good burlesque of a melodramatic plot. The boys go to meet the new school-teacher. She proves to be a beautiful young girl, who attracts the whole community, regardless of the age-line, to her school. A mysterious man appears and sells engagement rings of doubtful value to all her suitors. He turns out to be her husband, but instead of escaping with his wife, takes another girl and leaves the beautiful school teacher to the hero. The action is plentiful and spontaneous, with enough originality in the gags to keep the average comedy-fan entertained. M. K.

"Young Sherlocks"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Here is another of the "Our Gang" series of comedies, with a cast of kiddies and animals, and as a laugh-getter it is a corker. Any type of audience should enjoy it. It is every bit as good as the previous issues in this series which have won praise from the daily and trade press. It starts off with a band, with a view of a mule with a side-car attachment. Sunshine Sammy who has the leading role is riding the mule and the cute little two-year-old negro girl is in the clever side-car contraption. The manner in which Sammy secures goat's milk for his baby sister is sure to get laughs. He then gets in with a gang of kiddy desperadoes and to prove his valor he tells a tale of how he got the best of a gang of desperadoes and rescued a kidnapped heiress that is as wildly imaginative and heroic as any kid could wish. Just as he has his auditors awed his mother appears and leads him away by the ear. This picture will delight the kiddies and amuse the grown-ups immensely.—C. S. S.

"The Chased Bride"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This gives a slightly new version of the old story of true love winning over a rival by staging a mock wedding. Where it differs from the old story lies in the developments after the pair think themselves tied, for Neal Burns, the hero, has to chase wildly after his "sweetie," Vera Steadman, and the man who thought he married her, played by Victor Rodman. In his chase Burns commandeers an auto, a hand-car and a locomotive. The scenes of the latter are especially effective. The picture ought to prove good entertainment. The only fault is the portrayal of the pseudo minister. This may offend Puritans, but it shouldn't other folks.

S. S.

"The Split Outfit"

(Educational—Wilderness—One Reel)

Combined with fine scenic shots of mountains and woodlands which Robert Bruce knows so well how to photograph so as to bring out their beauty, is a very human little story which will make you smile and chuckle. It tells of two prospectors who have been partners for so many years that one gets on the other's nerves and they decide to split the outfit. They must keep together, however, till they reach civilization but decide not to speak to each other, but to write, if necessary. The climax comes when one nearly drowns; the other starts to write him a note but has to jump in and save him. He then writes the note and leaves it by his side. Of course, they become friends again and all goes smoothly.—C. S. S.

"Aladdin"

(Federated—Comedy—Two Reels)

This comedy, burlesquing the famous Arabian Night tale, resorts to the supernatural for its ridiculous effects. It combines a few weird thrills with broad comedy. It has been rather elaborately produced with effective Chinese settings and altogether registers as a subject of merit. Joe Rock is featured as a tailor who employs a dog to tear men's clothes, so as to increase his business. He tries this stunt on a Moorish prince to his sorrow and the feud grows as they both fall in love with the same girl. The Prince ires the tailor into a dungeon where gruesome shapes appear. By rubbing the lamp he escapes only to go through more wild adventures until he wins the girl. M. K.

"Hello Judge"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this Century Comedy Lee Moran is starred and he has abundant opportunities for effective work in the type of comedy which suits him. Director Gillstrom has handled the situations so as to bring out a lot of laughs, and it is in his handling and the star's work that the humor largely lies, for the theme is a well-used one, too-much mother-in law. There are some novel twists and some other material which though not especially new has proved its value as laugh-getters. It is a production which should thoroughly satisfy Lee Moran admirers. There is some quite clever stuff in the picture with a parrot and several kittens.—C. S. S.

"Rustlers of the Redwoods"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

This is another of the "Timber Tales" series and from the standpoint of general interest and entertainment value the series is providing one of the best ever issued by Universal. This number compares well with the former releases, and the interest is well sustained. Roy Stewart is the featured player and not only does he figure in the thrills, but the leading woman, Andree Tourner, also does effective work in a scene involving a fight on a runaway engine. Another thrill which does not quite get over as well as it might, shows Stewart at the top of a giant redwood tree when his enemies cut it down. There are some very fine shots of a redwood forest and interesting facts brought into the story as to how the U. S. Government is acting to conserve these magnificent monarchs of the forest.—C. S. S.

"The Big Scoop"

(Pathe—Comedy Drama—Two Reels)

Running a newspaper is the stunt performed by little Johnny Jones and Gertrude Messenge and the rest of their crowd in this number of the series of Johnny Jones comedies. It compares favorably with the previous releases and will be found very entertaining for the kiddies. However, many of the grown-ups, while enjoying the situations, will be apt to consider that the newspaper is a more pretentious and successful affair that a bunch of children could be expected to publish, particularly as they are shown competing seriously with an established town paper.—C. S. S.

"Camphor"

(Fox—Educational—One-Half Reel)

This shows facts about the use and formation of camphor that are not generally known. It is not too long, and will hold the interest of the average spectator. A few thrills are injected by indicating the difficulties under which the photographer labored while on the Isle of Formosa, inhabited by savages. M. K.

"The Mystery Box"

(Hodkinson—Special—One Real)

This first number in a series known as "Technical Romances," produced by Bray, is an illuminating treatment of a commanding subject—radio. It is the type of entertainment that deserves hearty recommendation. The subject is fascinating, the exposition vivid and easily understood. One can assume that by far the great majority of theatregoers are interested in seeing how radio gets its marvelous results. The pictures and diagrams in this are not too technical for the average spectator. It opens like a story and approaches the essential subject in a style that insures the interest. The electrical waves, the manner in which they carry sound, and their speed is indicated in simple style. M. K.

"Northwest Mounted Police"

(Goldwyn—Sport Film—One Reel)

Probably every patron of a motion picture theatre has seen the Northwest Mounted Police depicted in features. Here is a chance to see this splendid body of men in real life. The scenes which were taken at the training quarters of the "Mounted" show the rigorous physical training they undergo to fit them for their arduous duties with law-breakers in a sparsely settled country. There are some excellent maneuvers and skillful work on horseback with lances and sabres. Some of the scenes are shown in slow motion. This is an interesting number of the series of Sport Films.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review 183"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

In this issue of the Review, those who are responsible for the fine series of camera gems which have been a feature of recent numbers, out-do their best previous efforts. Beautiful scenes suggestive of famous paintings have been photographed. The illusion is excellent as the pictures are shown in a frame and even the "grain" of the canvas is visible. They have in addition, life and motion and the reality of nature. There are other interesting things in this reel, including a study of giraffes in a zoo and a picturesque section in color of the rocky coast of Brittany.—C. S. S.

"Felix Wakes Up"

(Winkler—Cartoon—One Reel)

The tale of the straying husband and the waiting wife is applied to Felix and his spouse with amusing results. Felix, after three nights absence from home has good intentions but falls asleep by the wayside. He is awakened by a doctor who has discovered the elixir of youth. Felix is the first subject and the experiment is so successful that he is brought back to the frisky days of his kittenhood. Presently, however, he discovers that it is all a dream as he finds himself being shaken into intense reality by his outraged wife. This number is a fair example of the usual Felix cartoon and pleased when shown at the Rivoli in New York. M. K.

Screen Snapshots No. 13

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Some of the most popular screen stars contribute to the success of this number. Among the interesting impressions are Thomas Meighan, playing the "Bachelor Daddy" to hundreds of California orphans; Bert Lytell enjoying the delights of the bathing surf, together with Roy Stewart and Lee Moran; E. K. Lincoln informally exhibiting his prize collection of chows, and Claire Windsor "submitting" to an arrest for speeding made by William Russell.—M. K.

Pathe Review No. 182

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

An exposition of the way in which a magnet works is perhaps the primary feature of interest in this group. As usual there are a few detailed glimpses of phenomena that will be new to the average spectator. Views of the Catskills supply the secenic splendor, Hy Mayer Travelaughs, the sporting scenes and some studies in clay, a combination of artistic and comic. The homeland of the Armenians is attractively pictured in the closing athe color scenes.—M. K.

"The Flivver"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

The title of this comedy featuring Paul Parrott correctly informs you of the fact that this is another offering in which the humorous situations are almost entirely dependent on what the principal comedian does with a flivver. In this instance it is not a "trick" machine performing almost human stunts, the laughs are produced by the difficulties the comedian experiences in putting and keeping the thing together. There is a clever situation where he runs it backwards and gets the best of a traffic cop. Most of the stunts in this picture, while they can be depended upon to get laughs, have been used before.—C. S. S.

Graphic No. 2547

(Educational—Magazine—One Reel)

This is an exceptionally good installment in the Educational series. Scenes of the harvesting of grapes in California are instructive and entertaining, close-ups and slow motion pictures of the woman golf champion earn their place in the Graphic, Cape Cod scenes of mackeral fishing, with pen and ink sketches, will also appeal, but the big feature is titled "The Bridle Paths of Central Park." Here there is a real thrill as well as human interest, for a real accident interrupted an illustration of how mounted police rescue the riders of runaway horses. The camera caught it all, even in slow motion.—S. S.

"The Sky Splitter"

(Hodkinson—Special—One Real)

An almost bewildering conception of the possibilities of a half-perfected invention of an aeroplane engine gives this subject a unique appeal. It is more like a fantasy than reality, and yet there is an underlying scientific basis for much of the action that makes it acceptable entertainment to almost every class of patrons. Adam Cooley's plan for the engine that would in time travel as fast as light is the basis for the picture. He is shown experimenting and trying out his theory in an automobile. He meets with an accident and in a dream, speeds up into the air, loses control of the engine, gets out of sight of the earth and lands on a strange planet. Here he finds a powerful telescope which gives him a glimpse of his own home in Connecticut. But because of the length of time it takes for light to travel, the scene which he observes is dated fifty years back. The picture is unusual and will be a fascinating revelation to many. A Technical Romance produced by Bray. M. K

"The Resident Patient"

(Educational—Drama—Two Reels)

Here we have another smooth-running, interesting Adventure of Sherlock, in two reels. This detective series is proving a great asset to Educational, and this last to be released maintains the prestige of its predecessors. Again the acting is exceptionally good and the continuity al. that could be desired. There's just one criticism; cut the scene that shows the noose being placed around the murdered mans' neck—it's a bit gruesome. S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Editor Travels

It became both my duty and pleasure to attend the fall meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, held in Rochester, N. Y., October 9 to 12, so loading my friend daughter, two suitcases and a gladstone bag into Nancy Hanks, the Go-Devil, I set forth. The route lay through Liberty, Binghamton, Owego and Ithaca, all in the Empire State.

The first night we stopped in Liberty and, having satisfied the inner man, visited the one and only moving picture show the village boasts. One of its owners presided at the box office. He informed me that the company would soon erect a new theatre to take the place of the present one. This sounded good until I had viewed the "show." After that—well, I dunno!

Due almost wholly to lack of screen illumination the picture was so dim that its details often could not be made out at all, and only during the projection of scenes having light photography could the picture be viewed with anything like satisfaction from midway of the house.

Added to this trouble was a brilliant piano light to the left of the screen—a light of five times the power required to enable the pianist to read the notes. It literally bored into the eyes of the audience.

This set up a terrific eyestrain for those with eyes sensitive to such an outrage; also, by reflex action in the eye, it pretty well killed what little there was to be seen of the picture.

In answer to a question I found that 25 amperes were being used. The condenser was very dirty. Correcting the above-mentioned troubles will result materially to this theatre's benefit.

Ithaca

Just how one enters Ithaca from Owego in winter I'm sure I don't know. A sign at the top of a long hill ("hill" is right) warns: "Put your machine into low. Don't depend on your brakes." But once you negotiate the slope you find yourself in a beautiful little city, the business part of which lies between high hills.

After supper we visited the Crescent Theatre and viewed an excellently projected photoplay in a very pretty and well-lighted auditorium. The picture brilliancy and intelligent auditorium lighting combined to eliminate all eye strain. After the show I found brother R. F. Dunis. I think the name is spelled right. I sometimes have difficulty in deciphering my own writing when it is done in semi-darkness.

One clever stunt impressed me in the Crescent projection room. The motor generator set is of the horizontal type. It set up considerable vibration in the projection room floor, on which it rested.

This in turn caused an annoying hum. Projectionist Dunis hit upon the following plan, which was in the nature of an experiment, but worked out 100 per cent. perfect. He secured a heavy wire cable, cut two holes in the ceiling of the room, passed the cable up over the ceiling joists and attached its ends to the yoke at either end of the motor generator, which now hangs suspended about two inches from the floor and runs almost noiselessly, communicating no vibration to the walls, ceiling or floor.

It runs in my mind that Dunis said he passed the cable over two heavy coil springs, such as are used in freight car trucks, which same rest on the joist. Of this I am not sure, however. Anyhow the trick works, and is decidedly ingenious.

All possible danger from breakage of the support may be removed by placing four blocks of hard rubber under the frame, just low enough so they do not touch it. Should the motor generator from any cause fall no damage would result. Power's 6B projectors are used.

Rochester

In Rochester I experienced a new sensation. When I had finally decided to attend the S. M. P. E. meeting I wrote the Rochester projectionist local offering to address them on projection, if they cared to arrange a meeting. I had requested an early reply, but up to the time of our departure for Rochester no word had come, so I concluded the local was not interested. Imagine my surprise when, at the opening session of the S. M. P. E. a letter was read by its secretary from the Rochester projectionists' local, extending an invitation to the society to attend a lecture to be given by F. H. Richardson at midnight that night, in the Victoria Theatre.

It later transpired that the local had experienced some difficulty in securing a theatre in which to hold the meeting, and when that detail was finally arranged the local wired an acceptance of my offer, but the message arrived after I had departed for Rochester. The joke was on me.

In company with some members of the society I, after some inquiry, located the Victoria, where a goodly number of projectionists were gathered, to whom I talked for an hour or more, and trust I accomplished at least some good.

While in Rochester I, in company with other members of the society, went through the new Eastman Theatre, of which we have all heard so much. What I have to say concerning the same is both very pleasant, and extremely unpleasant—pleasant because there is much to praise; unpleasant because sharp criticism is necessary, hence must be made. In conversation with several other members of the society I found my own view to be supported by their own impressions of what they saw.

We were all impressed by the imposing beauty of the facade of the theatre, by its immense oval-shape lobby and by the truly splendid auditorium. These have all been described and re-described many times, and nothing I might say could add to what has already been said.

It seems to me that a more impressively simple, and at the same time simply beautiful facade, lobby and auditorium could hardly be conceived. They all three appear to me to be entirely beyond just criticism. I wish to offer my congratulations to Mr. Eastman, heartily and sincerely, for the marvelously beautiful theatre he has caused to be erected. It is more of a temple of amusement than a theatre. It richly deserves all and more than has ever been said in its praise.

Lighting Good, Except—

The theatre auditorium lighting was excellent, except—and the "except" is a very serious matter, for across the front of the orchestra platform, or dais, was a row of ten music racks, set exactly side-on to the audience. The sides of the music box of these racks were not to exceed three inches high, and the white sheet music was therefore in more or less full view of a very large percentage of the audience.

This means ten spots of white light, and my own eyes bore ample testimony to the fact that, while it was true that comparatively low power lamps were used, these spots were GLARE SPOTS—they were decidedly objectionable. Others said the same thing.

It must be carefully borne in mind that what is an objectionable glare spot for one may not be objectionably so to another. Eyes vary widely in this respect. These spots did not exactly hurt my eyes, but they nevertheless were uncomfortable, and detracted from the beauty of what I saw on the screen. With a less brilliant picture the result would have been very bad indeed.

But this is not all, for at the rear of the platform were SIXTEEN music racks facing the screen, with nothing to prevent their light from reaching the screen, and that it DID REACH IT I CAN PERSONALLY BEAR TESTIMONY.

The front racks should have been set at an angle to the audience. Maybe the musician did not want it that way, but the audience DOES, and it is the audience who pays the musician's salary and supports the whole theatre. A musician who is willing to set up discomfort to two or three thousand people in order to be entirely comfortable himself, is not fit to play in a theatre at all.

In addition to turning the music rack at an angle, its sides should be raised several inches—ten or twelve, I would say, with the interior of the side shields painted a non-gloss black. The side next the audience may be decorated with artificial flowers, or otherwise.

The racks next the screen present a more difficult problem, but one which CAN be worked out. I was told that some one—the house electrician, I think it was—was "going to fix these faults." I hope he does.

The projection room location is such that the angle of projection is 24 degrees and 41 minutes, which is two degrees and forty-one minutes greater than the maximum projection angle approved by the S. M. P. E. It is sufficient to give an appreciable distortion on a vertical screen. It is the old policy of architects, who know nothing of projection and apparently care less, selecting a projection room location wherever there is space which has little or no value for any other purpose.

Due to the long distance of projection in the Eastman Theatre, which operates to minimize the effect of a too-heavy projection angle, coupled with the extreme unpleasantness of being compelled to criticise anything at all in so beautiful a house builded by a man for whom I have great admiration, I would let the too-great angle pass without comment, since the injury to the screen image is not serious, were it not for faults in the projection room itself.

But surely, in a theatre which, it is the proud boast, cost five millions of dollars, we may, in the very nature of things, expect to find a well appointed projection room of ample dimensions. At least we may certainly expect to find a room with something more than just barely sufficient space in which to do the work. But such, I am sorry to say, is not the case.

Imagine, if you can, a five-million-dollar theatre with a projection room six (6) feet from front to back wall at one end and a bit less than nine (9) at the other. Though, as I remember it, there is an offset in the rear wall at the wide end which makes about three or four feet of that end quite a bit deeper.

You could set the Eastman projection room down in the projection room of the Capitol Theatre, New York City, and still have pretty nearly as much room left as the Eastman men have to work in.

I am informed that J. E. Robin, projection engineer, New York City, who equipped the room, had plans drawn up for a really good room, but apparently the architect discarded them and substituted what I saw.

In the matter of equipment the room is very complete. Nothing to be desired there. There is a separate rheostat room and rewinding room and a huge motor generator. Simplex projectors are used.

I met L. M. Townsend, chief projectionist, who impressed me as an able, energetic projectionist. Had a long and pleasant chat with him.

In conversation with one of the other men I was a bit amused at his assertion that he was "an operator" and "didn't want to be nothin' but an operator!" I asked him what the angle of projection was. He did not know, so promptly I conceded his right to be dubbed "an operator."

Now, gentlemen, mind you, it is decidedly unpleasant to be compelled to criticise anything at all in such a magnificent theatre—a most unpleasant task indeed. But what is one to do? The Eastman has been set up as a model for others to follow, and certainly others should NOT follow its projection room location and size—particularly its size—nor the orchestra lighting which I saw. Those two things are most emphatically NOT models, though the rest of the theatre just as emphatically is, and the projection room equipment is. I forgot to say the theatre has two well equipped screening rooms.

The projection room staff is composed of L. M. Townsend, chief; Frank Britt, G. Harry Brophy, Cal. Bomkessel, William H. Levine and Lewis Levine. I don't know which one is "an operator."

WARNING

Do not let anyone sell you a subscription to MOVING PICTURE WORLD or any other paper, offering either a special bulletin service of projection helps or Richardson's new Fourth Edition Handbook of Projection as a premium.

Such a proposition has never been authorized by the publishers of MOVING PICTURE WORLD and anyone making such false representation is liable to arrest.

From Reno, Nevada

W. J. Neff, P. O. Box 366, Reno, Nevada, writes:

F. H. Richardson:

Dear Sir and Brother—Received my copy of the "Blue Book of Projection" some time ago and have gone through it very carefully. I certainly want to congratulate you on the excellence of the work.

I have been in the game ever since the days when the first little gray covered edition made its appearance (1910 Ed.), hence am in position to appreciate the progress which has been made in projection, credit for which is very largely due to the Projection Department and the Handbook. Anyone having examined the new book cannot help but admit that to be master of the specialized business of motion picture projection requires considerable study and knowledge.

Your method of handling the indexing is to be highly commended; also the questions have been incorporated very nicely indeed.

The book will undoubtedly have a very large sale, which same it certainly deserves. Why not adopt the idea or suggestion made by a brother some time ago and publish it in other languages?

The Reason

The reason why the handbook is not published in other languages is that it would be next to impossible to get such a work translated correctly, and then too the cost would be so great that the limited number of theatres a work in any other one language would serve would almost certainly make the venture a losing one from the financial viewpoint.

Moreover, different lands have different equipment and different methods. The translation proposition has been carefully gone over, not once, but many times.

Incidentally the Fourth Edition really should be the Fifth Edition, and would be were I to call the little vest pocket edition published in the spring of 1907 my "first edition." I did and do not think a vest pocket book was entitled to the dignity of being called a "First Edition," although many, many thousands of them were sold, it being the very first work on motion picture projection ever published, so far as I have been able to find out.

A Robert Morton Organ Is a Feature of Honolulu's Fine Hawaii Theatre

A FEATURE of the Hawaii, the new half-million-dollar picture theatre of Honolulu is the great Robert Morton organ which was installed at a cost of over $42,000. The American Photo Player Company were six months in building the organ and three months were occupied in assemblying it in the specially built chambers of the theatre.

Erected by Expert

Gail Seward, one of the American Photo Player Company's most expert workmen, was sent to Honolulu to do this work.

The organ is a four-manualed instrument, and contains 72 stops. Each stop represents a different tone or pitch; all of these are distributed among the various rows of keys or manuals.

The heavy tones are all played with the feet. It can easily be realized what possibilities there are for the blending of innumerable tonal colors, together with the faintest whisper of music swelling to the glorious power of the full organ, which no other instrument in the world can imitate.

The pipes and effects are enclosed in two concrete weather and airproof chambers, situated on either side of the proscenium arch.

Facing the auditorium but covered with beautifully designed grill work are wooden shutters which are controlled by balanced pedals at the console, which is situated in the center of the orchestral pit.

These pedals are worked by the organist and are termed expression pedals, and have the effect of making the music increase or decrease at will. Besides the regular type of stops, there are to be found on the Hawaii instrument two sets of cathedral chimes, xylophones, orchestral bells, drums and cymbal.

In addition to the regular touch on the various keyboards, an innovation is a second touch, by which various stops can be played in conjunction with those on the ordinary touch, by the organist pressing the keys a little harder and releasing another set of springs.

The console is set on a platform which can be raised or lowered at will by means of hydraulic power, the organist simply pressing a button at the keyboard.

The Projection Room

The Hawaii projection room contains three motor-driven Simplex projectors, a stercopticon and a flood light.

The theatre is entirely independent of public service current, as it has its own generating plant and electric storage system.

The plumbing equipment is wonderfully up to date and complete, and from the drinking fountain in the waiting rooms to the shower baths in the dressing rooms, no expense has been spared. The cost of the theatre plumbing runs well into five figures.

The Hawaii is operated by the Consolidated Amusement Company, of which J. H. McGoon is the general manager and Benjamin F. Simpson the house manager. Percy Burraston is the organist who presides at the great Robert Morton organ.

Albany Will Have New Film Building

A building which will be entirely occupied by film exchanges, with projection rooms and similar features, will be built in Albany, N. Y., and available for occupancy not later than May 1, 1923. The building will be located in Broadway adjacent to "Film Row."

Fireproof construction will prevail throughout. The building will cost upwards of $250,000 and will be at least six or seven stories in height. Two to three exchanges will be located to a floor.

The building will be the first of its kind, outside of New York City, in this State. Those who are behind the venture believe that there is ample room for such a building in Albany, and that the industry itself will appreciate the advantages which will come from centralization. The entire film business of Albany, and the surrounding territory, which includes at least 350 theatres, will be transacted in the one building, with projection rooms available at any time.

More Than One Dozen Albany Exchanges

At the present time there are over a dozen exchanges in Albany. Some of these are located in Orange street, others along Broadway, and still others three or four blocks distant. With the exception of Paramount, which owns its own building, these exchanges now occupy quarters in buildings that, while they charge high rentals, are not particularly fitted for the purposes they are now given to.

The exchanges in Albany include the Universal, First National, Pathe, Paramount, Inter-Church Film Corporation, Fox, Grand & North, F. B. O. of America, Select, Merit, American Releasing Corporation, Vitagraph and Educational, with Goldwyn now about to open an exchange, probably on the third floor of the building now occupied by Universal and Grand & North.

Claremont Expands

Due to the expansion of its business, the Claremont Film Laboratories, Inc., of 430 Claremont Parkway, New York City, has been reorganized under the name, Claremont Laboratories, Inc., and its capital increased.

The new corporation has taken over the entire business of the former corporation and has assumed all its obligations. No change has been made in the personnel of the corporation or its officers.

Hallberg Resigns from the U. T. E. to Engage in Research and Exploitation

H. HALLBERG resigned, on November 1, as consulting engineer of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation, to devote his entire energies to the manufacture, improvement and exploitation of the Hallberg products, and to act as consulting technical engineer for moving picture theatre owners, inventors and manufacturers.

Mr. Hallberg is a pioneer inventor and manufacturer of picture theatre and electrical apparatus, having entered the field in 1907.

More than five thousand exhibitors in the United States and many others abroad are today using apparatus bearing his name.

J. H. HALLBERG
A Pioneer in the Picture Theatre Equipment field.

Father of a Great Line

A list of the Hallberg apparatus includes motor generators A-C to D-C, the Hallberg A-C economizer, Mazda lamp regulator, the Hallberg continuous feed arc control, the Hallberg electric film speed indicator and recorder, the Hallberg portable featherweight electric light plant and projector, the Hallberg direct connected gasoline and kerosine electric light plants, the Hallberg D-C motor generator charger for six-volt radio batteries, the Hallberg featherweight 200-watt electric generating plant, radio storage batteries, and Hallberg electric instruments for all voltages for D-C or A-C or any frequency for switchboard or wall mounting, also portable volt meters, watt meters and frequency meters.

Mr. Hallberg maintains a research laboratory for making comparative efficiency tests for inventors, investors and manufacturers.

In his long connection with and high position in the business end of the motion picture industry, an extended personal knowledge of the comparative values of different types of electrical apparatus renders his advice to inventors and prospective investors particularly valuable.

Developing Radio Apparatus

To his line of motion picture apparatus, Mr. Hallberg has recently added a high class line of receiving radio apparatus adapted to theatres, commercial institutions and the home, one type of which may be operated direct from any 110-volt lighting circuit and without batteries or aerials.

Mr. Hallberg retains, until further notice, his offices at 25 West 45th street, New York City, and from which an extensive sales campaign for Hallberg products will be conducted.

Invites Correspondence

All users of Hallberg economizers, motor generators and other specialties are cordially invited by Mr. Hallberg to correspond with him or to call for any information which may be of value in operating or improving operation of Hallberg equipment.

A service engineering department is maintained and Mr. Hallberg personally takes a keen interest in the continued satisfactory operation of his apparatus after its installation and will be glad to offer advice to old or prospective users of his machines.

In the consulting engineering department, motion picture theatre owners, inventors, prospective investors and manufacturers are met for the purpose of discussing proposed installations, inventions and the merit of various types of old and new apparatus.

Mr. Hallberg states that he is open to the agency for exclusive and specially meritorious apparatus and that he will be glad to hear from established distributors and dealers concerning the sale of the Hallberg product.

Every Exhibitor His Own Lighting Artist

The exhibitor who wishes to produce his own color effects, on either inside or outside lights, will be interested in the Perma-Color-Lite products, for which the Behrend Motion Picture Supply House, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, are the distributors for New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania.

The Perma line is put up in containers of gallon, quart, pint, eight-ounce and four-ounce capacity, so that any number of bulbs desired may be dipped and colored at one time and without waste; or the exhibitor may carry in stock sufficient material to take care of his needs far in advance.

The Line in Detail

The line of Perma products consists of Color-Lite, for use on inside bulbs; Opalite, which is waterproof and weather-proof, for use outside, and Frostine, which gives a translucent light, is permanent for inside use.

Color-Lite is a transparent coating for electric lamps and gives a smooth, hard, even, natural glass finish, and, being waterproof, will keep indefinitely.

A hard enamel surface with a high polish is produced with Opalite and this finish is waterproof and permanent for outdoor use. It will not peel and can be washed away when soiled.

Frostine produces a hard, solvent, rough surface, gives a translucent light and a beautiful colored frosted effect. It is permanent for indoor use and can be washed away when dirty. For those desiring to use frosted lamps, same as supplied by the lamp manufacturers, Permafrost, which is an etching acid, is offered by the Behrend Motion Picture Supply House.

A complete line of the Perma products is always carried in stock by the Behrend Motion Picture Supply House, who will send, on application, a price list of the entire line and full information in regard to its use.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—James Carrigan, operating Aristo Theatre, is considering site for erection of new theatre, to cost $1,500,000.

Power's Projector Performance Wins Commendation From Secretary Denby

IN our issue of June 3, we mentioned that Chief Electrician's Mate Elwood R. Murphy would be in charge of the projection on board the U. S. Transport Henderson, which carried Secretary Denby and party to Japan. The Henderson left on May 20 and in addition to Secretary Denby, the party included the class of 1881 of the United States Naval Academy, which visited Japan at the invitation of the Japanese Government.

WHY THE PROJECTION WAS GOOD
Chief Electrician's Mate Elwood R. Murphy explaining the merits of the Power's Projector to Secretary Denby.

The trip proved a pleasant one and everyone apparently had a fine time, as well they might under the circumstances, but E. R. Murphy evidently had a particularly good time. He has written a letter to M. D. O'Brien, traveling representative of the Nicholas Power Co., in which he says:

Murphy's Letter

I enjoyed the cruise very much and became personally acquainted with the secretary.

The day before our arrival in San Francisco, his orderly came down with the message that I was wanted in the cabin. I obeyed the request, and much to my pleasure, received from the navy chief a congratulatory speech for the projection and the selection of so many good programs.

In addition he presented me with a beautiful pair of gold cuff buttons as a token of appreciation and remembrance from him and Mrs. Denby. The projector I used was a Power's, which you probably will remember, as it was one from the school and had just passed through the exchange after being repaired at the Power's factory. It worked splendidly and gave a good show every night at sea the entire trip. I asked the secretary to stand for a picture with me, and the result you can see for yourself.

A Power's Booster

Mr. Murphy, who is in charge of motion picture projectors for the navy on the Pacific Coast and whose present address is United States Ship Vestal, San Pedro, Cal., is an enthusiastic believer in Power's projectors.

This episode of Mr. Murphy's career is interesting as evidence of the wide-spread use of motion pictures and their indispensability.

It is also an indication of the democratic spirit of Secretary Denby and shows that he knows good projection when he sees it, and is willing to give a projectionist and the projector the credit they deserve.

Each day audiences and exhibitors are learning to better appreciate the importance of good projection and more and more credit will be given to the men and machines away up at the top and rear of the house. Better projection pays and is an asset under any and all circumstances.

Schenectady State to Open Shortly

The State Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., latest in the chain of Strand houses and costing approximately $400,000, will be opened to the public during the week of November 26.

Edwin O. Weinberg will act as manager until the Troy Strand is opened, when he will become manager of that house, according to present plans. Mr. Weinberg was formerly manager of a Troy theatre, later of the Elmwood and Mark Strand in Buffalo, and likewise served in a similar capacity at the Strand in Syracuse during the illness of Manager Weill.

The State will seat 2,500 persons on the ground floor and 1,000 in the balcony. The house is of stadium-like construction, with a wide cross-over in the centre. There are eleven loge boxes and two proscenium boxes.

Management Changes

MT. PLEASANT, IA.—Earl Hoaglin has sold his moving picture house, the Auditorium, to D. E. Arries and M. L. Dickson.

BETHANY, MO.—Lloyd Maple, of Fairfax, has taken over management of Rigney Theatre.

BRECKENRIDGE, TEXAS.—Ray Stinnett has purchased National Theatre.

WACO, TEXAS.—Royal Amusement Company, recently organized by the three Witt brothers, has taken over and will operate Royal Theatre.

Do your patrons get their money's worth?

ARE you sending your patrons home with the feeling that their evening has been well and profitably spent? Are they happy and smiling—or do you send them away with eye-strain?

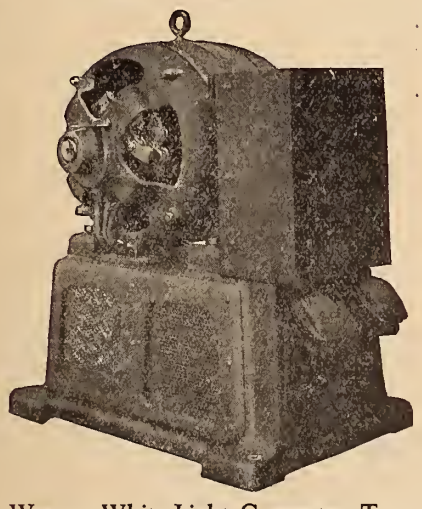
Selecting the program is only part of the job of displaying pictures. Putting it on the screen is the other equally important part and depends on the light and light control.

Poor projection of an interesting picture annoys an audience—good projection of a less interesting picture will hold them. How much more important than elaborate decorations is proper light for projection? A well displayed picture will make them forget the surroundings, but no decorations will compensate for eye-strain caused by poor lighting.

The most intense light that can be selected is that of the direct current arc. And the most improved type of apparatus to convert the usual alternating current into direct is the Wagner White-Light Converter. It gives a brilliant white light which is also steady, easily controlled and perfectly dissolving at change over.

Installing a Wagner White-Light Converter is assuring clear cut pictures, freedom from flicker and from its consequent eye strain.

How the Wagner White-Light Converter performs this is described interestingly in a book entitled "Light For Motion Picture Projection" which you can get simply by filling in the coupon and forwarding it to us. Light is the important accessory in your business even though it is a minor item in the total expense of the theatre. The many advantages and conveniences connected with the Converter are explained in plain language with just enough of the technical to answer any questions that arise. Shall we send you a copy?



Wagner White-Light Converter, Type S. C. includes converter, transformer element and starting switch. Ballast resistance, polarity switch and ammeter are included as part of the equipment and furnished in separate units.

Kurtz Becomes Sales Manager of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company

K. G. Kurtz, who has just been appointed general sales manager of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company in Chicago, has enjoyed a long and varied experience in the musical branch of the motion picture industry.

Starting in early life as a pianist for various traveling shows, at the age of twenty he became musical director for B. C. Whitney's musical successes. While acting in this capacity Mr. Kurtz composed many popular song hits.

With the rise of the motion picture industry Mr. Kurtz transferred his allegiance to that business and claims to be one of the original drum and piano slammers of the early motion picture days.

Busy Days

He relates how, while manager of one of the first Indianapolis motion picture theatres, his duties consisted of handling the paper in front of the theatre, relieving the projectionist during the supper show, assisting with the clean-up work in the morning, and for the remaining ten hours of the day pounding the piano loud enough to pull the people in off the street.

While so engaged Mr. Kurtz was attracted to the pipe organ for motion picture houses and was one of the first motion picture theatre pipe organists in Chicago.

Upon the organization of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company he became identified with that concern and was Bartola's first demonstrator, and, later, had charge of the company's school of players.

During the absence of salesmen, Mr. Kurtz closed several deals for the sale of instruments and, having acquired a taste for that end of the business, he stuck to it, and for the last eight years has been in the sales department of the Bartola Company.

The rapid growth of the Bartola Company, which has recently made a considerable addition to its factory, necessitated the adding to the sales force and Mr. Kurtz was accordingly selected to take over the entire sales management and succeeds Dan Barton, who now finds it necessary to delegate many of the details of the business to his subordinates.

K. G. KURTZ
The Bartola Musical Instrument Company's New Sales Manager.

Mr. Kurtz, who is well known to the motion picture exhibitors, has the reputation of having attended every exhibitor convention.

His headquarters will be in the newly appointed sales office and demonstration room of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, at 314 Mallers Building, Chicago.

MOV-EZY

"Means Ease at the Movies"

PARDON ME!

After six or eight people have been forced to stand to allow two to take their seats, an apology is a pretty poor solace to the annoyance which has been caused.

How much better it would be to give your patrons the convenience of the Mov-Ezy Chair. This newest and most practical form of movie seat swings to either side, permitting an ample passageway between rows for persons to enter or leave their seats, without in any manner disturbing the others in the row.

The Mov-Ezy Chair "Means Ease at the Movies" for all. It has the comforts of an ordinary home chair, with side arms and a high back. It increases the seating capacity of your theatre by allowing more chairs to the row than the old fashioned type of seat.

"WILL ROGERS

always a favorite, scores heavily as Ichabod Crane"

NEW YORK REVIEW

NEW YORK REVIEW: "The Headless Horseman" does credit to the great story by Washington Irving.

It should be hailed with a good deal of delight by the lovers of the ever-fascinating tale of the "romantic Ichabod Crane."

Will Rogers, always a favorite, scores heavily as Ichabod Crane. His characterization is clever and his performance all one could ask for.

"The Headless Horseman" shows what can be accomplished when an intelligent and sympathetic director decides to undertake the picturization of one of the classics. Why can't we have more such directors as Mr. Venturini and such actors as Will Rogers?

"The Headless Horseman" brings to the moving picture world something new and something well worth keeping.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Will Rogers has achieved the unusual in picturing the loveless Ichabod. The characterization is one that presents extreme difficulties, in understanding the type of man who is not likeable enough to win your entire sympathy, yet preserving something that keeps him from being at all times ludicrous. Mr. Rogers has avoided burlesque even though there seems to be plenty of temptation. He is funny in a natural consistent way, as one can imagine the author intended.

The ride of the Headless Horseman is the dramatic triumph of the picture. It is comic and weird by turns. These scenes have been vivified by skillful lighting and shading, and some spectacular shots of the sky at night. The whole production shows great care, and unusual regard for detail and a faithfulness in the characters and settings that bespeaks fine directing.

HARRISON'S REPORTS: It is well directed and for the most part well acted and artistically and realistically produced.

EXHIBITORS HERALD: Will Rogers fits the role of Ichabod Crane about as perfectly as anyone could desire and he is given excellent support by Lois Meredith and others.

It is well staged, excellently photographed and on the strength of the author's name should attract attention and should win appreciation from varying types of audiences.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH: Bringing one of the outstanding American classics to the screen is in itself a worthy achievement. "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," by Washington Irving, is one of the required pieces of literature in every school and should be seen in its screen version by all students, as it has been carried out with as much of the original charm of Irving as accurate settings on the actual location of the story can give it.

The picture remains a delightful record of the life of other days and will serve to stimulate interest in the reading of the Irving story.

FILM DAILY: Rogers does fine work in vivid picturization of popular Irving story.

An amusing and convincing Ichabod Crane will delight everybody with his work in this.

Exhibitors should have very little trouble to induce their patrons to see "The Headless Horseman." Everyone is familiar with Irving's story, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," and they have probably all read it whether they wanted to or not—in school. You can promise an interesting presentation of the story and a good wholesome entertainment in C. S. Clancy's production.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: "The Headless Horseman," adapted from Washington Irving's "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," will be a rare bit of entertainment. It has been beautifully produced and Will Rogers gives a screamingly funny portrayal of Ichabod Crane.

Harrison's Report --- Extremely well acted, -- far exceeds one's expectations. -- Deserted at the Altar -- should appeal to all.

New York News --- It's a better picture than you expect to see.

Reeland Reviews --- Fast moving intelligent action --- your people are going to like it.

New York Globe and Commercial Advertiser: The charm which Deserted at the Altar possesses is unquestionably due to the simple, yet forceful way the story has been handled.

Variety —"Deserted at the Altar" furnishes a lot of action and a corking mob scene is staged just before the finish.

New York Morning Telegraph — Deserted at the Altar should be a big money maker throughout the country.

Trade Review — "Deserted at the Altar" is a remarkably creditable production. The atmosphere throughout is of the small town and is faithfully portrayed.

Moving Picture World: Scenically "Deserted at the Altar" is a beauty, the director having been unusually careful in the selection of his locations which are beautiful to look at.

"Her Best Picture!"

Chicago Evening Post

HERE'S WHAT THE CHICAGO NEWSPAPER CRITICS HAVE TO SAY:

An Intriguing Vehicle

"Our most beautiful lady has an intriguing vehicle in 'White Shoulders.' She also has a good supporting cast and a good director. The action is all good. The story has several splendid scenes, well photographed, with good sets and scenes."—Chicago Tribune.

Expresses Deep Feeling

"Quite as interesting as a picture as a story—and the story was very interesting. The direction is clever. The story is quite unusual. Katherine MacDonald's impressive beauty would alone fit her for the part, but she also brings to it an expression of deep feeling. I've never seen her act a better part. And certainly she has never looked more beautiful. The rest of the cast is well chosen. One of the best pictures Miss MacDonald has played in."—Chicago Evening Post.

Exceedingly Good

"A good story and Miss MacDonald is exceedingly good. One would almost think the author had her in mind so well does the character fit her. There are many dramatic scenes."—Chicago Herald-Examiner.

Her mother placed her on the auction block of marriage—and her brother went to prison for avenging a slur on her name.

Let's hope that he never finds the elixir of youth unless he can drink sufficient to keep him what he is today—the most beloved, the most delightful, the most wonderful child that ever stepped before a camera. It is going to be a tough day for moving pictures when Jackie ceases to be Jackie and becomes Jack.

Somehow or other you can't escape Jackie in "Oliver Twist." You don't want to. Frank Lloyd has made a masterpiece. If You Pass This By—Close Up

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

They're asking a lot of money for "Oliver Twist" but it's worth it. You may be frightened and think it is a hold-up but you needn't be. You cannot afford to let the other fellow get it.

Every once in a while—only too seldom—there comes a picture like this and the exhibitor who hasn't a business brain sufficient to run a "Tiffany" when it comes along deserves all the kicks that he usually tries to pass to someone else.

You have so much to work with here that it seems a waste of time and energy to have to tell you about it. Every woman who visits your theater will just "love" Jackie and best of all, it will bring into your house hundreds of people who are Dickens fans and who usually do not attend picture theaters.

In addition you have besides Jackie and Dickens, the name of Frank Lloyd, a director of unusual importance and a list of stars and capable actors rarely matched in any one production. Lon Chaney has a tremendous following. Every one remembers George Siegmann from his Griffith connection. Gladys Brockwell starred; Lewis Sargent as well, and there are many others.

All you need to know is this—get it.

To Be or Not to Be

The Friars' dinner to Kenesaw Landis, Augustus Thomas and Will Hays brought forth the interesting suggestion from Thomas, dean of the theatre, that stage and screen producers should combine forces to produce the "Hamlet" of John Barrymore in films. The suggestion, put forward as a means of "sanctifying" the screen, has brought varied comment from film producers and distributors. Jim Whoozis, of the Bul-Bul Company, stole a march on his fellows, though, and produced the picture at a cost of $200,000. We will now listen in on a sales conference of the Bul-Bul Company's branch managers, special representatives, expense account hounds and hotel lobby decorations:

The Grand Annual Sales Conference

Jim Whoozis has the floor. "Boys," he says, "we got a tough baby to sell in this here 'Hamlet.' Gus Thomas kidded me into making it with a lot of talk about art and now the only suggestion he's got to help is that I put it in the Smithsonian Institute for an extended run.

"It's a lame duck but we got to sell it—you and me, mostly you. If you don't the Post Office will be returning your expense accounts marked 'Party No Longer at This Address.' And there won't be any other address, either.

"The entire board of directors put its entire brain to work on this problem and you can't say we aint helping you. We got a great big new idea to fool the exhibitors. We won't mention this guy Shakespeare's name at all, 'cause that would be sure death, and we aint going to say it's a 'classic' 'cause then they think you mean a school and church feature.

An Unprecedented Exploitation Campaign

"All the year I been feeding that exploitation department of ours and wondering whether it wouldn't be better I played the money on the races and forgot the bookmaker's name. But I got to say, boys, them fellers is going to save the ship on this 'Hamlet.' They been exploiting me so long they're getting good.

"We got the greatest tie-ups arranged for this picture you ever saw. All the one-arm joints in the country are going to feature 'Ham Omelettes a la Hamlet,' only I hope that don't put no ideas in the audiences' heads.

"The manufacturer of 'Hamlet' cigars is going to send one to every exhibitor in the country and if the cigars are as bad as I hope, you ought to be able to put the picture over before they wake up.

"One of the experts in the exploitation department knows a fellow who once played poker with a printer who worked in Marion, Ohio, and he's going to see if he can't get the President to write a message or something or other.

And a Final Word

"Boys, I expect the worst and I aint going to be disappointed this time.

"However, the national quota on the Bul-Bul Company's special super-extraordinary production of 'Hamlet' is ONE MILLION FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS. Try and get it.

"And don't forget—no Shakespeare and no classic. Don't tip them exhibitors off—they're getting wise enough. The story is by Spencer Emerson Geraghty, entire idea conceived and directed by Thomas Neilan, sets by Inter-Urban, grave-yard effect by permission of General Film, and production supervised and regretted by Jim Whoozis.

"Just a parting word—if you play up the murders and the grave-yard and John Barrymore enough they may think it's another one of them Sherlock Holmes adventures. Try that out."

The Statement to the Press

Following the sales conference a statement was issued to the trade papers as follows, and worse:

"The seventy-three high-powered sales wizards of the Bul-Bul Company assembled in New York yesterday received what they unanimously and with one mind proclaimed the greatest news of their lives in the stupendous announcement that after four months of arduous and expensive labors the Bul-Bul Company had completed the massive, monster and monstrous production of the greatest melodrama of all time, 'Hamlet,' from the story by Emerson Spencer Geraghty.

"President Whoozis, of the Bul-Bul Company, led the cheering that greeted this announcement and lasted for over eighteen minutes until finally the whirlwind sales force was dry for the first time since the opening of the convention.

"Enthusiasm reached a feverish pitch when President Whoozis announced the unprecedented exploitation——."

You finish it.

EDITOR'S NOTE—There isn't a trade paper reader or a film man anywhere who hasn't heard of Harry Reichenbach or Reichenbach campaigns on motion pictures. Many of his exploits and stunts have found their way into print, but next week—for the first time—Moving Picture World will publish a complete "Start to Finish" recital of a Reichenbach campaign. "The Dangerous Age" is a title that offers the exhibitor an unusual opportunity for exploitation. Moving Picture World sent Roger Ferri to Paterson, N. J., to trail the campaign on this big Louis B. Mayer-First National special, so that it would present a concise, carefully prepared and analyzed showman's step to step account that would open the exploitation possibilities of the production to all its readers.

G. B. Howard Dies

Noted Author Found Dead in His Apartment in Hollywood

George Bronson Howard, noted American novelist, war correspondent and playwright, and for the past six months a member of the scenario staff at Universal City, was found dead from gas in his apartment, in Hollywood, Tuesday morning. There was no indication that he premeditated suicide. He had been suffering, however, from wounds received in the British Ambulance Service during the World War.

Howard had a varied and adventurous career. Born in Howard County, Md., in 1884, he first became known as a war correspondent for the London Daily Chronicle in the Russo-Japanese War. After that war, he returned to the United States and worked for various American newspapers, including the New York Herald and the Baltimore American. Later he turned to fiction, and at times was on the writing staff of such magazines as Sunset, Popular, Smart Set, and the Green Book. He served as dramatic critic for the New York Morning Telegraph, and was also well known as a playwright.

Hits at Movies

Drastic Bill Introduced to Prevent Children Attending Picture Shows.

A bill prohibiting children less than twelve years of age from attending a theatre or motion picture show unless accompanied by a parent, guardian or other adult person, unless the picture, exhibition or other entertainment is given under the auspices of a recognized educational or religious agency, or is designed especially for the amusement or instruction of children and has been approved in writing by the superintendent of schools, superintendent of county department of public welfare or a clergyman of some local church, will be included in the proposed changes in the Kansas Children's Code laws, to be presented at the next meeting of the Legislature by the code commission.

Joins Distinctive

Distinctive Pictures' Corporation announces that Howard Estabrook will join the organization as general assistant to Arthur S. Friend, president, and Henry M. Hobart, vice-president and production manager, resigning from Film Booking Offices of America as head of the sales promotion and educational departments. In his new capacity Mr. Estabrook will be closely affiliated with the extensive production plans of Distinctive, which include several new units in addition to the George Arliss pictures.

Mr. Estabrook entered the motion picture industry in 1914 with George Kleine.

Outline Their Policy

Independent New York Exhibitors to Oppose Circuits

The Associated Booking Corporation places itself squarely on record as an organization founded solely to assist independent exhibitors in securing a share of the first-run attractions that are being offered, which up to the present time have been denied them, regardless of price, regardless of their situation or regardless of their investments, solely because of the collective buying power of the circuits. It is because of this collective buying power that the A. B. C. is being formed.

The statement says, in part:

"It is only those producers whose interests are closely allied with the various circuits whose power is in danger of being lessened that are giving the A. B. C. the unfair fight that it expected and is getting under the very thin cloak of not selling combinations. Unfortunately those circuits, being also producers, can through their organizations influence some of the producers to do their bidding. But in the eyes of the industry, the A. B. C. knows that there is absolutely no difference between this body of independent exhibitors and the organizations of stockholders and partnership theatres controlled by the present circuits.

"The A. B. C. wishes to state that it is not asking any favors of any exhibitor circuits, of any producers who do not wish to deal with them, that they do not wish to control prices or to drive anyone out of business, but are simply a protective association of New York exhibitors who are tired of being told that they cannot get first-run pictures because they are too small individually and that they will not be allowed to have them if they are too big collectively."

After Film Thieves

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association has signed a contract with the William J. Burns Detective Agency whereby its interests will be protected by that agency the world over. The action is looked on as the beginning of a determined offensive against film thieves.

Levenson Foresees End of Censorship

ACCORDING to Joseph Levenson, secretary of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, that body will make absolutely no attempt to perpetuate its existence. In fact, according to Mr. Levenson's own words, "it would be very objectionable to many people, if the Commission sought to perpetuate itself. The matter rests with the State Legislature and public opinion. If public opinion wants the Commission wiped out, it will be wiped out. As Governor-elect Smith has announced that he is opposed to the censorship of motion pictures, it appears certain that he will get his way, as the Senate is Democratic, and the Assembly very close. There is nothing that the Commission can do about it."

Apparently, Secretary Levenson has fully made up his mind that censorship of motion pictures in New York State will soon become a thing of the past. Probably one of the first bills that will be introduced in the Legislature next January will call for the abolishment of the Commission, thus sounding the knell of censorship.

Changes Asked For

Wants Simpler Regulations for Re-Entry of Films

The Treasury Department, Washington, D. C., has been asked to simplify its regulations governing the re-entry into the United States of American goods returned from abroad without the payment of duty so as to facilitate such admissions of motion picture films. It was learned that Jack S. Connolly, representing the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., conferred with Ernest W. Camp, chief of the Division of Customs of the Treasury Department, and placed the views of the film interests before him.

A system of registering the films when exported has been suggested, it is understood. The Department has agreed to give prompt attention to the request of the industry.

Newsy Briefs

Adolph Zukor, of New York, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, and E. E. Shauer were the representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation who were elected directors of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd., at the annual general meeting of the latter company held at Toronto, Ontario, November 9. Mr. Kent is a new director of the Canadian organization, having been chosen to replace W. C. Pitfield, of Montreal.

Answer to the suit brought by Charles H. Duell, Frank F. Newman, J. Boyce Smith and George W. Newgass for $60,000 against Thomas H. Ince, the motion picture producer, has been filed in the N. Y. Supreme Court by the latter.

In Ince's answer, he says he amply recompensed the complainants for certain services by paying them $5,000.

Arthur Leslie, the dean of motion picture press agents, is writing a series of articles for Movie Weekly, describing how he helped many screen stars on the road to fame.

Lloyd on Way Home

Pathe Comedian Ready for Another Year of Work After Vacation.

Declaring that "work hard and play hard" is about the best motto a man can live up to, Harold Lloyd waved a cheerful farewell to Broadway's bright lights on Sunday and started back to Los Angeles for another year of comedy-making at the Hal Roach Studies.

The finishing touch to Lloyd's "busy" two weeks' New York vacation was a dinner in his honor given by Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Pearson at the Ritz Carlton. Other invited guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Merrill, Edmund C. Lynch, Bernard Benson, Miss Charlotte Terhaune, Gaylord Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Innerarity, Mr. and Mrs. Harley M. Walker, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Eschmann, Peter Treleven, John Humm, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Reddy.

Mr. Lloyd said on leaving for the West that he had made up his mind to devote this trip exclusively to "play," and had stuck to it.

The comedian said he had seen pretty nearly everything and liked everything he saw—only he "liked some things better than others," but declined to particularize, as he was "no professor and might be wrong."

Loses Fight

In spite of an intensive campaign by the Buffalo exhibitors against Daylight Saving, citizens of Buffalo voted to retain the ordinance. Exhibitors fought the ordinance because they claimed that it hurt business in the summer, declaring that in many cases it cut into box office receipts for a 50 per cent. decrease. John L. Kelly, secretary to Mayor Frank X. Schwab, directed the campaign for the exhibitors. All the newspapers in Buffalo came out in favor of retaining daylight saving.

Gaining in Favor

J. G. Von Herberg Says American Films Are Popular Abroad

Back from Europe where he created a sensation by crashing into the front pages of American newspapers through his purchase of the 50,000 acre hunting ground of the late Francis Joseph, Austrian Emperor, at Ischl, in the Tyrol, John G. Von Herberg, millionaire First National franchise holder and motion picture theatre owner of Seattle, Wash., denied that he had bought this property for the purpose of producing abroad.

In company with Bruce Johnson, First National's foreign representative who is establishing offices for the organization and arranging for the distribution of its product abroad, Mr. Von Herberg visited London, Paris, other European capitals and the Tyrol. It was the natural beauty and grandeur of the hunting estate and its possibilities as a vacation ground that prompted Mr. Von Herberg to purchase this historic tract, he declares.

During his tour abroad Mr. Von Herberg declares he had adequate opportunity of watching the effect produced by American pictures on foreign audiences.

"For a long time," Mr. Von Herberg asserted, "the charge has been made that American films were made only for commercial possibilities. This feeling is undergoing a rapid change."

Wins Sunday Fight

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

Toledo, Nov. 22.

A jury in Mayor Harry R. Rodabauch Court at Findlay, Ohio, on November 21, acquitted C. E. Gilmore, picture theatre manager, of a charge of violating the state Sunday amusement law by keeping his theatre open on Sunday. The verdict was returned after three hours' deliberation. One woman, Mrs. M. C. Dye, was a member of the jury, acting as foreman.

Gilmore's attorneys based their argument largely upon a contention that the state law prohibiting theatrical performances on Sunday does not include motion picture shows. The charges were filed by the Rev. W. E. Hill and John N. Doty, attorney, acting in behalf of the local ministerial association.

Sunday motion picture theatres have been closed at Findlay since 1917. An effort to reopen them met with indictments and fines in Common Pleas Court for all local managers two years ago.

Burned Hand Spoiled Code's Plans for Clean-up in '96

It was back in 1896 that W. F. Code first became interested in motion pictures. There were at that time two projection machines on the Pacific coast, both owned by Miles Brothers of San Francisco. Having traveled rather extensively in Pacific waters, Code figured he had a good chance to clean up by taking one of these machines to Australia.

His partner, Monte Findlay, a circus man from New Zealand, with whom he had shared many thrilling adventures, shared his belief. So the Australian rights were secured for the Edison Universal machine. Plans were enthusiastically being completed when Findlay, who was to operate the machine, burned his hand while learning. The burn proved a severe one, taking weeks to heal. Findlay's enthusiasm petered out.

"There's nothing in it!" he declared. "I'm through."

So the stuff was off. Code drifted to Alaska in 1900. Mining took the place of motion pictures in his thoughts. But the seed had been sown. When news arrived in Nome that a traveling operator with a Universal machine and eight reels of film, was touring Alaska giving shows during 1907, Code felt his old interest revive. He bought the outfit, intending to go into the "movies" as a side line.

Tremendous interest was occasioned by the advent of moving pictures into Nome. Code rented Eagle Hall, which cost $300 a night and seated 1,500 people. He played to capacity at $1.50 a seat, giving never over four single reels. The eight reels could not last forever, however. He purchased service from Pathe at from $100 to $175 a single reel, the top prices being paid for colored pictures. Illustrated songs or an amateur performer completed the program.

But often, after taking over $1,200 in at the door, net profits were only $60 from one evening's show! The early days in the states are famous for their cheap prices and admissions. How many would have survived the overhead Code was staggering under? But the fascination of the game made it worth the price.

In 1908 Code sent to Portland for a new Edison Underwriters Machine which he purchased from Morton and Company. He still laughs over the arrival of that machine.

"Evidently Alaska seemed a long ways off. They knocked down that machine to the last screw, packing each separate part in vaseline. Then shipped it without any book of instructions for reassembling!"

Having no alternative, Code figured it out for himself. He also booked service from Morton & Co. for a time. During 1909 he built the Alaska Dream, with a seating capacity of 300. His overhead being greatly reduced, he was able to charge 25 cent admissions and realize a nice profit. For eight or nine years the Alaska Dream played to capacity, and it is still doing a nice business.

It was not long before the moving picture interests superseded Code's mining interests. He opened up houses along the Yukon River, steadily increasing his holdings. At the present time he owns houses in Nome, Dime Creek, Candle, (the terminus of the annual dog races, from Candle to Nome), Keewalik, St. Michaels and Marshall.

Fuel conditions in Nome, where coal is now $47.50 a ton and timber scarce, have made conditions in that locality poorer for motion pictures, which, however, must offer the newest and best in order to succeed; whereas, in the mining towns which are doing capacity business, the feature length picture is decidedly not popular. Many short reels, even of rather ancient vintage, go over big in the mining communities. This is true all over Alaska, the big centers demanding the best.

About a year and a half ago, Code purchased the Paramount Theatre in Seattle, a suburban house in the Phinney district. He made the investment to put in his winters in Seattle. The investment proved so profitable and the location so excellent, that today Code is increasing the seating capacity of his house to 700, to take care of his patronage. He gives four changes a week, and says he has not dared to use exploitation because he could not handle the crowds it would bring him. The extension is being built on the back of the house, which will not necessitate the loss of a single day's business. The present back wall will merely be knocked out when the addition is complete.

"Then," says Code, "I'll hand 'em some exploitation that will fill her up to the doors!"
